ain, followed by a series of diplomatic complications which seemed for a time to have no end but war and which perturbed the peace of Europe for months, will no longer be possible. The most important thing about the agreement is the very fact that an agreement of some sort has been reached and boundaries defined. Next to this in importance is the fact that France acknowledges the right of Great Britain to control the Nile from its source in the great lakes of Albert and Victoria Nyanza to the Mediterranean. France thereby abandons her idea of gaining a continuous strip of territory transversely across the continent from the Red Sea to the Gulf of Guinea. Major Marchand's Fashoda expedition was part of the movement for the realization of this plan. By the abandonment of it Great Britain is left free, so far as France is concerned, to work for continuous dominion from Cairo to Cape Town.

With the past few weeks there have occurred in Mississippi, Arkansas and Georgia a series of lynching outrages which, for brutal ferocity, utter absence of of justification or mitigating circumstances, rival anything to be found in the copious annals of lynch law. The incidents need not be rehearsed, but they have stirred the indignation of the civilized part of our country more deeply that anything that has occurred since the murder of the colored postmaster, Baker and his family, at Lake City, S. C., more than a year ago. We are happy to record that the trial of Baker's murderers is to be held this week at Charleston, S. C., before a United States circuit court. This is said to be the first case on record in which a federal court has taken up the trial of a case of lynching. The circumstances of this murder will be remembered as particularly atrocious. The post office (which served also as residence of the post master) was fired at night and Baker and his family shot down as they attempted to escape from the flames. The post master's offense was that he was unpopular in the community and refused to resign his office. Fifteen prominent citizens are to be tried, and there is a vast cloud of witnesses on both sides.

The bombardment of the Samoan Coast by an American warvessel seems at first glance to be an unwarrantable procedure. Later and fuller information may show that Admiral Kantz was fully justified in this action. Mataafa, the candidate for the Samoan kngship, against whom the Chief Justice and the British and American Consuls sided, has persistently maintained his rebellion and has organized a provisional government. Admiral Kantz, after consultation with other authorities, issued a proclamation calling upon him to dismiss his government and ordering his followers to return to their homes. The reply of the pretender was to intrench himself in a number of villages along the coast and make a hostile demonstration against the British and American consulates. It is stated that the German Consul, who has from the beginning of the trouble sided with the party of Mataafa, encouraged him to resist the summons of the American admiral. The violent manner of his resistance seemed to justify the attack upon his entrenchments as a mere police measure to protect the peace. Accordingly, the U. S. cruiser "Philadelphia" and the British cruiser "Porpoise" shelled Mataafa's villages along the coast. The threatening aspect of the affair appears at first sight to lie in the circumstance that England and America are arrayed against Germany. The assurance, however, comes direct from diplomatic officials of the highest rank that the three powers understand each other and that there is no danger of friction between them. Germany's suggestion for the appointment of a joint high commission to go to Samoa and investigate the whole affair will probably be accepted. The main point to be decided is the justice of Mataafa's claim to the kingship. That decided, the complications which have arisen since the Chief Justice opposed him will settle themselves.

It will be remembered that a plebiscite was held in Canada last year on the question of the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of liquor. The vote was not upon any particular law, but was merely an expression of popular opinion as a guide to the government in future legislation. The prohibition was put squarely, unmixed with any other issues. Out of a total registration of 1,233,349 there was a majority of 13,916 in favor of prohibition. Only about two-fifths of the votes went to the polls at all, so the vote in favor of prohibition represents only a little more than one-fifth of the registered voters. It has been anounced by the Premier, Sir Wilfred Laurier, that in consideration of the light vote and the small majority, the government will not undertake to enact any prohibition legislation. In general, the country districts favor and the towns and cities (especially Quebec) oppose prohibition, and it is felt that the rural sentiment would not help much in enforcing of a prohibition law in the cities where there is always most difficulty of enforcement. It is something of a triumph, however, to have gotten a majority vote, even though a small one, in favor of prohibition. Doubtless the majority would be larger in favor of some restrictive mesure, such as those in force in some of our states.

The Samoan Islands, which have recently attracted the attention of the world, are located about 2,000 miles south and 300 miles west of the Hawaiian Islands and 14 degrees south of the equator. They lie in an almost direct line between San Francisco and Australia and slightly south of the direct steamship line connecting the Philippines with the proposed Panama or Nicaraguan interoceanic canals. Their special importance, therefore, lies more in their position as coaling and repair stations on these great highways of commerce rather than in their direct commercial value, their population being small and their imports and exports of little importance. Especial interest attaches to these islands from the standpoint of the United States by reason of the fact that the Harbor of Pago Pago, in the island of Tutuila, the southernmost of the group, was ceded to the United States for a naval and coaling station, first in 1872, and afterwards confirmed by a treaty signed at Washington, January 17, 1878, and ratifications exchanged on February 13 of the same year.

THE ETHICS OF WEALTH.

No greater change has come over the spirit of our modern civilization, than the new interest which has been manifested in sermon and literature, during the last quarter of a century, and particularly during the last decade, concerning the ethics of property, both in its accumulation and use. Books, magazines and newspaper articles, sermons and lectures abound in which this subject is treated from a biblical point of view. The impulse lying behind this new movement is a growing consciousness of our social obligations, and a clearer understanding of the perils of wealth wrongly gained or selfishly used.

Nothing could be more timely or needful at the present time than this new interest in social problems, and this fresh agitation of the ethics of wealth. Never was wealth being accumulated with greater rapidity, and never was the contrast between the rich and the poor more sharply drawn in this country than at the present. When we remember the inspired warnings against the piling up of immense fortunes by a few at the expense of the many, and note how kingdoms and empires have gone down under the power of avarice, we can appreciate the value of this agitation to our individual and social salvation, and hope from it the most beneficent results.

One of the most recent and helpful contributions on this subject is "The Profit of the Many, or The Biblical Doctrine and Ethics of Wealth."* The author in the beginning defines wealth as "consisting of all objects ministering to human wants, which are produced by human labor." "In other words," he says, "wealth is the sum of the adaptations to the ends of intelligence which man makes in his physical environment." In this, the true economic sense of wealth, "the word is to be carefully distinguished from riches, which signifies private property greater than the average." This distinction is important in the author's discussion, which is not directed to the rich exclusively, but to all who have any property, or who control any of the means which minister to human wants. It is known to every one who observes that neither covetousness nor the misuse of property is confined to the rich.

Wealth is not necessarily sordid, but the disposition that regards it as means to a higher end, is sordid, and this disposition is unfortunately confined to no class. It is an all-pervading misconception of life's real meaning and purpose which has wrought havoc among nations and individuals in the past, and is to-day eating like a canker at the heart of modern society. Nor is the church of Jesus Christ exempt from its baneful influence. Covetousness is as prevalent in the church to-day, as it was in ancient Israel when the prophets of God uttered their burning words against it. There is wealth enough in the possession of church members to fill all the channels of religious activity, endow all the colleges that are doing Christian work, and support all the orphan homes and asylums needed to care for the fatherless, the widow and the friendless. But because the idea of Christian stewardship is as yet only a vague theory among Christians, rather than a vital reality, all these great interests of the kingdom languish for adequate support.

*By Edward Tallmadge Root. Fleming H. Revell & Co., Chicago and New York. 1899.

The book to which we have referred sets forth in very clear light, the provisions in the Mosaic law for preventing too unequal a distribution of wealth, and for protecting the poor and the weak against the encroachments of the rich and the strong. But having done this the author adds:

The laws contained in the Pentateuch, whenever and however compiled, were designed for an ancient and Oriental people and adapted to their peculiar civilization. They are neither a model for the modern legislator, nor moral law binding on the individual Christian. Their value lies in the suggestiveness of the principles they embody. . . . These laws are economically defective in recognizing but one industry, agriculture. Such a code must either be outgrown or fetter progress, to which varient industry is necessary. If the premises of Chapter I are correct, to check progress is a moral and religious as well as an economical mistake. It is no accident, then, that Mosaism has been superseded by that mighty faith which has inspired our progressive Western civilization. . . . It [the law] certainly makes us realize with new vividness how opposed is human nature to a true religious and moral use of wealth, and how inadequate the best social system will prove without a change of human nature itself . . . The law was the standard by which prophet and psalmist weighed and found wanting the social life of Israel. But when men are changed by Christ, they need the law no longer only in the sense that its spirit now controls them That spirit is to guide both Christian individual and Christian state. The individual will recognize that wealth is God-given and therefore to be held subject to his claims, and made an instrument and element of personal and national holiness by such unselfish use that none may have excess and none lack."

It is refreshing to find a socialistic reformer who believes thoroughly in the necessity of the regenerative influences of Christianity in order to the realization of right social conditions. Nothing short of the transforming power of the gospel is adequate to redeem men from the control of selfishness and greed. As our author remarks, captivity cured the Jews of idolatry, but it was not sufficient to save them from the power of avarice and covetousness. Only the gospel can do that, and hence the gospel is the hope of society as well as of the individual.

MOTIVES FOR CHRISTIAN MISSIONARY EFFORT.

The economical ineerests of society are bound up with the reign of moral law. Let the moral convictions of society be disintegrated and the sanctions of morals lose their force and the right of the poor man to the rewards of his labor and the rich man to his wealth would vanish into air. The first manifestation of the decay of moral forces is in attacks made upon the right of property, then follows a repudiation of the obligations of marriage, and then rejection of the personal rights of others, and finally in the trampling upon the sacredness of human life. Christian doctrine, recognizing moral distinctions between sin and holiness, finds a response in Christian consciousness and, carried into social life, becomes the pillar and support of social obligation. The law of self-preservation demands that we maintain Christian consciousness in this land, that it may give security and value to all our other possessions. The best defense our religion can give is to be about the Father's business. No better answer can be made to skepticism than to win society to Christ; nothing so quickly drowns the sigh of despondency as the cry of souls redeemed for heaven. No skepticism can prevail against Christian living; "I, if I be lifted up will draw all men unto me," is as true and as real as that attraction which swells the tides of its orbit, and if we wish to answer infidelity we can do it in no better way than by aggressive mission work in advancing the kingdom.

This kingdom is the salt of the earth and the light of the world. It lies beneath and gives permanence to all material progress. Infidels and godless men contribute to the building of churches and the sending out of preachers, because they realize the economic value of a church and the teaching of the ministry to the moral order and material welfare of the community. It is well known that churches and schools in a town enhance the value and secure the tenure of property, and furnish the chief attraction for the increase of population. A churchless town, without a minister to conserve the moral and temporal interests of the place by his personal influence and faithful teaching, is a community where property depreciates, law and education are neglected and the orgies of wicked men drive and keep the best people away. The material prosperity of this country can not continue and increase without the gospel as the stay of moral order and the security of peaceful industry.

The financial value of a faithful minister of the Word to individuals and communities has only to be appreciated to fill our missionary treasury with money, leaving the higher motives of gospel preaching altogether out of the question. An illustrative instance came to the writer a few months ago. The only son and heir of a wealthy man was debauching himself and wasting his father's substance in riotous living. The end of this course was physical and moral ruin and impoverishment for himself. The father in great distress went to his pastor and besought him to intercede and try to save his son. The minister sought the young man out, and by his earnest appeals and prayers brought him to Christ. This saved the man and all the property his father had accumulated. Years after, when the returned prodigal had inherited his father's estate and more than doubled it, and was a man of high standing in the church and community, word came to him that the preacher who had saved him was old and poor. He said to his wife, "I owe my body and soul and every dollar I possess to that man of God, and now what shall I do for him? I would be the basest ingrate this side of perdition if I did not gladly share what I have with a man who did so much for me. He shall find a home in this mansion as long as he lives and I have a dollar in the world." There is a point here for both Ministerial Relief and Home Missions. Every man supported by a church or sent out by a missionary society is doing this kind of work on the moral and economic side of civilization, to say nothing of saving men's souls for eternity. The material and temporal as well as the spiritual side of American life and prosperity is wrapped up in this gospel message we are seeking to send to the people.

We owe this gospel to others; we are the inheritors of the great trust delivered to the apostles after the resurrection from the dead. The Lord has committed this treasure to earthen vessels; we hold the gospel in trust for all the people, and the more we give away the gospel the more of it we have for ourselves. In this Jubilee Year we should plan large things for the American Christian Missionary Society and give her great opportunities of doing God's will and work.

Hour of Prayer.

SEED TIME.

(Eccl. 11:6; Matt. 13:3-9.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The seeds of truth and goodness should be sown at all times and in all places, leaving the results with God.

So universally familiar are the phenomena of seed-sowing and harvest, that they furnish a favorite figure of speech in the Bible, in showing the connection between our actions and our own character and destiny, and the influence of our lives upon other lives. Let the following passages be read, as showing the use of this figure of speech: Psa. 126:5, 6; Gal. 6:7-9; 2 Cor. 9:6-10; Matt. 13:31, 32.

The passage cited from Ecclesiastes at the head of this lesson teaches that we are not always to be waiting for what we call favorable opportunities for sowing good seed; but we are to sow in the morning, and in the evening we are not to withhold our hand. We cannot tell which will prove the more prosperous. Often the best results come from labor on unpromising fields or under unfavorable conditions. One of the best meetings the writer ever held seemed to be a failure at the time. Sometimes the Word of truth, lovingly spoken, in an out-of-the-way place, in a country meeting house, or in the grove, finds a lodgement in the heart of some poor boy who becomes a preacher and wins thousands to Christ; or who becomes wealthy and devotes his fortune to the advancement of the kingdom of God. We cannot tell, therefore we must be "instant in season and out of season."

The parable of the sower teaches that the seed is the Word of God; that the soil is the hearts of those who hear, and that a great deal of the good seed sown will fail to bring forth fruit to perfection, because of the condition of the human heart and opposing influences. Nevertheless, we are bound to broadcast our seed and let it take its chances of falling on good ground. The parable also shows that there were then, and no doubt there are now, four classes of hearers: (1) Wayside; (2) rocky place; (3) thorny ground, and (4) the good-ground hearers—the hard-hearted, the superficial, the worldly-minded and the honest-hearted. To which of these classes do we belong? How would the Son of God classify us? "Let every man take heed how he hears." It is a very solemn thing to hear a great message from God. Our character and our destiny will be determined by the way we hear and heed such a message.

The lesson, then, teaches the duty of faithful sowing or teaching the Word of God, and of honest and earnest hearing or receiving that Word. The local church is an organization for the purpose of teaching this Word to its own members and training them to observe it, and publishing the gospel to the world. In proportion as any church is doing this twofold work, it is fulfilling the mission for which it exists. But each individual must remember the divine law that "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." The responsibility attaching to our individual acts is something that should make every one consider well his course of life.

PRAYER.

O, Thou who art the Lord of the harvest and the great Sower of the words of eternal life, we thank Thee that Thou hast spoken the wonderful words of life and that it has been our blessed privilege to hear and receive these words. May our hearts ever be open to receive whatever good seed Thou wouldst sow in them and may we be faithful in scattering the seed that has made our own lives fruitful, both in season and out of season, to the end that in the time of the great harvest home we may come with rejoicing, bringing our sheaves with us. For Thy name's sake. Amen!

THINGS IN CHICAGO.

The editor has just returned from a few days' visit to Chicago, including last Lord's day. It was our privilege Sunday morning and evening to attend services at the new South Side Church, meeting at 30th St. and Indiana Ave. Bro. J. J. Haley, of Cynthiana, Ky., preached for them morning and evening. As it was Easter Sunday most of the people went to the larger churches to hear the music and see the floral decorations. There was not a large audience, though the building is quite large and the audience would have been respectable in a smaller place. Bro. Haley, of course, gave two excellent sermons. This congregation is an offshoot in the main from the Central Church, of which Prof. Black is pastor. There is, no doubt, a field in that part of the city for a church, and some very excellent material is already connected with this nucleus. They are greatly in need of the wise and energetic leadership of a good pastor in order to develop the possibilities of the situation. Bro. F. G. Tyrrell, of this city, is to preach for the congregation next Lord's day.

On Sunday afternoon at four o'clock we had the privilege, in connection with Bro. Haley, and under the guidance of Bro. Van Kirk, to hear the Convocation Address at the University by Dr. Henry Van Dyke, of New York City. It was only through the courtesy of Bro. Van Kirk that we found admission to the crowded auditorium where the meeting was held. After impressive introductory exercises, led by President Harper, Dr. Van Dyke was introduced to preach the Convocation Sermon. The Doctor is a small man in physical stature and looks much younger than he is. His sermon was a masterly one, and held the attention of the vast audience from start to finish. His text was from John 10:9: "I am the door; by Me if any man enter in he shall be saved, and shall go in and go out, and shall find pasture." After an introduction, in which the speaker stated that Christ seized upon every beautiful thing in the world to illustrate the nature of his mission and work, he went on to speak of the significance of the figure of a door. The door is a means of ingress and of egress. It is that by which we enter into all the joys and security and pleasures of the home, and by which we pass out into the larger activities of the world. The door of a fortress is that by which soldiers enter into a place of security, and by which they pass out to conflict and victory. The door of the temple of worship is that by which we pass into a place of restfulness and worship, and by which we pass out into the service of man. The two great words of Christ, he said, quoting from Phillips Brooks, were "Come" and "Go." "Come unto Me and find rest and peace and security; go out into the world to work for its redemption. Come unto Me for the worship of God; go out through Me for the service of man."

The speaker then proceeded to show how through Christ our thoughts were set free, our affections were enlarged, and our activities widened and ennobled. He said he had no confidence in the religion of a man who refused to take hold of one end of a litter bearing a wounded man because a Roman Catholic had hold of the other end; he had no use for the religion of a professed Christian who refused to co-operate with a Hebrew in any good work; and he had no use for that kind of Presbyterianism which had no fellowship with the religious life and activities of other Christians of other names. No synopsis, however, made from memory, could do justice to this splendid sermon. Later we may give our readers some extracts from it when it appears in the University Record.

On Monday the preachers of the city and vicinity met in one of the parlors of the Palmer House, as usual, for their Monday meeting. An address was given by J. S. Hughes on some ideas concerning church identity which he has recently read. It was a characteristic address, which hit right and left and created a lively discussion, in which many participated. At noon a table was spread in the parlor where the meeting was held, and the preachers present, about twenty in number, partook of a bounteous repast while the discussion continued. It was a very enjoyable occasion, and it is gratifying to add that none of the foundations were removed out of their place. These Chicago ministers are an earnest, aggressive body of men, and our cause never had so bright a future in Chicago, we think, as at present.

Editor's Easy Chair.

One of the notable features in the vicinity of Eureka Springs is the Bennett Cave, four miles north of the place. The road leading to it passes over a picturesque country, crossing frequently the beautiful, crystal Leatherwood, winding over rocky ridges, through cedar and pine, and reaching its climax of grandeur at the Cave. A house has been built over its entrance and you enter the Cave through the basement of the building. Mr. Bennett, who occupies the house, is the guide to the Cave. The Cave has a wide mouth, flaring out toward the valley, and can be traversed with ease and comfort a distance of 400 yards. Its ceiling ranges from eight to twelve feet in height, we should think, and is composed of onyx stone, which forms beautiful stalactites and stalagmites, which often meet and form a mighty pillar from ceiling to floor. By the light of two lamps which we carried we could discern an occasional bear-bed which the guide pointed out which made one feel a little squeamish, although no bear had probably sheltered in this Cave for many years. At the extreme end of the Cave the stalactites and stalagmites are very thick, making a perfect forest of onyx spikes growing downward and upward. This Cave was discovered by a Mr. Allen over twenty years ago while he was squirrel hunting, and he has slept in the Cave ever since, on a cot near the mouth. The temperature is about 64 the year round in the Cave. It would be a very safe bedroom during a cyclone, but a very gruesome one for most people. Mr. Allen has got used to it, however. He looks like one of the original cave-dwellers, and one of our party was fortunate enough to get a picture of him.

A trip to Pivot Rock and Natural Bridge is one of the most enjoyable about Eureka Springs. The road there leads over one of the loftiest ranges of hills, and gives a magnificent view of the Ozark range of mountains, some of which in the far distance are clothed in a purple haze. The forenoon in which we made the trip was clear and bright. The atmosphere was perfectly transparent and seemed laden with the breath of the pines. It was a most exhilarating ride, aside from the natural curiosities which we went to see. Pivot Rock is a huge block of limestone, perhaps 20 or 25 feet in height, and from 10 to 12 feet in breadth, standing on a narrow pedestal which is gradually wearing away year by year. The Natural Bridge near by is where a huge limestone formation bridges a chasm 10 or 12 feet in depth and of some greater breadth. These natural curiosities were photographed from different angles by the amateur artists of our party. The return trip by a different route, through the wooded valley of the west branch of the Leatherwood, was no less interesting in its way than the road down the crest of the mountain. It was a little early in the season to get the best effects from the growing young leaves and dogwood blossoms, but there we reanticipations of spring in the bird-notes, in the few early flowers that were venturing out, and in some of the earlier budding trees. Returning from such a journey one is ready to comply with apostolic injunction—to eat what is set before him, asking no questions for conscience sake.

There is no boom in Eureka Springs, but in some of the new and susbtantial business houses that have gone up, in the splendid brick high school building, in some handsome residences, there is evidence of a steady growth and an increasing popularity of the place as a health resort. Our congregation there is at present without a regular minister, Bro. Trundle's time having expired a few weeks ago. We assisted the brethren in their worship on the two Lord's days we were present and in their Wednesday evening prayer-meetings to the best of our ability without interfering too seriously with our rest. Bro. Trundle still resides there, but is talking of locating at another place in Arkansas soon. He and his good wife are highly esteemed by the church and community. Eureka Springs is just now in the throes of an election canvass, and our

Bro. George C. Christian, with whom and his good wife our home was during our stay there, is the leading candidate for Mayor, and will probably be elected before this reaches our readers. If so, the town is to be congratulated on having a good Mayor. We regret that Sister Christian's health is very delicate, the result, perhaps, of overwork in the service of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. Our readers, we are sure, will join with us in the wish and prayer that her health may be fully restored and her years of usefulness prolonged among us.

These lines are written in St. Louis where we are once more in our own easy chair, feeling much the better for our brief sojourn at the Springs. In truth, we have never visited the place without coming from it feeling improved in health and reinvigorated by our sojourn there. The place has proved a boon to thousands in the past, and is destined to prove an equal boon to tens of thousands in the future who may drink of its pure sparkling waters, breathe its invigorating atmosphere and climb its picturesque hills and mountains. We are grateful for the many kindnesses shown by members of the church, especially by our host and hostness Brother and Sister Christian, and to Mr. West, the General Manager of the Eureka Springs Railway for his kindly attention and courtesy.

Current Religious Thought

The Central Christian Advocate makes the report of Rev. Parkes Cadman's radical views the Bible as expressed recently in an address before the Methodist ministers of New York, the occasion for pointing out a tendency in the Methodist Church toward more liberal views on some positions heretofore held as orthodox views by that body. It says:

But while the extreme views attributed to Mr. Cadman are denied, and his reverent and positive affirmations of faith were ommitted in the report altogether, it is admitted that he did express views not in harmony with some traditional teachings concerning the authorship and inspired character of certain portions of the Bible. And it is admitted that some three or four other papers which have been recently read from the same platform agreed essentially with the positions taken by Mr. Cadman. -And it is not denied that the large majority o the preachers who listened to these papers, while they may have dissented from some particulars, in general heartily sympathized with the sentiments expressed. The New York Preachers' Meeting is unquestionably the most representative body of Methodist ministers in this country, and its expressions of opinion and the drift of its sentiments are of great significance as indicating the direction of present day thought in the church. And when we put in connection with the opinions which have been recently expressed before this meeting the fact that similar teachings on the points at issue have for some years been given in some of our theological schools and set forth in the writings of some of the professors in these schools, it is apparent that there is a tendency to modify some of the opinions hitherto held in the presence of the accredited and established facts of the scholarship of the present day. Whether we approve or condemn this tendency, we can scarcely fail to recognize it as a fact.

In a paper read before the Victoria Institute, London, England, in March, Prof. Beal, F. R. S., president of the Royal Microscopical Society, on Biology, he concludes with the following declaration of faith in the existence of "vital power" distinct from all other forces:

Having long thought over the evidence I have been able to obtain as regards the Nature of Life during the past forty years—from the study of the actual Living Matter, the Bioplasm, its characters, arrangement, and its relation to tissue as existing during its life, and shortly after death, in the case of organisms of very different orders, in various condition of vital activity, in health and disease, with the aid of very high magnifying powers (up to 5,000 linear)—I now feel it my duty to publicly advocate the doctrine of the constant operation in all life, throughout the whole living world, of Vital Power—power as distinct from all forces, potencies, and properties belonging to or derived from any kind, or resulting from any physical or chemical state, of Cosmic matter.

I have failed to discover any facts which would tend to cause a thoughtful student of Living Nature to hesitate as to the existence of Vitality, and so far I have been unable to discover or frame any hypothesis which could be advanced as a reasonable explanation of the facts of any kind of living matter without admitting the influence of Infinite Power, Prevision and Wisdom. All my efforts to obtain evidence which in reason could be regarded as adequate to account in some other way for the facts, have entirely failed. Looking from a purely scientific point of view only, it seems to me that the cause of all vital phenomena from the very beginning of life, in the present state of our knowledge can only be referred to the direct influence of an Almighty Power, and I feel confident that each succeeding advance in natural knowledge will be found to be, in the words of the Victoria Institute motto, Ad Majorem Dei Gloriam.

In a sermon in behalf of church consolidation, preached in the crypt of the Cathedral of St. John, New York City, Jan. 22, by W. R. Huntington, D. D., Rector Grace Church, he presented the following as the greatest hindrance to the unity of the professed churches of Christ in the United States. In this statement as relates to Protestant and Catholic Churches, the Rector is not far from the truth:

The really formidable gulf is that which sunders those who, by natural bent or bias, caused by education, incline to interpret religion from the view-point of the individual and in a mainly subjective, interior way from those who interpret religion from the view-point rather of the collectivist and incline to lay enormous emphasis upon the sacramental side of it. This is a difficulty which is serious, indeed, since it is rooted, not in the happenings of this or that century of the church's life, but in the nature of the human mind itself; it is none other than the ancient contrast of Catholic and Puritan—a contrast as old as Christianity.

In the same sermon Rector Huntington gave the following striking illustration of the need for unity in the religious world:

Everybody has been praising lately Gen. Kitchener's reconquest of the Soudan. And which was the particular feature of the campaign that called forth from competent critics the warmest commendation? It was the marvelous preparedness which characterized the whole process from first to last. So carefully were the different branches of the service coordinated, so thoroughly did each arm serve and support every other arm, that the invasion went forward with all the irresistible steadiness of a tidal wave.

Christendom is to-day moving upon heathendom with a zeal never before surpassed. But what of the methods and the strategy? Would you get the true answer to that question? Go not in search of it to the publications of the various missionary boards; go not to the missionary boards themselves; go not to the several legislative bodies, General Conventions, General Assemblies and General Conferences which stand back of the boards, but go to the actual forces in the field; go to the men and women at the front; they will tell you what the trouble is. They will tell you, and tell you with much warmth, that one of the chief hindrances to missionary progress is denominational rivalry; not rivalry there, but rivalry here; not a spirit of competition and eagerness for the pre-eminence among the missionaries themselves, but a spirit of competition and eagerness for the pre-eminence among secretaries, boards, conventions and committees in these United States. Once let American Christianity begin marching upon the heathen stronghold with that unity of method which the Sirdar showed in marching on Khartoum, and we shall see results worth scoring.

In an address on "The Ministry of To-day," by Rev. Chas. Cuthbert Hall, D. D., president of Union Theological Seminary, at the University of Chicago, recently, when speaking of the personal fitness of the minister, said:

With the deepest respect for those to whom the sacerdotal theory of the ministry is of vital importance, and who in furtherance of that theory would envelop the plain traits of the man in the mystical authority of the priest, I must express my conviction that the public eye is on the man more than it is on the priest, and that the public mind is more influenced by true manhood in the ministry than by the mystic claim of clerical authority. I am well aware that, as I speak, a movement toward sacerdotalism is proceeding in England with extraordinary intensity, and that that movement has many sympathizers on this side of the sea. Its sincerity and its devotion I do not question, whatever may be the measure of my dissent from its conclusions. Still less do I question that it shall not endure—that it shall be checked and restrained by a reaction of public opinion. For the growth of popular education and the independence of judgment that companions with intelligence, to say nothing of the prevalent secular distrust of religious institutions, may be relied upon to counteract sacerdotalism and to emphasize the demand that whosoever shall be a minister of religion shall first of all be a manly man. The church is sometimes accused of being overfastidious in choosing her ministers. But the church is simply true to her best institutions in demanding high grades of personal fitness in those who shall presume to lead a generation accustomed to submit itself voluntarily to lofty standards of strength, and gentleness and personal completeness.

The Religious World.

Of the Czar's treatment of the Finns, a people who number about 30,000, the Interior for March 30th says:

The present peace-loving Czar has played precisely the same game upon them that Kipling attributes to the Bear. Approaching them with clasped paws, as if in prayer, by one rake of his claws the face of Finland is gone. Finnish is discontinued as the language of the schools and of the Diet, and Russo substituted. The legislative power of the Diet is taken away in all but form. The representatives can initiate no legislation, its power being limited to approval of the decrees of the government. Its military can no longer be under the command of native officers. Its soldiers are merged into the general army. Every privilege is gone, and the Finns, a Protestant people, largely Teutonic, must live under an absolute despotism. This ends also their religious liberty. The nation is in mourning. A deputation of 200 went to St. Petersburg to plead their cause before the Czar, but were not admitted to a hearing. They are now looking toward the British Northwest, where the climatic conditions are much more favorable than in Finland. They are in all respects the people most desirable as colonists for the colder regions of British America—perfectly adapted to the climate, orderly, thrifty and physically hardy and strong. It would pay the British-Americans to bring them over—no large task to transport the 30,000. In a few years they would pay back the cost, and then become permanent contributors to the public treasury.

Once a disciple gave a cup of cold water to one of God's little ones, and won thereby imperishable renown. Once a woman broke an alabaster box for her Master, and lo! her deed has been like a broken vase, whose perfume has exhaled for two thousand years, and shall go on diffusing sweetness to the end of time. Last of all, after the rich men of Alexandria had cast their rattling gold into the brazen treasury, a poor widow cast a speck of dust, called two mites, and lo! this humble deed gave her enduring recollection. —*N. Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

SECOND DECADE.

OUR FIRST MISSIONARY AND HIS WORK.

B. B. TYLER.

The American Christian Missionary Society was organized October 26, 1849. At a meeting of the board November 12, of the same year, a letter was read from Dr. Barclay in which he expressed his willingness to go to Jerusalem, or such other field as the board may direct. With this communication he enclosed a certificate from the church in Scottsville, Va., the place of his residence at the time, in reference to his Christian character and qualifications for the work. This was characteristic of the man. Dr. W. H. Hopson said of Dr. Barclay that he was "criminally modest." His modesty would not permit him to assume that the members of the board knew his Christian character and eminent qualifications for the work to which he proposed to devote his life. After the reading of the letter and certificate it was resolved by the board "that we most cordially entertain the proposition of our beloved brother, and that the corresponding secretary be requested to inform him immediately of this expression of the board." At a meeting eight days later, James Challen, from the "Committee on Fields of Labor," reported in favor of "one mission on the foreign field, and to us, at present, Jerusalem would be the most desirable point." This action was, however, but a formal recognition and endorsement of what had been determined. The reasons for the selection of the people of Israel and the Holy City have been, in epitome, placed before the reader. At a meeting of the board held January 15, 1850, another letter from Dr. Barclay was read which, according to the minutes, was "favorable to the Jerusalem mission and expressive of a desire to engage in the benevolent and self-denying enterprise." The corresponding secretary was "instructed to write to Brother Barclay to ascertain what would be the expense of outfit and salary; and whether he could go by the first of next September, provided funds could be obtained." It was on the eleventh day of June, 1850, that James T. Barclay, M. D., was employed as an agent of the American Christian Missionary Society to engage in teaching, preaching and the practice of medicine among the Jews in Jerusalem. Our first foreign missionary was a medical missionary.

The following from a letter addressed to "the Board of the American Christian Missionary Society," under date of Oct. 30, 1849, four days after the organization of the Association, reveals so much of the man in whom we are now especially interested that it is inserted at this point:

"I have been a member of the Church of Christ about ten years, and during the greater part of that time an elder; but have only been engaged in the public proclamation of the Word during the past year. To be able to 'endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ' is deemed an indispensable requisite on the part of him who would lead the self-denying life of a missionary of the cross, and I bless my Creator and Preserver that, though I am not in the forty-third year of my age, my health is uniformly and unusually good; being blessed with an excellent constitution and great powers of endurance. I have some acquaintance with the Latin, Greek and French languages, and such an aptitude for the acquisition of foreign tongues that no insuperable obstacle exists on this score. I am a regular graduate of the medical profession; and although I have not been engaged in practice for some years, yet but little application would suffice to qualify me as a practitioner again. My acquaintance with the arts and sciences is quite extensive, and with some of them intimate—both theoretically and practically—possessing great artistic and mechanical tact. I mention this because such attainments on the part of the missionary are esteemed very desirable, inasmuch as they tend to procure a favorable access to the heathen.

"My wife, whose mind has long been exercised on this subject, cordially dedicates herself to the cause of missions, so far as her influence can be appropriately exerted.

"The children whom God hath graciously given us, consisting of two sons—the one aged eighteen, the other fifteen, and a daughter only thirteen years of age—desire also to go unto the heathen with us, and thus be fellowhelpers to the truth in their respective spheres. Having long since made our God their God, and our people their people, it is natural that they should desire to go where we go, lodge where we lodge and die where we die; but so far as can be ascertained, they seem to be actuated in making such a choice by higher motives than those that spring from mere filial affection. Their education having been early commenced, is now nearly completed on a somewhat liberal scale; and I am happy in the assurance that they possess more than an ordinary share of piety and zeal, and are perfectly willing to do whatever they can, either now or hereafter, in behalf of the perishing heathen.

"Such a statement I deem due alike to you, to the cause and to ourselves."

Much enthusiasm was excited among the brethren by the thought of beginning the work of missions in the city in which the gospel of the Son of God, in its fullness, was first preached. This finds echo in President Campbell's annual address in 1853. The mission has been inaugurated. The news from Dr. Barclay is full of encouragement. Some in the Holy City, under his instruction, have turned to the Lord. Others seriously contemplate this step. Under these circumstances the convention assembled in Cincinnati. Mr. Campbell said:

"We have but one Foreign Mission station—a station, indeed, of all others the most appropriate to our profession — the ancient city of the great King, the City of David, on whose loftiest summit Zion, the ark of God, rested—the 'holy hill,' once the royal residence of Melchisedec, priest of the Most High God—the sacred Solyma, the abode of peace. There stood the tabernacle, when its peregrinations ended. There stood the temple, the golden palace which Solomon built. It rested upon an hallowed foundation, Mount Moriah, a little hill of Zion. To that place the tribes of God went up to worship. There was the Ark of the Covenant, with its table engraven by the hand of God. The Shekinah was there; Calvary was there, and there our Lord was crucified, buried and rose again. There clusters every hallowed association that binds the heart of man to man. There Christ died, and there he revived. There the Holy Spirit, as the messenger of Christ, first appeared. There the gospel was first preached. There the first Christian baptism was administered. There the first Christian temple was reared, and thence the gospel was borne through Judea, Samaria, and to all the nations that ever heard it. Jerusalem, the City of the Great King, in the centre of all divine radiations—the centre of all spiritual attractions and, in its ruins, it is an eternal monument of the justice, faithfulness and truth of God."

"One of the capital points of this Reformation is the location, in time and place, of the commencement of the reign of grace, or the kingdom of heaven. The Christian era and the commencement of Christ's Church have long been confounded by every sect in Christendom. The materials of Solomon's Temple and of Christ's church were mainly provided one generation before either of these was erected. The grand materials of Christianity, or the kingdom of Jesus Christ, are his life, death, burial, resurrection, ascension and glorification in heaven. This last event occurred more than thirty-three years after his nativity. So that the Christian era and the commencement of Christ's reign or kingdom are one generation—thirty-four years—apart. The Holy Spirit, who is the life, the bliss and the glory of Christianity, was not given till Jesus Christ was glorified. Hence, John the Harbinger and Jesus the Messiah both lived and died under the Jewish theocracy. A fact that has much moral and evangelical bearing on the Christian profession, as exhibited by both Baptists and Pedobaptists. This alone should give direction to all our efforts in all missions, domestic or foreign. It is the only legitimate standpoint at which to place our Jacobstaff when we commence a survey of the kingdom of heaven, or propose to build a tent for the God of Jacob—the Holy One of Israel, our King. Had we no other object than to give publicity and emphasis to this capital point, it is worthy the cause we plead, whatever the success may be, to erect and establish our first Foreign Mission in the identical city where our Lord was crucified; where the Holy Spirit first descended as the Missionary of the Father and the Son; where the Christian gospel was first preached and the first Christian church erected. As a simple monument of our regard and reverence for this soulemancipating position, it is worthy of all that it has cost us, and more than it will ever cost us, to have made our first Foreign Mission station near the cross, the mount of ascension of the Savior, and the theatre of the descension of the Holy Spirit as the sacred guest of the house which Jesus built."

These words were spoken when news of an encouraging character was, by every mail, coming to the board of managers from the Jerusalem Mission.

EDUCATION BY THE GOVERNMENT.

J. B. JONES.

That patriotic pride which fills the heart of every upright citizen will not rest content till the institutions of his own land are equal to the best that can be found in the world. Education as sustained by national, state or municipal aid involves the same high motives. Discontent rises out of the imperfect present and forms the ideal that must become the real, and nerve the patriotic soul to strive for the best educational institutions available.

Europe annually draws from our land thousands of young men who are not satisfied with the institutions in America. There is an honorable rivalry between the several states in furnishing the best educational advantages for the young men who aspire to render efficient service to their age. Michigan spends on her University $1,000,000 per annum. Missouri expends on hers about $200,000. Money cannot purchase capacity for students, but it does command the best intellect for teaching and furnish the best equipment for scientific research. No man comprehending the demands of the age can be content with the present educational equipment of this commonwealth.

But certain questions arise just now as to the relation which the state sustains to education. On what forms of education has the commonwealth the right to expend the public money? It may be impossible for the writer to defend the educational function of the government, but if he can quicken some more acute mind to supplement his work, he will not have written in vain. When Germany is conquering a footing in South America by her industrial system of education, and thus enlarging her sphere of usefulness, and whole empires are being revolutionized by rooting education deeply in the child-mind, our own state and nation should be slow to adopt a niggardly policy, or reduce its expenses where they should be increased. It is evident, however, that the function of civil government in granting educational advantages is limited by the purpose for which all government exists, by the income at its command, and by the effect that the peculiar education given may have upon its people.

The primary function of government is to protect the people in their right to life, liberty and property. Protection comes either from fear or love. Ordinarily fear is the chief motive to which government appeals. Penalty and law lie at the base of all government. But persuasion supplants fear by introducing the higher force, love. Hence, beginning with the kindergarten, the state may after awhile reduce the number of criminals, and this kind of protection, by preventing crime, is cheaper than that which armies and navies afford.

Whatever may be the kind of education furnished by the government as a gratuity, it must be granted by all that free education cannot be bestowed upon one class and withheld from another, unless the class thus educated does in turn furnish special or gratuitous service for the state or nation. Democracy utterly forbids that one profession should be educated by the state at the expense of another.

There is not a vocation which cannot set up a plea under some pretext for special appropriation. Physicians, dentists, lawyers, chemists, geologists, mineralogists, botanists, meteorologists, all can come in for special reasons that the groundwork of their respective vocations upholds and preserves the great commonwealth. Let us suppose that one of these is furnished what is denied to any one of the others; then, that far legislation and appropriation have wrought ruin to our principle—equal advantages to all and special privileges to none. All gratuitous education should be available to every citizen who has the capacity for development. Certainly all cannot be physicians, nor all lawyers, nor all dentists, nor all geologists, nor botanists, nor mineralogists. But in so far as any profession gets an advantage not shared equally by all others, there is just ground for complaint. The statesman who can draw the line in education where legitimate state aid begins and ends, and where paternalism asserts its baleful influence, will make therby for himself a name and confer untold blessings upon his constituants. None question the right of government to educate its citizens; but the writer does emphatically deny that the chief end for which the government does exist is that it may bestow gratuitous education upon its citizens, unless in turn the citizens give themselves wholly, and all emoluments derived from such education, to the government.

Teaching is a profession absolutely necessary to the existence of the commonwealth; but no one will admit that the state has the right to so richly provide for the education of teachers as to constitute them a privileged class. Moreover, there are those who question the right of the government to confer special favors upon the teachers which are qualified under its supervision and by its generosity. Wholesome legislation along this line will find a response in many consciences throughout the land. Certainly, there is reason to rejoice in the equipment of every noble soul for the high and holy task of educating our youth; but no man can defend the principle by which private and church schools must go down before an ever-increasing efficiency in state schools before a cheapness that defies all competition.

If the government has no right to compete with private enterprise in the manufacture of hats, shoes, lawbooks, histories and other products, where does it get the right to compete in the production of teachers?

If we admit any principle of government whereby church and private schools are swept away, then we in effect deny the right of church schools to exist, and at the same time we accord to the state the exclusive right to educate. Here we are confronted by a problem whose significance we do not fully appreciate. If Jefferson was startled as if by ringing of firebells when at night he awoke with his brain afire at the thought of the antagonism that must come between the slave and nonslaveholding states, then we need to be stirred to the very depths of our souls when we think of the state empowered to direct and control all education from the lowest to the highest form. There must be a limit somewhere along the line. Who will fix it? Who will save the private and church schools? Or has the day come when such institutions are no longer needed?

It may be too late to arrest the tide that threatens to overwhelm these institutions. But we cannot believe that they are useless, or that society or even government can exist without church or private schools.

It is admitted that no government that deserves the name can exist without morality, and it is certain that morality is impossible without the moral elements of religion. The commonwealth waives all right and obligation to teach morality. At least it must exclude all denominationalism from its schools. In doing this does it not exclude all power to teach morality? So we hold. Then some one must teach religion and morality. Who will do it when all private and denominational schools are dead? Here emerges the necessity for the movement on the part of the Christian Church, of Missouri, to establish a College of the Bible under the shadow of the University of Missouri, where it can take under its spiritual wings the young men and women from the homes of our people.

The wisdom of this generous purpose can not be questioned. If the state has conquered the right to educate our boys and girls and has almost made their education by institutions of our own impossible, then this movement is the best that can be made to solve the problems that confront us today. Even grant that Canton University shall receive an endowment adequate to put it on a plane with the best universities that are sustained by denominational and private beneficence, it remains that all who seek technical education and aim to master the highest and best scientific studies will attend the State University. Besides, many students will prefer the University because its richly equpped laboratories will always command respect. Certainly, very many pious parents will prefer that their children shall take their scientific knowledge from lips and hearts which have been consecrated to Him who in the beginning made all things. Canton will, therefore, be preferred till all the rudiments of science are mastered and the mind is matured and fitted to resist agnostic and atheistic tendencies. It is fondly hoped that each of these institutions shall receive all the aid contemplated by the resolutions passed by the recent conference held at Moberly. Let the brethren, one hundred and fifty thousand strong, come nobly to the rescue. Let us so richly endow schools that no state institution can in the least imperil their existence or dispute their right to educate the people in righteousness which exalts a nation and in hatred for sin which is a reproach to any people.

The Orphan School, of the Christian Church, of Fulton, will by the grace of God and the help of the noble souls which have espoused its cause, pay its debt, secure an ample endowment and accomplish its divine mission.

After all, the church needs, the state needs a host of kindergarten teachers who shall be able to shape the childhood of the age, and thus from the very foundation lift society out of its corruption, unfetter its fossilized limbs, smite away the bands of insincerity and duplicity and breathe into its decaying body a life of holiness and spirituality. Let the Christian Orphan School become a plant for the equipment of women who dare to spurn the false ways of life and who live for the execution of the Lord's great order to his church. Endow it and the pulse of your liberality will make the earth throb with a new life.

THE EVOLUTION OF A DISCIPLE; Or, My Conversion to and from Methodism.

T. R. HODKINSON.

HOW IT CAME TO BE WRITTEN.

Three or four years ago, my old-time friend, T. S. Buckingham, of Ohio, asked me how I was led to forsake the religious associates of earlier days. After hearing the story, nothing would appease his persistency but its retelling before his congregation. At first I flatly refused. Had I not read of such personal exhibitions with a strong feeling of contempt? He quietly suggested that I might tell it "for the glory of God." Did he not know how heartily I despised the whole clan of auto-trumpeters? He remained of the opinion that "it would do good." I recalled a favorite "class meeting" quotation: "Come and hear, all ye that fear God, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul" (Ps. 66:16), and also how Paul in the narrative of his conversion gives a noble precedent of egotistic humility; and then, seeing my duty, I straightway testified publicly.

Once only since that evening has the curtain been thus withdrawn from my past; but—at the bidding of Editor Garrison—you are now invited behind the scenes, whilst I "relate my experience."

THE TIMES—1846-99.

Born in the heart of England—Staffordshire—where the ancient kingdoms of Mercia and Deira met, I am—through no fault of mine—a Saxon of the Saxons. As this occurred only fifty-two years ago, I am not yet past middle life. But the many and great changes during that period have been as marvelous in the Old World as in the New. Here the immense virgin territories have invited an expansion at which the world wonders. There a bloodless revolution has been accomplished eternal in its influence. The Squire has been displaced by Demos; for it is virtually as much a fact in England as in America that "the people" are supreme. The state church, after centuries of oppression and arrogance, has been forced to relinquish nearly all of her invidious distinctions, until she now stands upon the defensive. The public school—starved during generations of ignorance and then monopolized by the Episcopal parson during generations of bigotry—is now under popular control, and education is compulsory and free. Truly, the lives of those who have arrived at their fiftieth year, whether in America or England, have been spent in that momentous transition period between the vanishing of the old order and the foreshadowing of the "new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."

MOTHER.

My earliest recollection is of a face, a blessed picture; yet it was not beautiful in the merely physical sense, but as the expression of a beautiful soul. The large blue-grey eyes were a blending of thought and habitual kindness with a rather dreamy, far-away look—for my deeply pious mother had just a tinge of the mystic.

In those days the Lord's people read the Lord's book—unscietifically perhaps, but very regnlarly; they hid it in their hearts, they they talked it in their visits, they leaned upon it in their lives. In those days the Lord's people communed with him in morning and evening prayer; they also retired for the quiet hour. They had "time for these things," or they took time. They were in no wise disturbed—after the fashion of some psycho-disciples—about the "mediate or immediate" influence of the Holy Spirit; and that profound poser, "Does God talk back?" would have shocked them by its seeming irreverence. But by some means—explainable or otherwise — their lives had wondrous power for good. Whoever is acquainted with George Eliot's "Dinah Morris" will understand what manner of persons are associated with my childhood's memories. My home was only two miles from the scene of "Adam Bede;" and here my mother's name is even yet "as ointment poured forth."

Until my thirteenth year she cared for the bodily and mental needs of her two boys, and was specially solicitous that they should forever be "good." Then came my first feeling of utter desolation—the sight of her dead face, with the same sweet, placid expression. That sight was to me, for years afterwards, the mightiest barrier against wrong-doing.

FATHER.

My father had a different temperament. He was firm of will, very energetic, inflexibly upright, with a scorn of all meanness; yet full of cheery humor, tender-hearted, and godly without ostentation. Always retiring in public, he never degenerated into an ornamental panel in God's temple, but was for many years one of the great supporting beams. He removed to his eternal home in 1890. In the matter of parentage I had indeed "a goodly heritage."

A METHODIST "CIRCUIT."

I was "cradled in Methodism," and in no danger of forgetting it. The followers of Wesley are a great power in England, and have a thrilling history. Throughout the length and breadth of the land, in every large town and village, and wherever a cluster of houses is found, there will be found also—unless state church landlordism has prevented—a Methodist "chapel." This vast evangelism would have been impossible without the mighty host of "local preachers." A large "circuit" would employ three salaried ordained ministers ("traveiing preachers"), and thirty or forty unpaid locals, to maintain regular Sunday preaching in a score of places. This was affected by circulating the preachers, through a system of "planned appointments;" and in order that all of the traveling preachers might keep in touch with all of the congregations, they preached—and usually slept—in a different place every night excepting Saturday, until the "round" had been completed. It was indeed hard work, which in more recent times has been considerably relaxed.

THE "PRIMITIVES."

In matters of doctrine the Methodists have had no schism, all accepting the teachings of Wesley—"the founder;" but there have been several divisions concerning clerical authority. During my boyhood the "Wesleyans" (parent body) were governed by the ministers alone; the "new connection" by an equal representation of ministers and "laymen;" and the "Primitives" by a proportion of one minister to two laymen. My parents were Primitives, our house was "the preachers' home," and many were the stirring tales to which I listened, of the struggles and successes of "the cause" in pioneer days. Our attendance at the little chapel at every service was regulated by Medo-Persian law. We loved Methodism fervently, we loved it exclusively, and we honestly wondered how any sane person could possibly care for any other religion. It must be admitted that some of the locals were rough, ungrammatical speakers; also that excitable saints would relieve themselves with hearty hallelujahs, etc. (that was before refrigerators were general); but many lives were blessedly changed, and Wesley's saying, "Our people die well," was authenticated again and again.

CONVERSION.

When twenty years old I "gave my heart to God." It is a well-worn phrase, but it meant much more than that to me. I shrink from [illegible] recital, lest some well-meaning Nicodemus (to whom the unusual is the unthinkable) should mar its sacredness with his "How can these things be?" but for the honor of my Lord the story shall be told.

The old village life had been left behind, together with the wholesome home restraints; companionships—frivolous rather than vicious—had gradually absorbed my leisure, and I began to realize what it was to be upon the downgrade without the power to stop.

By chance—or (if you share my opinion, gentle reader,) by Providence—there came a "local," with his "band of helpers," to preach in our street, and he "pitched his stand" right opposite to my rooms. (All the denominations in England are earnest open-air missioners; but I have been told that the American climate is unsuitable for "that kind of thing.")

I first felt annoyed, and then suddenly conscience-stricken. No word of the speaker reached my ears, but at the thought that after a hard day's toil he should care more for the souls of others than I had cared for my own, I was pricked in my heart. Memories of a good father and a sainted mother rushed over me, and I passed the night in a semi-stupor of shame and distress. The next day with an assumption of gaiety I tried hard to shake off such "morbid fancies," but night brought an intolerable load of guilty consciousness. I could easily recall many texts of Scripture—taught in the memorizing times—and kneeling reverently I made the solemn resolve never to arise until I had definitely given myself to the Lord, and had been as definitely accepted. In addition to the Scriptures, we had from babyhood grown familiar with scores of hymns—(do not laugh, good Nicodemus)—and presently that comforter of millions, "Jesus, lover of my soul," came to my mind. Line by line I slowly thought it through. You know it—

"Let me to thy bosom fly,
Other refuge have I none,
All my trust on thee is stayed,
Thou, O Christ, art all I want," etc. When the last stanza was reached, the line by line became word by word, with an instant's pause between each: "Plenteous—grace—with thee—is—found—grace—to—cover—all——my——sin." I never finished that hymn. Why should I? "As a little child" I just trusted in Christ, and MY SOUL WAS INSTANTLY FLOODED "WITH JOY UNSPEAKABLE AND FULL OF GLORY."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

THE CALL TO A PERSONAL AND VITAL RELATIONSHIP WITH GOD THROUGH JESUS CHRIST.

C. C. ROWLISON.

(A SERMON.)

Text—Matt. 11:28-30: Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light.

The religion of Jesus Christ is not a philosophy, but a personal relationship. It is not a system of dogmas and of rules for the regulation of life, but it is life itself. It is not a theory of God and of man and of the universe, but the Christian man is actually living in God's universe as his child. This morning I wish to dwell upon this important distinctive feature of Christianity—the call to the personal and vital relation with God through Jesus Christ.

I. THE OLD TESTAMENT CONCEPTION. While to the philosopher and theologian the chief significance of the Old Testament may be its account of the creation of man, of the origin of evil and of the rules by which God for centuries governed his chosen people, yet to the vast majority of men the charm of the Jew's Bible is found in the clear and beautiful stories of the personal relationship of man with his Maker. We may think that to-day we have passed beyond the conception of God as simply a man on a large scale, which is technically called Anthropomorphism; that we can no longer believe that God walks among men as he is represented to have done in the days of Abraham; that he can converse freely with man, giving him explicit directions how to escape from some dire calamity, as he did with Noah; that he sits the between the cherubim and talks face to face with his specially chosen servant, guiding as would a great general his army, as we are told he did with Moses, when he led the children of Israel through the wilderness. No, we cannot think of God in this human form. But, nevertheless, it is this personal relation with God so often repeated and illustrated in the lives of Old Testament saints: of Moses and Joshua, of Samuel and David, of Isaiah and all the prophets, which causes us to recognize this book as the Word of God and which will, no doubt, be its special charm to all coming ages.

Let me illustrate more fully this phase of the Old Testament conception. In the first chapters of the Bible, man is represented as in the image of God, as holding direct intercourse with him, speaking to him as a gardener in an Oriental paradise or park would speak with the lord of the province. Thus, walking in the garden at the cool of the day, God is said to have called to Adam whom he had put into his garden, "the garden of Eden, to dress and to keep it." When Adam ignores the special command of his lord not to eat of the fruit of a certain tree, he is driven forth like a disobedient servant, and a special guard is set to prevent his return to the house of his former Master. Thus in Oriental vividness we have pictured man's vital and naturally intimate relation with his God. And so long as the human heart continues to suffer anguish and disappointment it will recognize the fundamental truths of this story, namely, that man's natural home is in the presence or God, and that yet some way his sins have deprived him of communion with him.

Abraham is the divinely chosen "father of the faithful." He is not this, however, because he discourses learnedly on faith and expounds philosophy. The very thought is ridiculous. We have no record that Abraham ever once said, "I believe in God the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth," or that he recited any other creed. He may or he may not have had a definite creed. But we are told that when he understood God to ask for the sacrifice for his son, "his only son," that which was dearer to him than life itself, he hesitated not to obey the command, believing that God knew best, and that in some way "all things work together for good to them that love God, to them that are called according to his purpose." Faith and obedience are in a sense one. We all agree with James when he says, "Show me thy faith apart from thy works, and I by my works will show thee my faith." And so this "obedience of faith" in the great patriarch has marked out for us the way of life, where the profoundest thought of philosophers has led us deeper into the darkness of uncertainty and dread. But this faith loses all its significance when we give up personal relationship to God. Then Abraham would be following only the unnatural impulses of a heated heathenish imagination. Perhaps all of us cannot accept all the details of the story of Abraham's life as actual history, or if we do, we may have to believe him largely influenced by the doctrines of human sacrifice practiced by so many peoples of his day; but his absolute sacrifice, his unhesitating obedience to the voice of God as he understood it, must ever be to us the type of truest faith.

But time would fail me to illustrate fully the way in which the Old Testament worthies, in their simple trust in God as their Lord, their King, their favorite Deity, who dwelt in their midst, even in the Holy of Holies, the Shekinah who lent to Israel her special glory, realized this nearness to God. When at last this personal relationship to God was given up, when theology became a system of religious ceremonies, and religion became the observance of empty formalities because it no longer expressed faith in the vital and vitalizing nearness of God: in a word, when Judaism became Pharisaism, it lost all its charm for men. No one but scholars knows or cares who Hillel and Gamaliel were, but the world will never forget the Carpenter from Nazareth who was their contemporary. The world knows and cares little about the bulky volumes of the Talmud which contain the disputes and commentaries of learned Jews upon the Old Testament; but no one will ever forget the song of the simple herdsman: "The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." The endless amplifications and allegorical interpretations of biblical doctrines as found in the Midrash are an utter weariness to the flesh; but we shall always go for comfort and hope to Him who exclaimed, "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God. Behold, the Lord God will come as a mighty one and his arm shall rule for him: behold, his reward is with him and his recompense before him. He shall feed his flock like a shepherd, he shall gather the lambs in his arms and carry them in his bosom and shall gently lead those that give suck." We turn to the writings of these men because we instinctively feel that they speak the truth in saying, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath appointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to build up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn; to appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give them a garland for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that he might be glorified." Their words are to us life and strength, because THEY were full of the divine life and strong in the divine strength. We go to them because it is life we want, not logic; it is truth we want, not philosophy; we must know the way to God, not the theological definition of his nature. The poet sings:

"'Tis life whereof our nerves are scant,
O life, not death, for which we pant;
More life and fuller, that we want."
—Tennyson's The Voices.

And it is because Jesus walked in the way of God and said, "Follow me;" because his words exemplified in his deeds are the truth which makes men free; because his life is the expression of Diety himself, manifested in the flesh, that he becomes the way, the truth, the life" to all who come unto God through him.

The Contents of this Paper.

As much is being said in regard to the proper manner of running the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, I wish to put in my say. I like the make-up of it very well. It has a very judicious mixture of secular and religious matter that to me is very gratifying. I like its broad and generous views. I was much pleased to read Bro. Campbell's articles relative to infant sprinkling. If they will call it dedication, and not confound it with an ordinance always preceded by faith and repentance, there will be less wrangling in the religious world. I rejoice to see that a Congregationalist has taken the step he has, for it is a step forward. And I am glad that the editor met him with open arms. The more Bro. Campbell becomes acquainted with the teachings of his eminent namesake, the brighter the Bible will seem to him. Speaking of dedicating children reminds me of something: Wouldn't it be a good thing for the parents to dedicate themselves a little more and the babies less? I wish every one of our brotherhood would take and read this paper.

Our Budget.

—$100,000 for Home Missions this year.

—More laborers needed in the Master's vineyard.

—All of April needed to prepare for the first Sunday in May.

—The critical test of Christianity is yet to be made.

—Great battles have been fought and won, but greater ones have just begun.

—If Christianity be not well fortressed at home it cannot meet the demands abroad.

—If Christianity be not well fortressed at home it cannot stand the strain to which it is about to be subjected by social, civil and commercial interests.

—If Christianity be not well fortressed at home this glorious land of the free may be overrun with an enemy that shall recognize neither our religion nor our freedom.

—The future of our country more than any man can now tell depends upon the success of the religion of Jesus Christ. If that be not equal to the task our liberties are in a fair way to be lost. Home Missions to the front, is a veritable war cry, suited to the needs of the hour.

—We have an obituary of Sigal D. Lewis, who died at Bridgeport, Ill., Jan. 31st that is unsigned. If the writer will sign his name we will publish it.

—The annual commencement of the Medical College of Indiana, University of Indianapolis, was held at the English Operahouse, March 30th, 8 P. M.

—It has been discovered that the sale of beer has been clandestinely carried on in connection with the restaurant in the National Library Building at Washington, D. C., and the Reform Bureau is taking active steps to have this piece of lawlessness at least suppressed even if the lawless restaurant has to be suppressed or or removed from this beautiful building.

—The Bible-school of the Mt. Cabanne Christian Church, of this city, has outgrown its room capacity and on last Sunday about $1,200 was raised to put an addition on one end of the Sunday-school room. The Mt. Cabanne Bible-school is the largest one of any of our churches in this city, but with such men as W. W. Dowling, D. R. Dungan and others of like measure of effective work it is not strange that the church has to lengthen its cords and strengthen is stakes. Dr. Dungan's Bible-class of Bible-school teachers of the city continues to be an interesting and popular inter-denominational work.

—The three newest ideas in the world's progress of far-reaching consequences are (1) wireless telegraphy, (2) liquid air and (3) the law of temperature. These are revolutionary discoveries, and no man can now foresee their results. Their potentialities are simply marvelous and revolutionary. Liquid air has the appearance of having come to displace anæthetics in surgery, antiseptics in medicine and ice everywhere for refrigerating purposes; also to take the place of steam and electricity as a motive power in all places. The new law of temperature, of which an excellent account is given in the Atlantic Monthly for April, by its discoverer, T. J. J. See, seems to indicate on its face that our present theory of the origin of the solar system and history of the planets will have to be rewritten. Truly, are we living in a marvelous age of the world.

—We begin the publication of an article this week on "The Evolution of a Disciple, or My Conversion to and from Methodism," which we are sure will prove to be most entertaining and profitable. The article was written by T. R. Hodkinson, of Clarksville, Iowa, and will run through three or four numbers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It deals fairly with facts as seen by the writer, and is in good spirit from start to finish. We shall be disappointed if we do not hear a strong call to have this article in tract for circulation.

—"The Call to a Personal and Vital Relationship with God through Jesus Christ" is the theme of a most excellent sermon by C. C. Rowlison, of Marshalltown, Iowa, which we are glad to be able to furnish our readers beginning with this number. We regret that we could not have the space for the entire sermon in this paper, but it will appear continuously until finished. The sermon will bear a careful reading, and will supply spiritual knowledge and strength to the reader.

—DEAR BROTHER:—Among the beautful and helpful things found in the present issues of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, none are more beautiful or more generally appreciated and enjoyed than the able writer's series on "Preachers and Impressions," by Judge I. E. Barnum, of Denver, Col. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST was never so rich in thought and never so sweet in spirit as at the present time.

REMLA SNILLOE.

Palmyra, Ill., March 29.

—The readers of the Bethany Reading Circle articles will be disappointed this week in the omission of the reading course article. The article failed to reach us and probably some urgent duty prevented Bro. Power from writing it. These articles have appeared with such regularity in our columns that the omision is the more emphasized thereby. The article for next week will appear as usual.

—The cover of the Christian Oracle last week was neat, appropriate and suggestive. The poem by the managing editor on the inside of cover is one of his best poetical productions. It is descriptive, reverent and pitched on a lofty spiritual plane. The cover of the number preceding Easter contained an excellent picture of the managing editor, A. O. Garrison. The Oracle is growing in size, beauty and subscription list.

—The church at Buchanan, Mich., E. R. Black, pastor, has begun the publication of a four-page journal, to appear monthly in the interest of the Church of Christ at that place. The initial number shows great care in its preparation.

—The Kellogg Christian is the name of a new paper published bimonthly at Kellogg, Ia., in the interest of the Christian Church at that place. F. W. Collins is the pastor of the church at Kellegg. No. 1, just to hand, shows that the editor has a mission to accomplish in the birth of this paper.

—In W. F. Richardson's account of the Missouri Christian Lectureship, published in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, there are two or three typographical errors which should be corrected. In the third paragraph the word lecture should read literature, as follows: "He classified the literature concerning Christ and his religion as that of silence, of revolt, of sadness, of pessimism, of faith." From the list of officers for the coming year the name of the chairman of the executive committee, Bro. J. B. Jones, of Fulton, was omited. The new set of officers are referred to as the "crop," instead of corps.

—Secretary B. L. Smith, of Cincinnati, informs us that over two thousand churches have signified their intention of making an offering for Home Missions on the first Sunday in May. This does not mean that those churches which have not so signified will not make an offering. But inasmuch as many do not make the offering for Home Missions, it is encouraging to know beforehand that so great a number can be relied on for their help. If these pledges could be taken for a number of years at least, but better still continuously, then there would be hope of getting the majority of our churches on such a subscription list in the course of a few years. But when churches have to be solicited every year and the same ones persuaded to resubscribe each year, the headway of our missionary secretaries is thereby greatly retarted. It is to be hoped, however, that this Jubilee Year will find about all our congregations in the procession for Home Missions. Let it be the most general and liberal offering of our history.

—We print in this paper a large amount of letters indicative of the work that has been accomplished by our Home Missionary Society in the United States. The testimonials come from every quarter and point to results of vast importance. But all that has been accomplished, great and valuable as it is, is but a tithe of what the society could have done with more means at its command and what it is now capable of doing if only larger offerings are made in the future. The power of the society to do work for the Master is limited to the amount of funds entrusted to its wise use; beyond this its hands are tied. If we would see greater movements on its part and greater results from its use and direction of missionaries of the cross we must enlarge our offerings. More churches must be enlisted and greater liberality shown on the part of those who are committed to this cause, not in word only, but by virtue of their relation to King Jesus.

—The result of the rally held on the 14th of March in the interest of Add-Ran University, as reported in the Courier of March 23rd was of a decidely encouraging nature. The unprovided indebtedness of the University is $21,000. To meet this and other expenses six per cent. ten-year bonds of the institution to the amount of $30,000 will be sold. One-third of this was subscribed at the rally. Financial Agent, Bro. Henry, will push the sale of the bonds the amount required. Great satisfaction is expressed at the call of Prof. Buxton to the position of chancellor of the University by its friends. The question of a new name for the University is laid aside for the present. "The announcement that Addison Clark will remain in the faculty was received with profound satisfaction by every friend of the institution."

—We ask attention of the Missouri brethren to T. A. Abbott's special appeal for a special case in a special field on a special base. Bro. Abbott's own liberality in this case is sufficient emphasis upon the importance of the case. Read and act.

—Now that you have seen our Easter number and perused its pages, we think that we can speak of its merits the more freely. The cover design will bear study, being strikingly suggestive of the day, the season and the great historical fact of Christianity and of the world—the resurrection of Christ. Each department also contains either a direct or a relative article on the same things. This, with the amount of church news, correspondence, missionary and other matters in the paper, made it a number of unusual interest and excellence.

—The editor of this paper desires to acknowledge the receipt of a box of choice sweet potatoes, express prepaid, from Bro. W. W. West, of Ozark, Ark. They are of the species known as the vineless yam or bunch yam, and are of the very finest quality in size and flavor. No state in the Union can excel Arkansas in the quality of its sweet potatoes.

—In the report of the receipts of the American Christian Missionary Society last week was an item calculated to fill the reader's heart with great joy. It was a gift on the annuity plan of $18,000. We do not know the name of the donor, but that will not hinder the value of the gift. Of this sum $2,000 was for the Foreign Missionary Society and $8,000 for Church Extension, leaving $8,000 for Home Missions. But it must be remembered that these sums cannot be used for current expenses; they go into a permanent fund in each society. And now that our brethren are beginning to make large gifts to our missionary societies, there is every reason for hoping that they will increase rapidly and that a brighter day is dawning for our missionary societies and upon the work entrusted to their oversight. We shall hope to have the pleasure of reporting many large gifts for missions this year.

—Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:

SPRINGFIELD, ILL., April 2.
Two hundred and seventeen additions to date; to continue two days. Have had 821 additions in in the last four meetings.
CHAS. REIGN SCOVILLE, Evangelist.

—We are indebted to A. M. Haggard, of Des Moines, for the large number of Iowa personals in our Personal Mention column this week.

—The 17th session of the Central Illinois Ministerial Institute will be held at Lincoln, Ill., April 11-13. The program announces practical, living topics and strong men to discuss them. All who expect to attend this meeting are requested to send their names to Albert Nichols, at Lincoln, in order that entertainment may be provided.

—The preachers' meeting in this office on Monday of this week was of unusual attendance and interest. There were present as visitors A. J. Marshall, of Onawa, Ia.; J. H. Crutcher, of Sedalia, Mo.; H. A. Northcutt, of the United States, and A. R. Moore, of Memphis, Tenn. Bro. Marshall is here at the invitation of our City Mission Board in view of a call to the work of an evangelist in this city. He preached at the Tuxedo Church on last Sunday morning and at West End Church Sunday evening. At a meeting of the committee on Monday it was decided to recommend that the City Mission Board extend a call to Bro. Marshall, which the City Mission Board is likely to do at its next meeting. H. A. Nrothcutt is here to hold a meeting at the Beulah Christian Church. The meeting opened hopefully on last Sunday with one addition. A. R. Moore, of Memphis, Tenn., is here assisting his brother, S. B. Moore, in a meeting at Compton Heights Church. The meeting has been in progress three weeks with 25 accessions to date. J. H. Crutcher preached at Second Christian Church last Sunday morning. Easter services were held at many of our churches in this city on Sunday evening with collections for the Orphans' Home. One of the children of the Home, a little girl of about two years, died at the Home on Saturday, and was buried on Monday. W. D. Pittman, an active member of Mt. Cabanne Church, has offered to preach for the Second Christian Church, this city, without salary, and in additon pay the interest on their church debt provided they will raise what they can to pay on the debt. This is an exceedingly liberal proposition on the part of Bro. Pittman and worthy of commendation. F. G. Tyrrell, pastor of the Central Christian Church, this city has resigned. He has two calls, one to San Francisco and one to Chicago, but which he will accept is not yet known to himself. The church, the city and our preachers exceedingly regret his determination to quit St. Louis. He has been an active factor in our work here and accomplished a vast amount of work. W. H. Kern his closed has work at the Fourth Christian Church and E. M. Smith at Beulah Church. Bro. Kern has gone to Du Quoin, Ill., and Bro. Smith expects to go East soon. He may not accept another pastorate until fall, thus taking the summer for a rest. These are rapid changes for the St. Louis churches to undergo in so short a time. But since they must be, our prayer is that the Lord will use them to the glory of his cause and to the increased usefulness of his faithful servants who have laid down their burdens in this city for greater ones in other parts of his vinyard.

—We give another report of the Missouri Lectureship at Huntsville, last month, in this paper. The style of the writer is so different from that of last week that it will not appear to repeat even on the same points. Both are admirable reports of what seems to have been one of the best sessions of the Lectureship in its history.

—Certainly it was Archimedes and not Diogenes that jumped out of his bath tub when he had solved his problem, exclaiming Eureka! eureka! We are glad to know that when the editor nods in his "Easy Chair" there are scores of open-eyed classic scholars among his readers to call his attention to the error, as many of them have done in this instance. We never enjoyed a personal acquaintance with either of the Greek gentlemen above mentioned, and it is not strange that their personalities became a little mixed for the time. But of course it was Mr. Archimedes—the man who only wanted a fulcrum in order to lift the world—that is responsible for all the Eurekas!

—The Central District Christian Convention for Iowa will be held at Bondurant, April 17-20. See particulars next issue.

—All persons expecting to attend the Congress of the Disciples of Christ, to meet in the First Christian Church in this city Tuesday, April 22, are requested to send their names at once to F. O. Fannon, 3126 Locust Street, that entertainment may be provided. Lodging and breakfast will be furnished free to all who will come. Dinner and supper will be served at the First Christian Church each day at twenty-five cents per meal. All persons sending their names will receive cards informing them of their home, to which places they can go immediately upon their arrival in the city. The First Christian Church is at 3126 Locust Street. There is no street-car line on Locust Street, but one on Olive Street, one block south and on Washington Avenue, one block north of Locust Street. The nearest approach to the church on the street cars on either of the streets named is at Garrison or Compton Avenues, from which there will be a walk of at least two blocks. The program of this Congress was published in our edition of March 23rd, first inside page. It is useless to add that this will be an intellectual and spiritual feast of no ordinary character. Every preacher who can raise the money to get here will certainly not regret the cost. The hospitality of the churches of St. Louis will certainly be equal to the occasion. Come.

The Foreign Society has been compelled to secure a new P. O. box. The number is changed from 750 to 884. The old number has been used during the past sixteen years and has become quite familiar to our people, but it is small and the constant increase in the mail made it necessary to secure a larger box. The new number will be large enough to serve the society for the next quarter of a century or longer. Box 750 has rendered good service, and we make the change reluctantly. More than a million dollars have passed through it to go out and do service among the nations of the earth. The friends of the work will soon become familiar with P. O. box 884.

Health, Voice, Appetite and Strength Failed—Completely Restored by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Last year my health failed entirely. My limbs were so weak that I could scarcely walk. I had no appetite and suffered with constipation. My voice failed me in the pulpit. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and very soon I saw a great improvement. In the winter I was attacked with the grip which left me weak and prostrated. I went back to my old friend, Hood's Sarsaparilla, which seems to be the thing for me." REV. C. S. BEAULIEU, pastor Christian church, Lowellville, Ohio.

Sketch of Ex-Governor Drake.

Francis M. Drake was born in Rushville, Illinois, December 30, 1830. His father was John Adams Drake, and his mother's maiden name was Harriott Jane O'Neill, both natives of North Carolina. He moved from Rushville, Illinois, to Fort Madison, Iowa, then to Wisconsin territory, in the fall of 1837. At that time Blackhawk and his tribe were located at that place. In 1846 what was called the "New Purchase" having been made, they moved from Fort Madison to Davis County, and founded the village of Drakevilie, and entered the mercantile business, with Drake acting as clerk in the store. In 1852 Francis Marion crossed the plains to Sacramento, Cal., with a train of ox teams. On the way, at the crossing of Shell Creek, Neb., the small company which he was then commanding had an encounter with a large number of Pawnee Indians, in which the Indians were defeated with severe loss.

He returned to Iowa after a fair success in California, and in 1854 recrossed the plains with a drove of cattle. On the 30th of September, 1854, he sailed on the steamer "Yankee Blade" from San Francisco, expecting to return home via Panama. The steamer running through a dense fog struck a reef running out from Point Aguilla on the Pacific Coast and was a total wreck. The vessel was entirely destroyed and many lives were lost. He succeeded in reaching a barren coast and was picked up five days afterwards and returned to San Francisco. Later on, he returned home and entered the mercantile business with his father and brothers under the firm name of Drake & Sons. From that time he was actively engaged in the mercantile, pork packing and livestock business until the Civil War broke out in 1861, when he enlisted and entered the service for the union. He was soon after elected captain of his company, afterwards promoted to major, then commissioned as lieutentant-colonel of the 36th Iowa Infantry, and from that was brevetted as Brigadier-General of United States Volunteers, serving more than four years until the close of the war. Was severely wounded in the service, thought to be mortally, and was in a great many severe engagements, and had a good army record. On his return home from the army owing to his wounds he was unable to resume the active business that he had pursued prior to the war, and entered the practice of law; afterwards in the building and operating of railroads. He engaged in the practice of law, first for three years associated with the Hon. Amos Harris, from 1867 to 1870. Again from 1875 to 1879, associated with the Hon. A. J. Baker, Ex-Attorney General of Iowa, in which in both instances he was very successful, and established a good reputation as a lawyer, especially as a criminal lawyer. He has been engaged thirty years in the railroad business, and has built and largely controlled five railroads.

At the instance of Prof. G. T. Carpenter, his brother-in-law, and Rev. D R. Lucas, he assisted in founding Drake University, of Des Moines, in 1880, in which institution he has taken a great interest and invested a large amount of money. It is a prosperous institution, and has accomplished great good in sending out its graduates filling the various professions and especially the preaching of the gospel.

In 1895 he received the unanimous nomination of the Republican State Convention, and was elected Governor of Iowa by an overwhelming majority, having received the largest vote ever cast in the state for that office. On the 22nd of June, 1997, while ascending the granite steps of the capitol during a beating rainstorm, he slipped and fell, striking an angle of the steps, striking at a place where he was wounded, bruising and battering the injured thighbone, and owing to the critical condition in which he found himself several weeks afterward, from the advice of his physicians he declined a second term for Governor. Since that time his health has been quite precarious, but he is now convalescing and is devoting some personal attention to his business affairs.

Gen. Drake's memory will be perpetuated in the University at Des Moines, which he has founded and so munificently aided. His gifts to our missionary organizations, too, will enable him to preach the gospel at home and abroad long after he has gone to his reward. We are glad to present to our readers a good likeness of this distinguished brother.

Expressed Apprecation.

C. J. F. Musgrove, the new energetic pastor of the Church of Christ in this city, has been here only six weeks, but during that time the church has been reunited and greatly strengthened. He has reduced the church debt $300, purchased a new bell, made some necessary repairs, met Foreign Missionary apporpriation in full, had five additions. His wife is a great help to him in the church work. She expects to soon organize a C. W. B. M. auxiliary. Lately the church and the Modern Woodmen of America together celebrated the fortieth anniversary of his birth, with a reception in the church. He was presented with a beautiful study chair and some excellent books for his library. The pastors of the other churches made short speeches and refreshments were served.

Outlook good for great work in Ashland.

Preachers Wanted.

We have places in Southern California for three or four active, capable young preachers with small families who wish to come to this state to stay. Salary to start with from $40 to $60 per month. They must be well vouched for as to character, general ability, etc. Address with stamp H. ELLIOTT WARD, Sec.

Passadena, Cal.

Beware of Impostors!

Word has come to us that a person by the name of Harrington has been collecting money in Davenport, Iowa, and Rock Island, Ill., claiming that he is authorized to do so for the benefit of the Christian Orphans' Home at St. Louis, Mo.

We wish to warn all the brethren and the friends of the Orphans' Home and Benevolent Association against this person. He has no authority to collect money or anything else for this Home. Our only authorized field agents at the present time are Bro. Joel Brown and Bro. J. D. Dillard. Any one claiming to be our agent should be made to show his credentials. The names of our agents will always be found on first page of the Orphans' Cry, the paper published in the interest of the Benevolent Association.

There should be copies of this paper, which is only 25 cents a year, in every congregation. The report of Easter collections will be found in its issue for April and May.

PERSONAL MENTION.

G. E. Ireland has accepted a call to Wabash, Ind.

E. O. Sharp has accepted a call to Girard, Ill.

J. E. Wilson has engaged three-fourths time to the church at Burkesville, Ky.

E. A. Hastings, of Brandon, Iowa, is entering on his second year's work.

F. L. Davis changes from Dows, Ia., to Charles City, same state.

C. C. Smith, during his recent visit in Iowa, preached for H. O. Breeden in the Central Church.

C. H. White, of Clarinda, Ia., has been called to preach for the church at Galesburg, Ill. Began at Galesburg last Sunday.

George E. Platt, of Marion, Ia., began his work Dec. 1st, and reports 14 added in this brief time.

The call of O. H. Derry to Los Angeles, Cal., leaves Columbus, Kas., in need of a preacher.

M. L. Anthony and wife celebrated the 25th anniversary of their marriage April 5th, at Elkhart, Ill. They have our congratulations.

J. Madison Williams preached at De Soto on Sunday, March 26th. The occasion was very enjoyable and is well reported of.

C. H. Mattox, preaching at North English, Iowa, has reported 21 additions in the last six months. He hopes for a new church house. Mission apportionments are all accepted and will be met.

S. B. Ross, of Oelwein, Ia., reports prayer-meeting doubled, and D. A. Wickizer engaged for meeting in June.

W. A. Moore, of Webster City, Ia., dedicated the new basement room, 18x34 feet. The Boys' Brigade were the chief movers in this enterprise.

Joel Brown will preach for Pastor I. N. McCash on Sunday evening April 2nd. He speaks in the interest of the St. Louis Orphans' Home.

Pastor H. O. Breeden, of Iowa, will be one of six men to represent the Disciples at the Detroit convention of the Y. P. S. C. E. forces in July next.

An active, energetic young man, unmarried, who understands music and can lead in the song service and assist in personal work is wanted at Dorchester, Ill. Address J. G. M. L., P. O. Box 103.

Elder C. M. Rice, who has been serving the church at Medina, O., for the past year, has resigned and left an empty pulpit. H will probably go from Medina to Cleveland.

Arthur Holstein, Canton, Mo., can greatly assist any preacher using charts by his diagrams if called upnn. His work is said to be very fine.

M. L. Anthony who has been unwell for a time is now ready for service again. He will assist wherever called for a meeting. "First come first served," he says.

Cal Ogburn was called to Philadelphia, Pa., March 19th, to the bedside of his son who was there taking a course in dentistry. Bro. Ogburn found his son quite sick with typhoid fever, but improving. He will return to Phœnix, Arizona, instead of Riverside, Cal. Phœnix, Ariz., is his former field of labor.

I. N. McCash, of Des Moines, on Sunday, April 2nd, will address the State Normal School. His theme is, "The Position of Our People." He speaks on this subject by request of the managers of the school.

A. E. Cory has made a good impression in his new field—Oskaloosa, Iowa. Fine audiences have greeted him, and a number of additions are reported.

F. L. Davis has been called from Dows to Charles City, Ia. In the ten and a half months at Dows he reports 16 additions to the church, the building of a neat $3,000 house of worship, free from debt. The church at Charles City, he says, has suffered for want of a preacher since July last.

H. A. Northcutt began a protracted meeting at the Beulah Christian Church, this city, last Sunday. This will be his third meeting for this church; the first one gave birth to the chnrch.

A. C. Eaton, of Springfield, Ill., has reorganized the church at Mt. Vernon. The church is said to have largely disintegrated for want of a pastor. Bro. Eaton is holding a meeting for the new church.

Since his return to England W. Remfry Hunt has been busy arousing the English churches on the immediate and imperative claims of world-wide missions. He expects to return to his loved field of work in Central China in the fall. In the meantime he will be engaged on special studies relative to his future life work in the evangelization of China and the Chinese.

Dean H. W. Everest, after three months in the South, has returned to Des Moines, Iowa. The Bible Department expects some lectures from him during the spring term. He will continue his writing, which has progressed so well during the winter. His health is not all he or his friends hope for, but it is sufficient to result in some very valuable work.

The church at Princeton, Ind., on the removal of Bro. G. E. Ireland to Wabash, passed resolutions of esteem for him and his family, speaking in the highest terms of his work both as pastor and preacher, and testifying to the substantial growth of the church and the loss it would sustain by their departure. The Ministerial Association of the city, of which Bro. Ireland was recently president, also passed resolutions of appreciation and that of the community of Bro. Ireland personally and of his "very successful" work.

Bro. Fannon, pastor First Christian Church, this city, who has been sick for sometime, filled his pulpit on last Sunday, the first for six weeks. On last Wednesday night he baptized nine persons and on Sunday night seven more. There were 12 additions in all last Sunday. Bro. Fannon has gathered over 300 persons into that church since he began, fourteen months ago. This is by far the best record at ingathering of any pastor in this city for the same period. All were rejoiced that he is able to be at his work again, with his accostomed zeal.

On last Friday morning the editor of this paper, the managing editor of the Christian Oracle and Dr. W. E. Garrison, of Irvington, Ind., arrived in this city from Eureka Springs. Dr. W. E. Garrison proceeded on to his home and work at Irvington the same day, while A. O. Garrison tarried over until evening, when in company with his family and his father, the editor of this paper, he left for Chicago. The editor of this paper spent Sunday and three days in Chicago looking after business interests and returned to this office on Tuesday morning.

A tribute to the memory of A. F. H. Saw, written in Chinese characters, now hangs in the Chinese chapel at Chu Cheo, China. The writer of this tribute was Brother Saw's personal teacher and his tribute is strongly imbued with the Christian spirit, though he is not a Christian. The high esteem in which Bro. Saw was held by native Christians is also strongly characteristic of the tribute. We are told that a more permanent memorial is contemplated later on, but the present one does not lack in a full and deep expression of appreciation of his services, and as a testimony to the good of Foreign Missions its value can not be estimated in material wealth. That these hearts in China have been enlightened with the gospel of Christ through his now departed servant will be to him an unfading crown of glory and to a living inspiration to greater things for China.

Charles Reign Scoville, who is now in a great meeting at Springfield, Ill., has had remarkable success wherever called. The number of additions secured and the shortness of the time in which they are secured are phenomenal. He reports over 800 additions in the last four meetings. The pastors of the churches where he has held meetings speak highly of his ability, his methods and of the character of his work. So far as we know he has been the most uniformly successful evangelist in securing large additions that has yet reported from the field this year. A few evangelists at his rate of success would soon add the hundred thousand souls to the church wanted this Jubilee Year.

New York Letter.

The Yale Volunteer Band, in their missionary work, spent most of one week recently in New York trying to arouse greater missionary interest in the Endeavor Societies. Meetings were held in various parts of the city, led by different members of the band, and all culminated in a great rally—a union meeting at one of the churches. One of the meetings was held in the 169th St. Church, and was addressed by Mr. A. B. Williams, one of the Band. The dominant thought enforced by him was the need and joy of sacrifice. It was an inspiring discourse, and led us all to believe the Yale Band is doing excellent service in the churches.

Mrs. Bertha M. Place, murderess, was electrocuted at Sing Sing prison last week. Her crime was a shocking one. She took the life of her stepdaughter and attempted to kill her husband. Executions of this kind always occasion serious reflection on the part of Christian men, who are awake to their duty before God. We are glad to note that the sentiment against capital punishment is already strong and is rapidly growing. If an individual has no moral right to commit murder, where do 100,000 men (or any number composing a state) obtain the right? If I have no moral right to take human life, my neighbor and I together have no such right. But you say, "it is legal." What of that? If it is morally wrong it cannot be legally right. The State Legislature voted recently on a measure to abolish capital punishment, and without any organized effort to develop sentiment, or call out public opinion on the question, 49 votes out of 121 were in favor of it—40 per cent. of the legislators of the state are in favor of abolishing the death penalty.

Much interest is being developed in the coming Peace Conference, at The Hague, next May. Prof. George Gunton, of Gunton's Magazine, and Dr. C. L. Thompson and others spoke in favor of the objects of the conference at a mass meeting in Broadway Tabernacle last night. The first speaker looks upon Russia's lead in this matter as auspicious and thinks the United States should stand in the very front ranks of the nations pleading for peace and a permanent international court of arbitration. Dr. Thompson said at the beginning of the century the Anglo-Saxon race was fifth in number and influence among nations, to-day it is the first, and most of that race is on this continent. We should plead for peace in national and international councils, and we should also deplore the spirit of militarism in our public schools.

Rabi Mendes, of this city, is leading the Jewish forces in favor of disarmament of the nations and the inauguration of worldwide peace. He advises the Jews to advocate the Hague conference and promote its objects on the condition that Palestine be restored to the full possession of the Israelites and that they be permitted to return and possess their ancient national home. What effect this appeal will have on the peace delegates at The Hague cannot be determined as yet, but if it should be granted it will appear to many biblical scholars as the apparent fulfillment of prophecy, and the preparation for the conversion of the Jews to Christ.

Rev. Dr. Richard Harcourt, a prominent Methodist minister, has just opened "The People's Church," in Baltimore. He and his friends appealed to Bishop Goodsell to transfer him from Philadelphia to Baltimore and allow him to open this independent church, but without success. Their "Band of Union" puts forth this card: "We believe in the Fatherhood of God, the Sonship of Jesus Christ and the brotherhood of man. We believe Jesus Christ to be supreme, and we also believe that no one else has the slightest authority over our personal freedom or religious rights." These truths are in accord with the New Testament Scriptures, and are popular.

Jamaica Letter.

Since I ended my wanderings in the "Old Countrie" and in the "New World" and returned to this "summerland," I have had "good intentions" with regard to writing a few lines to the Christian-Evangelist, but I have not seemed to have the time to carry out those intentions.

The last trip I made before leaving the States I found a very long one, as it took me from Indianapolis to Edwards, Miss., where I had the pleasure of visiting the Southern Christian Institute where our four "boys" from Jamaica are at work. I found that the school had not recovered from the break-up caused by the visitation of yellow fever. However, work had been resumed and I was delighted to see the deep interest of the teachers and the earnestness of the students in that work. I am glad to know that the recovery of lost ground has been going on and is quite satisfactory. I was satisfied that our Jamaica boys are receiving most valuable preparation there for their work here, and earnestly trust that our present experiment will prove a great success and that our young brethren will prove to be "workmen needing not to be ashamed." The fellowship with Bro. Lehman and other members of the staff was quite refreshing. That institution should accomplish great things in the Southland.

On my return to this place I had the pleasure of receiving a very hearty welcome. Everything had gone on well in my absence. With the valuable aid of my son and the brethren on the field and the help of some other brethren, all the services had been regularly kept up and good seed had been sown. Since then there has been some ingathering. Last Lord's day I had the pleasure of immersing seven persons at Kingston who, with one other previously immersed, have been received into our fellowship. There are also seven candidates at the branch church at Torrington. Last Lord's day, also, about sixteen dollars was brought in to pay for a new communion service which was then taken into use.

Last Wednesday I had the pleasure of attending a "harvest festival" service at Oberlin. There was a good attendance and a good spirit was manifested. The friends there brought in offerings in aid of the new church building that is about to be erected. Brethren McHardy, MacLeod and a Wesleyan brother also took part in the service. We were hospitably entertained by Brother and Sister Purdy in the mission house which they have recently erected. It is a good and commodious building, well and neatly finished, without any extravagance about it, situated on a fine and healthful site, commanding a splendid outlook and will prove a suitable residence for the years to come. There are some indications of our work being extended, but I will not prophesy.

Dr. F. E. Clark, of C. E. fame, is to pay Jamaica a visit next month. There are about one hundred societies, senior and junior, in the island with about 5,000 members. I believe we need stirring up and it is hoped that the visit of Dr. Clark, who will be accompanied by his wife, will be the means of effecting this.

The city of Kingston is just now in a very unsettled physical condition. The old street mule cars have been abandoned and the West Indian Electric Car Co. is laying down the lines for electric cars throughout the city and for some miles in the suburbs. Some have begun to run already, but generally getting about the city is very difficult as the streets are being reconstructed at the same time. But soon the city will be greatly improved as regards sanitation and means of locomotion. The service will, I suppose, be as good as is to be found in any city. The contractors and overseers are, I believe, all Americans.

What is true of Kingston physically is true of the island generally in matters political, social, financial, and I think I may say religious. We are having quite a turning up and turning over. Our financial troubles have brought to light the fact that we have for sometime been spending more than our income. The decree has gone forth that there must be both retrenchment, rearrangement and new imposts. The first will fall heavily on some and the last will fall heavily on many, for the people generally are in an impoverished condition. All departments are being cut down—educational, medical, judicial, post office, constabulary, public work, etc.—only the pruning knife has not been applied to the high-salaried officials. But the end is not yet. Our island legislative council meets next month and then we expect some stirring times. The last year of the century promises to be a memorable one for this island.

By the way, when I sat down to write this letter I had it in mind to say how our "mission press for Jamaica" appears to have got lost—at least I have seen nothing of it. You were good enough to undertake the responsibility of looking after it and I know that it is not through any want of interest on your part that it has not turned up. It is simply that necessary funds have not come in and the C. W. B. M. have not seen the way to draw on their general fund. In this I think they have been quite right. I hope they will not do so. We here did not anticipate when the request was made that the cost would be so high. We should hardly have ventured to ask for so much. Since the Chattanooga Convention there seems to have been a growing feeling that the amount to be raised this year for missions are very great and that it will need a great effort to raise the "apportionments." I should not like to feel that we are adding to so great a burden. So perhaps the Jamaica press can wait. As a matter of fact we have no room in any of our buildings to set it to work, and the amounts received can be laid aside till some more convenient season.

Just in closing may I venture to say that it must appear strange to some, that while expecting 100,000 conversions this year and reporting over 1,000,000 members in the churches, it should be thought such a hard task to raise 150,000 dollars for missions and to require such prodigious exertion. Surely if 100,000 are converted and have their wills brought into harmony with the divine will, most of them would willingly contribute one dollar at least and some much more for this work. Then what will be left for the remaining multitude? Have we begun to learn what is meant by attempting great things for God? When we do that we shall have no words left to describe the act, having already used up "great" and "grand" "noble" and such like common phrases. But then perhaps we shall be satisfied if the Master says, "She hath done what she could."

Washington (D. C.) Letter.

The officers of the Christian Endeavor Union of this city, who sucured Dr. J. Wilhur Chapman and Mr. Harner Gracia Smyth for a ten days' meeting in February, express themselves as highly gratified at the success of these special services. The fellowship of pastors and people of the various denominations in the preparatory meetings, the nightly services and personal work was one of the good features. The number of conversions reported as a result of these meetings is not large. Within eight minutes after the doors of the church were opened the auditorium would be packed, and of these it was estimated that at least nineteen-twentieths were church members. A number of cards were signed, but this does not mean a corresponding number of additions to the churches. Mr. Chapman possesses in a high degree the qualities characteristic of all the great evangelists. His preaching is simple, earnest and illustrative. We were greatly interested in his booklet sent to every pastor and worker in the meeting. This booklet contains suggestions to committees, methods of work, etc. The last chapter is entitled, "How to Aid Inquirers." "Always use God's Word," is the excellent advice given, and then follows selections of various passages to suit individual cases. He quotes freely from the prophets and epistles, hut not once from the Acts of the Apostles. But Mr. Chapman dwelt so forcihly upon the the "Indwelling of the Spirit," "Complete Consecration" and kindred topics, subjects which some of us may have failed to emphasize in our zeal to quote Acts 8 and 2:37, 38, that we did not allow this mistake upon his part to interfere with our enjoyment of the meeting.

The talk of Washington at this time is over the mistake made by the press in announcing the death of Hon. John Sherman, when that distinguished gentleman, in improved health, was sailing in the waters of the West Indies. The Washington Post says:

The most startling development attending the rumor occurred at a Spiritualistic seance in the northern section of our city. A number of devotes of Spiritualism had assembled to gather tidings from departed friends and loved ones. Messages and communications of various sorts were received from those who had gone to the other shore, and were heard and read with eagerness by their living friends and relatives.

The slate was again tied up, with the pencil placed inside. The usual scratching sound bore evidence that a message was forthcoming. When the medium opened the slate the whole company was thrown into a state of hysterical excitement to find there had been received a missive from the ex-Secretary of State. The company had nearly all read of his demise in the evening papers. The handwriting was indisputahly that of the ex-Secretary, even to the smallest flourish. The characteristics of his signature were pointed out as truly remarkable.

But, more startling still, while the company was exulting over this infallible test, the medium announced that Mr. Sherman had materialized before him. The spirit, he explained, had not had time to develop sufficient strength to appear to the uninitiated. The believers were satisfied, however, and went home with the consciousness that they now had proof enough to convert all the doubters in the world.

Yesterday morning their hopes received a crushing blow. The cruel morning papers came out with the announcement that the great statesman was alive and on a fair road to recovery.

Doubtles Mr. Thomas Jay Hudson, author of "The Law of Psychic Phenomena," will use this incident as the basis for some interesting reading matter in his forthcoming book on Spiritualism.

It may be of interest to the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to know that Mrs. Hudson, the wife of the distinguished author, was baptized several years ago at the Ninth St. Christian Church, and is one of our devoted members. Mrs. Hudson has been of great help to her husband in his philosophical researches and hopes some day to have him take his stand with our people.

The particular event of interest the past week among "our folks" was the celebration, by Brother and Sister F. D. Power, of the silver anniversary of their wedding. Brother preachers from Maryland and Virginia and a host of friends in Washington and vicinity came to do honor to our bishop and his worthy helpmeet and to wish them many more years of happiness and usefulness.

The saints of Hagerstown, Md., are jubilant over the raising of $155 for Foreign Missions. They more than doubled their apportionment and secured contributions from 300 out of a membership of 400. So thoroughly have they enjoyed this experience that Pastor P. A. Cave says they must give $200 for the May offering for Home Missions. The increase in the March collection in this section means greater things for the May offering. Our churches are determined to do great things for the home work this Jubilee Year.

Washington has lost Dr. T. DeWitte Talmage. This celebrated preacher never became closely identified with the aggressive Christian work of our city and will not be greatly missed here.

EDWARD B. BAGBY.

Texas Letter.

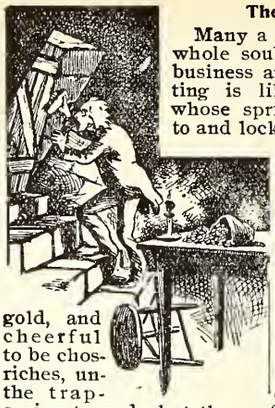
John Logan has held a successful meeting at Weimar. Circumstances were against him. During the last few years, strange to say, two-thirds of the membership had heen lost through death ond removals. That part of the state is overwhelmingly Catholic. The Protestant churches were weak in numbers and influence, but bitter and strong in prejudice against our people. And the weather was "simply awful." But in spite of all this, the meeting was a success. Six were baptized, the little band was lifted out of the "Slough of Despond," and Bro. Lingan, of Eagle Lake, was called to the pastorate for half his time.

Geo. B. Ranshaw is succeeding splendidly at San Antonio. Additions are frequent; all departments of the church are thrifty; the Sunday-school is four times as large as it was a year ago; they are preparing for a meeting; they raised their apportionment for Foreign missions, and they are planning for a Mexican mission. It requires a live church to make a record like this.

J. C. Mason is sustaining his fine record at Houston. Audiences good; ten additions during the last month; 186 at Sunday-school the last Sunday in February at the Central, and 100 more at the missions. This is good, especially when it is remembered that only a few years since, the work was begun as a mission point.

A. J. Bush, the veteran missionary, and a Missourian by birth, has at last found his final field of labor. It is Abilene and the surrounding country. He has built him a new home, and he coolly notifies the congregation that if any of them becomes dissatisfied with the preacher or the preaching he can move out, for the preacher is there to stay! Congratulations to both preachers and people.

C. W. Gibson, of Waxahachie, has recently undergone a severe surgical operation, and is doing well. Bro. Gibson is a busy banker, but he finds time to serve on the official board of his church, and also on the State Mission Board.



"Add-Ran Rally" at Waco, March 14, well advertised in the state, was a success. It was in the interest of our school by that name, and located at that place. The school has elegant property, the best of its kind in the state, estimated at $150,000; but it has a debt of $21,000. Some improvements are an absolute necessity, hence it was thought wise to try to raise $30,000, that the debt might be provided for and the improvements made. A fine beginning was made. About $10,000 was raised, and Agent Henry will take the field at once to complete the work. The question as to a change of name for the school was voted down, as was also one to change the character; it remains co-educational. President Clark goes out as president, hut we are glad to know, does not leave the school. He will devote his time to the Bible department and the chair of moral philosophy. Dr. Alhert Buxton, a Harvard and Brown man, of Nebraska, becomes Chancellor Buxton, and his wife will he a wonderful power for good, and not only Add-Ran, hut all Texas, will receive them gladly. Other teachers were re-elected: Miss Emma White, music; Miss Elizabeth Grannis, elocution; Miss Laura Yates, art; Miss Effie Rowe, primary; Prof. W. T. Hamner, academic; A. C. Easley, commercial, and W.B. Parks, natural science. The election of president was postponed till April 11. All in all, the outlook for Add-Ran is good.

The program for our next Texas missionary convention is about ready for the press. Those who ought to know call it good. Our work is better than it has been for years. The business outlook is better, the people are hopeful, and all things indicate the best convention for a long while. The Ft. Worth churches are stirring themselves in the matter of entertainment. Make a note of the time: June 5-8, and share it with us.

The last dollar of the Courier debt has been subscribed, and the editor seems beside himself. He confesses it, and asks his readers to be a little patient with him while he is adjusting himself to his strange surroundings, and not to hold him to too strict account during his peculiar experience. And we will, for we are proud of the way he has stood to his post during all the dark days of the Courier troubles. His heroism not only saves our paper, hut his noble example of duty will be a priceless lesson to the young men who have witnessed it.

The Miser.

Many a man with his whole soul immersed in business and money-getting is like the miser whose spring door shut to and locked him in forever. Men work and slave and worry and get sick and broken down, forgetting all the time that health is worth more than gold, and that a happy, cheerful home is rather to be chosen than great riches, until they hear the trap-door of disease spring to and shut them off from all the bright hopes they labored for.

A sick man cannot be happy; he cannot accomplish the work he has to do in this world; he loses the very money he is striving for; his ambition defeats itself. Any man who discovers that his strength and energy are giving way has an unfailing means of regaining his physical health and stamina in the simple yet all-potent restorative power of that wonderful "Golden Medical Discovery" originated by Dr. R. V. Pierce, of Buffalo. N. Y., the world-famous specialist in diseases of the nutritive organism.

Among the thousands who have consulted him by mail the case of Mr. Newton B. Blake, of Tiplersville, Tippah Co., Miss., as shown in the following letter indicates the remarkable efficacy of his treatment: "In December 1895 my health began to fail, I tried many different kinds of medicines and the more I took the worse the disease grew. Finally in April when I was busy with the farm work my health got so bad that I could not hold out to work one hour. My breath became short and I was weak and nervous, and oftentimes would spit blood. I was unable to work. I tried one of the doctors in the vicinity but failed to obtain relief. I seemed to grow worse. My father received a book from Dr. Pierce in which I read of a case similar to mine, and decided to write to Dr. Pierce. He recommended me to take his 'Golden Medical Discovery.' After taking six bottles of this remedy I can recommend it as one of the best medicines to build up the system. I am now enjoying good health."

Torpid liver and constipation are surely and speedily cured by Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They never gripe. They regulate, tone up and invigorate the liver, stomach and bowels. No substitute urged by mercenary dealers is as good.

Preachers and Impressions—VI.

OLD HYMNS AND SPIRITUAL SONGS.

It is no matter when, it is no matter where, but the robin's evening carol was ended, the sweet-voiced thrush had gone to his slumbers, and over a small clearing in a great forest the evening shadows were deepening.

On the north side of an east and west road, through the clearing, its owner had erected a log house and was gathering around him the comforts and conveniences of a pioneer's life.

By the side of the house, at the east of the front door, there were large snowballs and flowering almonds, and on the west of the door there was a bed of lilies and a bush of roses, and a little to the west of the house borders of pinks and sweetwilliams were in bloom.

At the gate I turned from the road to the right and stepped into a path leading to the house through a grass-covered yard.

There was no one in sight and a quiet and lonely air rested upon the scene.

Hearing singing I stepped behind a little tree from which I could look through the open door into the main room of the house.

A woman was sitting at a little table on which there was a lighted candle, and standing by her chair was a sturdy blue-eyed boy about ten years of age.

It was Saturday evening, and the husband and father was away, and they were to be alone for the night.

The dim light falling over their faces revealed the fact that they were impressed with their loneliness.

They were softly singing:

"The day is past and gone,
The evening shades appear;
O, may we all remember well
The night of death draws near.

Lord, keep us safe this night,
Secure from every fear,
Beneath the pinions of thy love,
Till morning light appear."

They finished the song, and the boy says: "Mother, sing some of the hymns they sing at meeting." Handing him a book she said: "Select those which you wish me to sing." He understood the "index of first lines," and readily found the hymns and songs which had impressed his mind and heart.

Children's hearts are ever touched by the calm and beautiful in nature, and he selected a poet's picture of flowers, life and trust:

"By cool Siloam's shady rill
How fair the lily grows!
How sweet the breath beneath the hill,
Of Sharon's dewy rose!"

Inspired by the tenderness of the song, and quietly leading on the heart of her boy, she started grand old Ortonville:

"Majestic sweetness sits enthroned
Upon the Savior's brow;
His head with radiant glories crowned,
His lips with grace o'erflow."

The boy was in the habit of standing at the gate and watching heavily loadad stages and hundreds of wagons go hurrying by in the tide of emigration to the West. He took the book again, and led by his enthusiastic and roving fancy, selected—

"I'm a pilgrim and I'm a stranger,
I can tarry, I can tarry but a night."

Then, to Hebron they sang:

"Thus far the Lord has led me on;
Thus far his pow'r prolongs my days;
And ev'ry ev'ning shall make known
Some fresh memorial of his grace.

I lay my body down to sleep;
Peace is a pillow for my head,
While well-appointed angels keep
Their watchful stations round my bed."

She read the twenty-third psalm, after which the boy closed the book.

I passed by the window, and they were kneeling together. Her hand was upon his shoulder, and I heard his voice in childhood's prayer.

Not wishing to intrude on their evening's quiet, I passed out through the gate, and turned in the direction of my bachelor's cabin.

I was comparing the picture which I had just seen with memory-pictures which came to me from my boyhood days.

The woman's voice seemed to have come from out the past, and the boy's expressive eyes to have looked upon me from over the years.

A summer night's full moon was casting her soft radiance over my pathway, and I walked on through the light and the shadows, saying to myself and the trees, "There comes vividly to me a picture of my mother at her work, for it was then I so often heard her singing, and the rhythm of her life was flowing on with the music and sentiment of her beautiful song."

"'Tis religion that can give Sweetest pleasures while we live;
'Tis religion must supply
Solid comfort when we die.

After death its joys will be
Lasting as eternity;
Be the living God my friend,
Then my bliss shall never end."

The great psalms, hymns and spiritual songs of the church were written by men of deep spirituality, strong convictions, ardent emotions and profound sympathy with every heart, which is struggling out toward a better life in the light of God.

Those old poems have taught and admonished millions of people, and have been the highest and noblest expressions of their love, adoration and gratitude in the worship of the Almighty.

From lofty heights of inspiration the religious poets have caught and expressed for us our feelings and emotions which we could not utter, and touched in tenderness and power every chord in our nature, from the deepest sorrow to the most exultant joy and adoration. They have written for every condition in life, and the aged may sing:

"I would not live always; I ask not to stay
Where storm after storm rises dark o'er the way."

Those in youth's bright morn, and filled with a soldier's daring, may ring out:

"Through floods and flames, if Jesus lead,
I'll follow where he go
Hinder me not, shall be my cry,
Though earth and hell oppose!"

Vast multitudes are mightily thrilled and moved, as they sing to old Coronation that stately and majestic hymn:

"All hail the power of Jesus name!
Let angels prostrate fall;
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

I entered the cabin and threw myself on the cot. I thought of the hopes and ambitions of my Western life; but memory would go back to other days, and familiar scenes and familiar faces would rise before me from out the "vasty deep," and I could not stop them.

I gave way to the fascination and followed Memory wherever she would lead.

I passed down a familiar road and stood at a well-known gate. I followed along a graveled walk and stood at the door of the house in which I was born.

The trees, the fields and the skies seemed to extend to me their hearty welcome. Four children were in our family; one was at the old home, one was in the West and two were waiting in the eternal home. From the steps where I was standing I could see over the homes of the children with whom I had played, and the scene was full of their faces and of their happy voices. One face rose bright and fair above all others, which I fondly hoped should soon honor and bless my cabin home. Before I was aware of the stealthy advance of sleep, I drifted into dreamland.

I turned from a flower-decked avenue and there stood, right before me, the familiar old meeting house.

The steps, windows, doors and front of the building looked just as they did when years before I left for the West.

I softly climbed the steps and looked in through the door, and there were my father and mother and many of my boyhood friends.

In mother's face I could read the story of her bereavement.

Father and mother were sitting in the seat which they occupied as I walked down the aisle when the people were singing:

"Come, humble sinner, in whose breast
A thousand thoughts revolve."

The leader had his tuningfork to his ear, they were ready to sing:

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me,
Let me hide myself in thee."

That hymn they sang as a prayer from their hearts for their Savior's strength and protection.

A devout and earnest sister announced No. 441, and they sang:

"Awake my soul in joyful lays,
And sing thy great Redeemer's praise;
He justly claims a song from thee,
His loving kindness, O, how free!"

The inspiration of the song aroused them and the little church rang with the music of their voices.

In the same exultant spirit they sang:

"My gracious Redeemer I love!
His praises aloud I'll proclaim,
And join the armies above
To shout his adorable name."

Mother called for some number; a peculiar silence fell upon them and in a moment, in a low sweet tone, they began:

"Time is winging us away
To our eternal home;
Life is but a winter's day—
A journey to the tomb."

I was looking at father's strong and expressive face when mother stopped singing and her eyes filled with tears. She saw me not; my heart was full and I walked down the steps, feeling that never again in this life should I look upon those dear faces.

When I awoke the air was tremulous with the music of the birds, and morning had thrown her rays of glory far up the eastern skies.

After many eventful years I saw the boy lay his mother to rest with his father on the beautiful hillside; and after bidding his boyhood a touching farewell he passed from my sight to his home in the balmy Southland.

Will All be There?

Every preacher and friend of Eureka College should attend, if possible, the conference to be held at Springfield, May 15. Pres. Hardin's call should bring a hearty response from the believers in Christian education. Now that the institution has been freed from debt and the faculty strengthened, let every one co-operate in the proposed effort for larger things.

Educational Session of the Congress.

The Educational Conference, which has been previously held in July, will be merged into the Educational Session of the Congress of Disciples of Christ meeting at St. Louis, April 25th. The address will be given by President J. H. Hardin, of Eureka, on "College Endowment." The discussion is to be led by Bros. E. V. Zollars, Clinton Lockhart, G. P. Coler. It is hoped that all brethren directly interested in the cause of education will endeavor to be present.

Sixty-one Months' Pastorate.

Report of a sixty-one months' pastorate for the Fourth Christian Church, St. Louis, Mo., beginning March 1, 1894, closing March 31, 1899: Number on roll at beginning of pastorate, 148; number attending services regularly and irregularly, 110; number of additions during these years, 196; number dismissed by letter, death, removals, etc., 184; number on roll at present, 150; money raised for missions, $496.61; number of sermons delivered, 620; number pastoral calls, 3,700; number of funerals, 100; number cottage prayer-meetings, 200; number personal comfort counsels, 100; number poor assisted, 200; number specially comforted, 100; money received, $5,073.00; money donated to church, $397.00; number of weddings, 50.

There are some good people here. The field is one of the hardest in the city, being in the midst of a foreign population largely, and they need a self-sacrificing, consecrated, wise, painstoking shepherd, one who knows how to lead.

W. H. KERN.

Who Will Help?

Down in one of the most destitute if not the most destitute region of our state a young married man, native, "to the manor born," has been preaching faithfully the gospel of Jesus. His wages have been poor; ofttimes he has been with his family on the verge of actual want, yet he has bravely stuck to his post, doing the work of God in that needy field. Recently, however, the greater demands of a growing family have made it impossible for him to remain without help. He wrote of this to the board, but it is already burdened to the full measure of its receipts and more. It was a matter that needed quick, decisive action. It was a needy field. He was adapted to it. He is worthy, his character unblemished. What must be done?

I wrote him at once that I would be personally responsible for the amount asked for, $10, for one month, and I would try and find five others who would join me in giving the same amount, and this would keep him in the field till the convention in October. Who will do it? It is one of the very neediest fields. He is a good man. It is our own state. This is missionary work indeed. Who will join me in his support?

I will gladly publish the names of any who will do this. Write at once.

Yours in His name,
T. A. ABBOTT.

Our Educational Interests Are One.

It will be seen that the responses to Hiram's appeal are not confined to the state or sectional lines. The names come from the Far East and the Far West. Massachusetts, California, Texas and Minnesota are represented. In fact, almost every state in the union is responding. This is encouraging. It is teaching us a lesson that our colleges should not be looked upon merely as local institutions. While the state in which this college is located may be specially interested, it ought to be true that the entire brotherhood is interested in every institution that we have and will contribute to the support of any college that they may make an appeal. Why should it not be so? We are calling upon all our brotherhood everywhere in the firm belief that our appeal will strike a responsive cord regardless of geographical considerations. Of course we just push our interests especially in Ohio, but we hope and believe that the brotherhood of Ohio is large enough to give to other institutions besides Hiram when called on to do so.

"AWAKE! AWAKE! PUT ON THY STRENGTH."

The time has come for large activity and fuller response. The great movement is certainly launched before the brotherhood. Everybody who reads the papers knows what we are trying to do. Send in your name now. Do not delay a moment longer. Let not this great movement fail because of indifference or neglect. Address E. V. ZOLLARS.

Why Women are Nervous.

(British Medical News.)

The frequent cases of nervous prostration or utter collapse of the nervous system under which women "go all to pieces," as the saying is, have caused much thought and investigation on the part of physicians.

Certain inorganic substances are well known to cause various forms of nervous diseases which are readily traced to the poisons producing them. Further research leads to the belief that alum is a prevailing cause of so-called nervous prostration, for the symptoms it produces on the nervous system after its absorption into the blood are very remarkable indeed. Experiments physiologically made upon animals by Orfila, Professors Hans Mayer, Paul Seim and others, show that alum frequently produces no visible symptoms for many days after its introduction into the body. Then follow loss of appetite and other alimentary disturbances, and finally a serious prostration of the whole nervous system. The most prominent physicians now believe that "nervous prostration" and many affections of the nerves from which both men and women suffer are the continued absorption of alum into the system.

It is probable that many medical men are unaware of the extent to which salts of alumina may be introduced into the body, being under the impression that the use of alum in bread is prohibited. Alum, however, is still used surreptitiously to some extent to whiten bread, and very largely in making cheap kinds of baking powder. In families where baking powder is generally used great care should be exercised to procure only those brands made from cream of tartar. The alum powders may generally be distinguished by the lower price at which they are sold.

Allcock's
POROUS PLASTERS

Perhaps you sometimes use a porous plaster? But do you use the best one? And do you know which the best one is? The one whose reputation covers 40 years and whose record of cures and wonderful popularity gave birth to the scores of imitations. And which is this? Why, Allcock's—the plaster they all try to imitate, and the one you want because it cures. It cures by absorption and does not irritate the skin or cause any annoyance.

Hiram College Jubilee Endowment.

Th re is nothing more inspiring than the words of true friends. The messages of encouragement we are receiving give us large hope for the success of our Great Jubilee Endowment Movement. I submit a few of these encouraging words, trusting that they may be an inspiration to others:

"I am rejoicing still in all I see from Hiram and still congratulate you heartily in view of it all." B. H. HAYDEN.
Cleveland, O.

"Count me among the vast numbers who will help your 'Jubilee.' I have been watching with much interest this new movement of yours to endow Hiram College. I trust your success in this effort may soon be assured, for it is certainly most worthy." WM. H. CORD.
Hazel Green, Ky.

"Am interested in Hiram. Have already signed a card for the dollar or more endowment. You have my influence, prayers and best wishes for a grand success at your Jubilee. Hope I may be able to meet and rejoice with you on that occasion." L. SOUTHMAYD.
Akron, O.

"My name I forward you with the promise of aiding you as much as I can."
MARTIN KNUDSEN.
Oakland, Cal.

"I am heartily in sympathy with the plan of endowment by the people, and it shall have my hearty support, though that be very small."
J. E. DAVIS.
Valparaiso, Ind.

"I have long intended to join the Jubilee movement, but neglected writing. Put me down with best wishes." G. T. SMITH.
Albia, Ia.

"I am a widow of limited means, yet will try to give my mite to the Hiram Endowment Fund when required, and wish you abundant success." MRS. LIZZIE P. STOCKMAN.
Richmond Dale, O.

"I hereby agree to pay one dollar or more for Hiram Endowment, according to your plan in the Standard of Jan. 21st. You and your college are both strangers to me, but I want to have fellowship wilh you and your work."
W. F. HUNTER.
Goodland, Kan.

"Our brethren should respond to this call by the thousands and be ready next year to take another and another of our colleges until all are fully and safely endowed. Your plan is the climax of missionary work. First educate and secondly send out." JONAS W. BERKLEY.
Salem, Ind.

"I am deeply interested in Hiram's welfare, and it is with great pleasure that I hasten to join the movement. Kindly enroll my name in the Hiram army." JOHN W. MESSENGER.
Proctor, Minn.

The above are samples of scores of letters that we are receiving.

State Mission Notes.

The district convention, at Cameron, was well attended when you consider the awful weather and the fearful roads. The program also was marked by fewer absentees than is at all common. The sermons and addresses were all of an high order and had the ring of the pure metal in them.

One feature of the program deserves more than passing notice. It was in the hands of A. P. Terrell, and he skillfully handled it, of course: "Places for Missionary Work in the District," The word had gone out that there was no mission work to do in that territory and the presentation of this subject developed the fact that there were thirty three places in these countries that needed missionary work, and the field was not exhaustively considered either.

There is room for not less than twenty-five new churches in that territory. The churches in the Platte district are not made of the stuff of which I think they are if they do not at once furnish the means to put a live, strong evangelist in the field.

But here is the note; I want you all to read it. This is true of every district in the state. But how much more is it true of the great territory in the South part of the state! I wish I could arouse the indifferent ones among us. I don't fear the man who is in opposition, he is but few, but it is the indifferent, the neglectful ones that we must reach. The need of our work must be presented as never before. There are hundreds of churches in the state which simply ignore all appeals to help in the work of evangelizing Missouri. Why is it? Let the above figures give the answer. We have over 1,500 cangregations in the state, nearly 1,600; but this number can be doubled and still have mission work to do. We ought to have 300,000 people out of the 3,000,000 inhabitants; this would be one in ten.

I appeal to the ministry of the state for that fellowship in this work which alone will insure success. Without your hearty co-operation we must fail. Have the churches for which you labor done anything this year for this holy cause? Did you ask them to do it? If not, is the reason of your failure such as God will approve? The men we have in the field are needing their funds; the barren fields are calling for sowers and the ripe fields for harvesters, and our treasury is empty. We must act at once. Yours in His name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

University of Virginia.

The deep significance and far-reaching import of the advance made in Bible teaching at this University cannot yet be estimated. The progress has been rapid beyond the most sanguine expectations of its friends. It is only three years since Dr. Willett was sent here by the C. W. B. M. The course continued six weeks, and was followed next session by a six weeks' course, offered by your staff correspondent, Rev. Charles A. Young. This session the courses were prolonged to three months, and Mr. Young was aided by short courses given by Dr. Sampey, of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, and Dr. Grammer, late of the Episcopal Theological Seminary.

When the work began three years ago there was no endowment specifically provided for it; now we have an endowment, paid and pledged, of about $12,000, and a bright prospect for completing the $25,000 endowment of the John B. Cary Bible Lectureship. When Mr. Young is not otherwise engaged he will devote himself to holding Bible institutes and raising this endowment.

But Mr. Young will have absorbing duties at the University next session, for he has been employed by the C. W. B. M. to teach the Bible here for nine months, and has been officially engaged by the University as instructor in Hebrew. This latter appointment will be of great value to the University: directly, in providing adequately for work in Hebrew; indirectly, by relieving the Professor of Greek and enabling him to offer for the entire session a course in New Testament Greek.

Next session, then, the University will offer New Testament Greek, and Hebrew English Bible. Mr. Young's Bible courses will be supplemented by short courses by Dr. Coke Smith, late of the Theological Department of Vanderbilt, and Dr. Moore, of the Presbyterian Seminary of Richmond.

The courses will be, as heretofore, totally undenominational, nonsectarian and non-theological. We are not competing in any wise with theological seminaries, but the candidate for the ministry of whatever denomination may acquire here all of his preliminary training, and the minister who wishes to review or supplement his previous studies may find here ample opportunities.

With Mr. Young's prudence, intelligent zeal and energy the promise and potency of the Bible work at the University of Virginia is incalculable. CHARLES W. KENT.

Eureka College Notes.

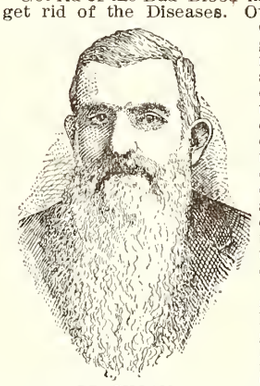
Eureka College people have been too busy to say much for some time, but the silence does not indicate that we are asleep. The second term of one of the most harmonious and busy sessions of the college is about closing. Our faculty and students are friends and harmonious colaborers. A healthful college spirit prevails. We have a good man to represent us in our next state oratorical contest in the person of Bro. L. O. Lehman. We have a good man, Bro. H. G. Harward, who will represent Illinois in the interstate contest, to be held in Lincoln, Neb., this year. Our young people have shown themselves worthy and their aspirations seem to be in the direction of higher culture, true scholarship and noble Christian character.

2. The next term begins March 28, and there are reasons to believe that it will be a splendid term, with good attendance. Our healthful location, moral influences, good building and excellent faculty are most worthy attractions to young people and patrons. The Preparatory, Collegiate, Biblical, Literary, Normal, Commercial, Classical, Oratorical, Music and Art Departments furnish ample room for all.

3. Professor Goodnight, now in Germany, is to go into the faculty next fall as the teacher of modern languages, for which he is so well prepared.

4. Movements are active towards the fuller endowment of the college which will add greatly to the usefulness and power of the institution. A cordial invitation is given to all our people of means to take a liberal hand in this work.

5. An educational conference, composed of all who are interested in higher Christian education, is called to meet Monday, May 15th, in Springfield, Ill. We ought to have a great meeting. Mark the date and plan to be present. The meeting is not for the purpose of raising money, but to discuss plans and unify our work along this great line of Christian effort.



6. The field secretary travels over the state in the interests of the college. Among other things he desires to deliver a free lecture in every church on "Higher Christian Education." Usually no collection is taken, or public appeal made for money. These lectures are rather educational, prepared especially for the young people, but to which all are cordially invited.

BLOOD CURE SENT FREE.

A Cure for Blood and Skin Diseases, Eczema, Pimples, Scrofula, Blood Poison, Cancer, Kidney Trouble, Boils.

MEDICINE SENT ALL CHARGES PREPAID.

Get rid of the Bad Blood in your system and you get rid of the Diseases. Over 30 years ago Dr. Gillam, the distinguished Atanta specialist, discovered a scientific combination of remedies that had the effect of literally driving the poisoned, diseased matter out of the blood, bones and entire system, tus curing the disease and at the same time producing a fine constitutional effect, building up the broken down constitution.

DR. GILLAM.

This remedy is known as B. B. B.—(Botanic Blood Balm), and has gained a wide world renown, so that it is for sale everywhere. That every sufferer may test its wonderful curative powers, a sample bottle will be sent, free of charge, and prepaid, to anyone who writes for it. This is a liberal offer, to prove at our expense that B. B. B. cures all Blood and Skin Diseases. Thousands upon thousands have been cured, even after doctors and all other remedies had utterly failed.

If you have old, persistent sores, pimples, distressing eruptions of the skin, painful sores on hands, arms, or legs, itching sensation, irritating skin troubles, eczema, scrofula, ulcers, Blood Poison, fever sores, mercurial rheumatism, face covered with little sores, cancer or any blood taint—then give B. B. B. a trial, because B. B. B.—Botanic Blood Balm—is made for just such cases, and it cures, to stay cured, all stubborn blood diseases. That distressing affliction, Eczema, is always cured by the use of two to six bottles.

Deadly Cancer of the face, neck, legs, lip, eating cancer or sores, cured by B. B. B.—Botanic Blood Balm. B. B. B. cures by driving the deadly, virulent poison, which causes cancer, out of the blood. This is the only cure, and B. B. B. is the only remedy that can do this. In the same way B. B. B. cures Blood Poison, whether inherited or acquired, producing ulcers, painful swellings, blotches, pimples, copper-colored spots, falling of the hair, sores in the throat or tongue, scrofula. B. B. B. tested for 30 years. Large bottles for sale by all druggists for $1.00 or 6 bottles (full treatment) $5.00. For sample bottle address Blood Balm Co., 137 Mitchell St., Atlanta, Ga., and trial bottle and medical book will be sent, all charges prepaid. Describe your trouble and we will include free medical advice.

While he is glad to be invited he takes the liberty, as he represents a common cause, to go anywhere, sending his dates ahead, in economical order. It is often very confusing to try to change a date, so adjust to the time the best possible. Give the meeting large publicity, the people a cordial invitation to attend and the secretary will try to make the meeting useful and interesting. The meetings so far have been most excellent and appreciative. Let us cordially work together in the King's business. J. G. WAGGONER.

Foreign Mission Notes.

Baby Henry Stevens is working away earnestly at his trade, namely, making all happy.

Teizo Kawai is in Akita and is doing fine work.

Mrs. Chapman teaches a class in English in the school in Constantinople. Mr. Chapman is starting a night school in English for the young men and women.

Garabed Kevorkian reports two baptisms in Tocat, Turkey. He writes that some of the revolutionary Armenians are doing all in their power to oppose his work. They are trying to have his chapel closed. Lately three of the brethren were turned out of their employment. One was attacked by two men while going to church. He was insulted and smitten two or three times on the face.

OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, MARCH 30th.

What Has Been Done In Home Missions.

In the Great Northwest.

The American Christian Missionary Society has made its beneficent hand felt in the great Northwest, and considering the means entrusted to its care, what it has accomplished is simply marvelous. Many congregations assemble to-day and many spires point heavenward because of timely aid rendered by the society. J. W. JENKINS.

In Oklahoma.

The church at Stillwater, Okla., is a monument to the American Christian Missionary Society. I was sent there eighteen months ago. Now we have a church of 100 faithful, active members, also a Sunday-school of 100. We own the best church building in the town and our first missionary collection was $25.61.
VIRTES WILLIAMS.

In Minnesota.

I doubt if the Home Board has ever made a wiser investment than it made in St. Paul, Minn. A. R. MOORE.

In Nebraska.

We owe much in Nebraska to the timely aid and energetic assistance given by the American Christian Missionary Society, also for the kind of men sent to do the work. The place we hold would have been much behind the place we hold to-day, without her ministry. Let us rally to her support with a generous offering, that she may reach out into other fields with a sure hand. W. A. BALDWING.

In New York.

If the Board can put an evangelist in Buffalo for a year it will be amply justified by results.
JAY A. EGBERT.

S. R. HAWKINS.

In Kansas.

"Our plea" is peculiarly adapted to the Western country. People are free to break away from old creeds and old associations. Help us win Kansas and we will win the world for Christ. The churches are worthy of assistance. In the development of their respective fields, many have passed through fiery trials and without complaint. With just a little help they could accomplish vastly more.
O. S. COOK.

In Washington.

The church at Tacoma, Wash., now numbers 102. Last year it gave more than its apportionment to Foreign Missions. It gave for all purposes over $14 a member. The church grows yearly in influence and power. This church would have been lost to the brotherhood had it not been for the American Christian Missionary Society. We feel that we owe the Board a lasting debt of gratitude.
B. H. SINGENFELTER.

In the South.

For the past few years the Home Board has been turning its attention to the South as a mission field. This has been a paying investment on the part of the Board. Without such help our work in the South would not be in its present splendid condition.
M. F. HARMON.

In South Carolina.

In behalf of all the churches of South Carolina we tender our sincere thanks to the American Christian Missionary Society for their generous aid during some of the years of our greatest trials. Without this aid results with us would have been meagre. The outlook at present is encouraging. The fields are ripe, but our means are deficient and we must have help. We pray that every state and every church may rise to the full measure of responsibility, and that the results of the May offering will show that we really mean America for Christ. C. W. ERWIN.

In Oregon.

Previous to Jan. 1, 1898, the Pendleton Church had been struggling along for sometime, doing what it could toward keeping the work in progress. A brother had been acting as elder and preaching for them for several months with little or no compensation. The church had never been able to employ a pastor for his whole time.

On Jan. 1, 1898, the A. C. M. S. came to the help of Pendleton, and a missionary was employed for three-fourths time at Pendleton, the other one-fourth time being given to Echo, a little church some miles away where preaching had not been had for sometime. Since Jan. 1, 1899, Pendleton has been receiving the entire time of this missionary, and the Echo work goes on with a preacher for one-fourth time.

During the year 1898 Pendleton raised $125 for the salary of the missionary. For this current year Pendleton assumes $300 of the salary.

These results could not possibly have been accomplished without the help of the Home Board. The church is going forward slowly but surely, and at the rate of growth manifested in little more than one year will, ere many years, be able to support the preaching of the Word unaided.

Pendleton is indeed grateful to the A. C. M. S. for this help, and fully appreciates the work the Home Board is doing. These facts the church here presents as a testimonial of the good work being done by the Home Missionary Board. C. A. DOTSON.

Pendleton, Oregon, March 8, 1899.

In Chicago.

The Hyde Park Church of Christ was organized Oct. 7, 1894, by H. L. Willett, with thirty-two charter members. At the first anniversary, in 1895, there were fifty-eight names on the roll. At the anniversary of 1896 there were seventy three members. In 1897, eighty-three; in 1898, 115 members.

Through an arrangement with the Home Board H. L. Willett became pastor. The Home Board has carried the church from the beginning. The church has grown every year in numbers, in benevolence and in spirituality.

It grew out of a circle of students at the University of Chicago, and has been from the beginning in close touch with the work of the Disciples' Divinity House.

The church is situated in one of the most beautiful suburbs of Chicago, between Jackson and Washington Parks, four blocks from the University of Chicago, accessible by street car and railroad from every direction. A Church of Christ in Hyde Park was seen to be a necessity to provide the increasing number of students a temporary church home, and a church of their own faith to scores of families living in the community and constantly moving in.

The one thing that is hampering the growth and work of the church is the need of a church building. This is the immediate hope and effort of the church. It has been a liberal giver to all missionary enterprises, and has the enviable record for giving more per member than any other church in the brotherhood. The Hyde Park Church, standing in such a community, at the door of so great a University, testifying for the Christianity of Christ and his apostles, is the fruit of the Home Board. The church recognizes its debt of gratitude and will never forget the nurture and protection of its care-taking mother, now that it releases her from any further help. The child will now turn around and do for its mother, as a token of loving gratitude, to the extent of its ability.

Last year the church paid between $300 and $400 into the treasuries of the missionary societies. The first appropriation toward the church was $1,000. That amount has been reduced gradually to $600, at which point the church declared itself self-supporting last November. ERRETT GATES, Pastor.

In Pennsylvania.

Our work in Erie, Pa., was organized on March 3, 1889, and is now a little over ten years old. E. L. Frazier was engaged by the State Board of Pennsylvania to come to Erie and start the work. There were thirty-four charter members, some of whom had lived in Erie for years. The work grew from the start. A lot was selected in a very central location costing $6,600. A brick tabernacle was erected on this lot at a cost of something over $6,000. A debt of over $5,000 still remains on the property. The lot has advanced in value, so that it is now worth about $10,000. The present pastor commenced work Oct. 15, 1898. The total enrollment of the church since its organization has been 351. The membership, however, has been largely a transcient one, and the larger part of this total has come and gone; so that to-day, the effective resident membership is but little over 100. Among these we have many who are very faithful, and some who have stood by the work from the beginning at great sacrifice. The congregation on the whole is poor in this world's goods, however, and the work is maintained only by a struggle all around. We hope for better things in the future. There is now a revival of interest and a more hopeful and aggressive spirit in the church. We believe there is a good future before the work here and that the prayers and labors of the past and the present will find their fruition in a strong and flourishing church of the New Testament type in this beautiful city. M. B. RYAN.

In the Maritime Provinces.

In 1890 Bro. E. W. Darst and wife made a visit to these provinces in the interest of Home Missions, visiting nearly all the churches in these parts, and it is not too much to say that they did more to wake up a new interest in all our home missionary work than any effort of the kind that was ever made in these provinces. There were quite a few added to the saved as an immediate result of their labors, particularly in Cornwallis; but the revival in our several missionary interests, which we are feeling to this day, can hardly be overestimated.

In 1892 Bro. J. H. Hardin, who was then the secretary of the Home Society, came to St. John, N. B., in the interest of the home work and attended our annual meeting, and all who were at that grand meeting remember the uplift this strong man gave us along the lines of our Ho ne Mission work. The influence of that meeting, and the interest taken in our work by the American Christian Missionary Society, as a result of this visit, cannot be expressed in words. The results alone can tell the story. In 1893 Bro. H. A. Northcutt came to the provinces and labored for two months, the immediate results of his labors being 41 additions to the churches where he labored, and a deep interest taken in the work in Halifax, N. S. By his representation of the work in this city the American Board made a grant of $250 a year to aid the work in this important centre, and fully sixty have been added to the church in this city as an immediate result of these labors.

Bro. Lhamon also spent about two months in these provinces in 1884. His meetings added sixty-one to the church where he labored.

The visit of Bro. J. A. Lord, in 1897, when he attended our annual meeting held at Leonardsville, N. B., will not soon be forgotten by those who attended that meeting. The uplift he gave us, and the assurance of continued interest in our work by the Mother Society in Cincinnati encouraged us greatly. All of these timely visits and labors of these strong men were more or less under the guarantee and support of the American Christian Missionary Society. The Home Society also made a grant of $250 a year to Picton, N. S., which has been continued for over two years. The work done in this field gives assurance that success will be sure if the work is continued. A few faithful brethren have been gathered together for worship, who have never before enjoyed the privilege of the church of their choice and some six have been added by baptism in a town where such a thing as scriptural baptism had not been seen in forty years. E. C. FORD.

In Louisiana.

Louisiana, like most of the gulf states, has been sleeping in the lap of conservatism. Catholicism is strongly entrenched. Protestantism, seperated into hostile camps, is but poorly equipped to advance the cause of the Lord. Yet, this is a land of wealth and culture. New Orleans, the chief city of the South, is also the strategic point for nearly all important movements. The Home Board, seeing the difficulties in the way and the paucity of local help, yet fully alive to the importance of planting a few strong churches in this state, has for ten years helped to keep a competent man at work in New Orleans. Through the agency of the Home Board a convention was called at Lake Charles two years ago; a State Board elected and an evangelist put in the field. The work has been enlarging all the time. Scattered Disciples have been brought together, scores have been baptized and added to the ranks, churches and Sunday-schools have been organized and the despondents have been awakened to new hope and activity. This work, now so promising, could not have been begun and carried on but for the agency and timely help of the Home Board. Shreveport, our Northern city, a most important commercial center and the gateway of the Southwest, has also been helped, and a capable man is now giving his whole time to the work in this growing city. We are not yet out of the woods; but the light is breaking, and we are pressing on, believing that there are still larger results for the future. Louisiana can but feel grateful for the timely and generous help that she has received, and prays the Lord of the harvest to bless the Home Society and greatly enlarge her borders.

In Utah.

As the representative of the A. C. M. S. I went to Salt Lake City, Utah, in 1890, to build up a church in that city. The work had been begun by Bro. Cowden a few months before I arrived there. We had no home or lot at that time and but few members. When I gave up the work over a year ago there was a good lot, church building and parsonage, worth at least $20,000. The congregation numbered 150 or 160 good members. This is one of the most liberal churches I have ever known. This work is due wholly to the fostering care of the A. C. M. S., and in my judgment is one of the most needed works we have undertaken.

Since January, 1898, Bro. W. H. Bagby has been in charge of this work, and by his wise and faithful labors the church in Salt Lake has made great progress. They are missionary to the core and a credit to our brotherhood. The A. C. M. S. deserves to be generously and liberally supported in the work it has in hand. The many needy and fruitful fields of the West cannot be cultivated without some assistance, and I hope we shall see every cent of the $100,000 raised in this Jubilee Year for Home Missions. B. F. CLAY.

In Arizona.

There are neighborhoods in the territory of Arizona where a preacher is unknown, where there is no Sunday-school, no religious meetings of any kind. A preacher told me a few days ago that on the trip from which he was then returning he had organized two Sunday-scools, and that the superintendent in each was a member of the Christian Church, who was teaching in the neighborhood. At one of these places he was the first preacher that had visited them. He promised me a letter in which he would give me other examples of destitution and of many open doors. This man is not one of our preachers and is supported by other peoples. Tempe is the seat of the Arizona Normal School, where 180 young men and young women are preparing for teachers. These young people are the flower of the territory; they are destined to direct the thought, morality and spirituality of this territory for ages to come. Every denomination is alive to this fact, and are active in their efforts to establish strong churches here, knowing that strong churches here means churches all over the territory. The work of the Christian Church is in a hopeful condition. With a united effort at home and proper assistance from abroad we will soon be in the front rank.

Dunmore (Scranton).—Five more confessions Sunday evening, March 26, making 23 in our 10 days' meeting.—R. R. BULGIN.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Brockton, March 28.—Two additions and two baptisms within the past two weeks.—G. A. REIUL.

MICHIGAN.

Ann Arbor.—A three weeks' meeting by I. N. McCash, of Des Moines, Ia., closed Sunday, March 26, resulting in 10 baptisms; also six by letter.—W. M. FORREST, pastor.

OHIO.

Columbus, March 27.—The Central Church is in a fine meeting with James Small, evangelist; 13 accessions, eight baptisms the first eight days. Splendid audiences and deep spiritual interest pervades the meeting.—R. W. ABBERLEY, pastor.

NEBRASKA.

Waco, March 27.—Meeting one week old; over 25 from all sources. We organized last night with 52 members. Pastor O. A. Adams, an excellent young man, located. Will continue another week. This is considered a great victory for Christ.—SAMUEL GREGG, evangelist.

NEW MEXICO.

Lordsburgh, March 26.—Rev. Edward Beal has just closed a week's meeting with one addition, a man of middle age, well versed in the Scripture. Bro. Beal is a wide-awake Christian and a good worker. Under his supervision our organization was perfected and everything set in order.—ANNA M. OWNBY, church clerk.

VIRGINIA.

The brief meeting at Danville closed to-day; 24 confessed Christ and four were added from the denominations. The church building would not hold those who came. Last night many had to be turned away. The Bible readings were well attended. F. M. Anderson, the pastor, is from Missouri. He is doing a fine work.—W. H. BOOK.

GEORGIA.

Savannah, March 28.—We have just closed a short meeting in this city with 30 additions. More than half of these are young men. This was a fine meeting for this Southland. This is a hopeful field for our cause. Bro. Bosworth, who has been pastor here for two years, will resign soon and seek a field North. His health is not good in Savannah. I will begin a meeting in a few days in St. Louis, Mo.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

WISCONSIN.

Sugar Grove, March 27.—I recently held successful meetings here and at Pleasant Ridge, aggregating 65 additions in 26 days; nearly all conversions. Had one confession here yesterday and one the Sunday before. Have received a unanimous call to remain here as pastor another year, but much prefer to give my whole time to evangelistic work. I prefer to labor for pastorless churches. Or I might be secured to labor as district evangelist. Good references given.—S. J. PHILLIPS.

KANSAS.

Erie.—Our meeting closed here March 15th with four added at last service. Total additions, 58; 43 by baptism. Bro. C. M. Wickham, of Kansas City, did the preaching. It was an excellent meeting. We now number 331 members. Church in the best condition in her history.—C. J. SAUNDERS.

Yates Center, March 28.—On March 12th I closed a very pleasant year's work with the church at La Fontaine, Kansas. Our last meeting was at the water to baptize a young lady who had heretofore been a Methodist.—C. W. YARD.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, March 25.—Five additons to the North Park Church.—J. M. CANFELD.

Elkhart, March 29.—One addition here last Lord's day. Monday, at Vistula, 14 miles east of here, I baptized eight persons. On the river bank a man witnessed the "good confession" and was forthwith baptized and "went on his way rejoicing."—ALLY MAX LAIRD.

Lafayette.—Five added last week, four of which were confessions; 30 since Jan. 1.—S. S. LAPPIN.

Remington, March 25.—J. M. Canfield, of Indianapolis, closed a splendid meeting with the church here on the 23 inst., with 46 additions; 39 by baptism.—ROBT. PARKER.

Thorntown, March 27.—Meetings with home forces have closed; 28 accessions and the deepening of the spiritual life of the church.—LEE TINSLEY, pastor.

OHIO.

Akron, March 27.—We just closed a glorious meeting of four weeks here. Six months since we started to work in the Swall Mission in the south end of this city. We found a Sunday-school of 50; now it numbers 100. The second Sunday of our meeting we organized a church with 45 members, and two weeks later we numbered 90; 45 by baptism, and 15 reclaimed. The remainder of the 90 came by letter from some of our own churches. This makes the fourth Church of Christ in this city of 50,000, the results of the missionary efforts of the Central Church. I should have mentioned in regard to the meeting that there were five whole families among the converts, and lo, not a single infant!—J. P. SALA.

MISSOURI.

Marceline, Mar. 27.—March 19th two sisters united with the church by baptism; March 26th, a brother from the Episcopalians was immersed.—ISOM ROBERTS.

Piedmont, March 30.—The church here and at Farmington both feel encouraged with the general outlook. Additions to both congregations this month contribute to Foreign Missions, getting ready for Orphans' Home contribution, etc. Four young ladies who have accepted the Savior are to be baptized. Expect to have a baptismal service Easter Sunday. Improvements of church building have been almost completed.—A. M. HARRAL.

New Franklin and Booneville.—Five additions March 19th at New Franklin and three at Booneville the following Sunday. At both places there are marked signs of spiritual life and activities. In January the pastor's wife organized a Junior Society of Christian Endeavor which now has a membership of 41, and attendance of 50. A Ladies' Aid Society, formed same time has already contributed $50 to church funds.—G. F. ASSITER, pastor.

ILLINOIS.

Blandinsville, March 27.—Two additions to the Old Bedford Church yesterday at our regular service.—A. R. ADAMS.

Rushville, March 29.—Eleven additions during the month of March; seven by baptism.—W. A. MELOAN.

Chapin, March 30.—Two young men made the good confession at my regular appointment at Concord last Sunday.—IVAN W. AGEE.

Decatur, March 27.—S. M. Martin's meeting still continues with great interest. The big building was crowded to the doors last night; there were 14 additions. This makes 83 to date. The meeting will continue over Sunday.—J. P. RICHARDSON.

Pontiac, March 22.—Thirty-two added to date. Church has extended a call to B. C. Black, of Winchester, to become pastor. Outlook here is hopeful.—F. W. BURNHAM.

Girard, March 27.—Began here the 19th. Large audiences; one confession, a young man. Three added at Le Roy, two by baptism, one reclaimed. Will begin a meeting here next Lord's day.—E. O. SHARPE.

Parkersburg.—The brethren of Parkersburg have rebuilt their house and are preparing for better work. Bro. Zack A. Harris, of Fort Wayne, Ind., will begin a month's meeting here on the 12th of April but no regular minister for the year has been employed.—X.

Hume, March 24.—Evangelist R. L. Brown just closed a successful meeting of three weeks with nine additions; five baptisms. The Newman and Hume churches have done well in securing Rev. Brown's services for the past year, as he is a strong man and interesting talker.—MRS. MATTIE DEVER.

Palmyra, March 29.—The work at this place is progressing very satisfactorily indeed. Our congregations are very large and the attention and interest all that could be desired. We had one excellent confession at our Sunday service.—REMLA SNILLOC.

University of Chicago, March 24.—J. F. Findly, while a student in the University this quarter, conducted a three weeks' meeting for an independent mission in this city, and as a result of his ministry there, on the evening of the 20th, a Church of Christ was organized with 42 members and five confessions at the completion of the work of organization. His work was highly appreciated and he goes to Indiana to hold some meetings there the prayers and good wishes of this new church will follow him.—H. L. ATKINSON.

IOWA.

Madrid, March 27.—Three by letter here last night. All departments of work flourishing; $15.30 for missions.—ROY CALDWELL, pastor.

Avery, March 26.—I haptized seven young persons at regular appointment at Flosis last Saturday evening. Our young people of Bladensburg gave an Easter entertainment. The proceeds will go to our Orphans' Home in St. Louis. Will take every missionary collection this year.—B. W. PETTIT.

Clarinda, March 26.—Beginning the fourth week in the Harlow-Murphy meeting. Fourteen additions to-day; 55 to date. Interest increasing.—C. H. WHITE, pastor.

Delta, March 27.—One added by letter at Whatcheer yesterday; $38.19 given for the Benevolent Association, to be divided between the Orphans' Home and the Old People's Home.—JOEL BROWN.

Villisca, March 10.—W. P. Shamhart just closed a five weeks' meeting here with 40 additions. The audiences were large throughout. Never has a meeting been held here that exerted such a strong and far-reaching influence for the cause of New Testament truths.—A. J. CHAMBERS, elder.

Oskaloosa.—Seven added the first two Sundays of Bro. A. E. Cory's pastorate.

Granger.—One added and $26 for missions; G. E. Roberts of Drake University preaching.

University Place.—One confession and one by letter. A. M. Haggard preaching.

Fort Dodge.—Short meeting in progress. Six added. Hope for more. W. J. Dodge preaching and David Lyon singing.

Webster City.—Four added last Sunday in March. W. A. Moore preaching.

Marion.—Two added on March 26th.—Geo. E. Platt preaching.

Cedar Rapids.—A short meeting by the pastor, J. M. Rudy. Twenty added. Six baptized March 30th and others will be on April 2nd.

The Victory.*

EMMA D. ANDREWS.

The vail is rent and from its earthly temple
Th' immortal spirit takes its everlasting flight;
In vain our tear-dimmed eyes the way would follow
To where our loved one's gather on the shores of light.

High aspirations, strong and earnest strivings,
I seem to hear the voice that through these years
Bade us attain life's highest, noblest ideals,
Casting behind unworthy doubts and fears.

I seem to hear again the songs of childhood;
How angels watched the dear Redeemer's tomb,
And evermore the light of His dear presence
For his beloved saints dispels the gloom.

While earth from winter's icy grasp is breaking,
And hills and vales their robes of verdure take,
All nature in creation's joy partaking,
While buds and flowers from their long sleep awake.

Let me, this little wreath of tribute bringing,
Stand yet once more above that hallowed grave,
Feeling again the earnest of His promise,
Who passed through death, his faithful ones to save.

The Better Way.

BY J. P. M'CASKEY.

This is a world in which suffering and sorrow and death are everywhere, and we need to dream glorious dreams, to cherish the ideals of the evangelist, the poet, the seer, for these gladen hope and sweeten life, and lift us on to better things. And we should begin early, hold to the work patiently and stop only at the end. We don't want to know so much of some things that occupy the school-day; and we don't want to know it so baldly literal. Better the glamour of the old-time fable. It is better sometimes to get into one's heart the spirit of the poet Wadsworth:

"The world is too much with us: late and soon,
Spending and getting, we lay waste our powers:
Little we see in Nature that is ours;
We've given our hearts away, a sordid boon!
The sea that bares her bosom to the moon;
The winds that will be howling at all hours,
And are up-gathered now like sleeping flowers,
For this, for everything, we're out of tune;
It moves us not—Great God! I'd rather be
A pagan suckled in a creed outworn,
So might I, standing on this pleasant lea,
Have glimpses that would make me less forlorn;
Have sight of Protens rising from the sea,
Or hear old Triton blow his wreathed horn."

Oh, that we had little books and big teachers! few pages and much matter! thought from eye to eye and pulse from heart to heart! Do you know strong things, and can you put them hot from your heart to theirs, as your pupils are before or around you? Did you ever burn a watchspring in oxygen, see the brilliant sparks fly, and find presently that some of this molten steel as it scattered in a shower of sparks was embedded deep in the cold glass of the vessel itself? It was white hot as it flew, burned into what it fell upon, and was embedded there to stay. Some one says we read the little books so much that we lose taste and power for the great books. So here. As teachers we are so much with little parsing and spelling and arithmetic and reading, that we become dwarfed and do not grow to the grand proportions of worthy manhood. And our pupils grow more or less like unto ourselves.

A lady, Henrietta S. Nahmer, who knew him very well as an old man, in an article upon "Our Poet of Nature as I Remember Him," says: "Not far from the birthplace of Bryant, which is marked by a plain monolith in granite, and on the same ridge where the Bryant homestead commands a view of the Hampshire hills for miles, there stood in the fifties a little red schoolhouse so completely hidden in the forest that the stranger could not know of its existence until close upon it. Here was the typical New England school of that date, and while as yet no modern methods had crept in to disturb the somewhat dull serenity of teacher and pupil, there was once a day at least a detour into byways where one might associate with the great ones of literature, and in the daily reading of selections from the English classics was begun that education which Mathew Arnold defines as the highest culture, 'the knowledge of the best that has been said and thought in all ages.' Instead of the commonplaces by which so many children of to-day are nourished, the youth of that time were spelling out lofty themes from Cowper, the smooth verse of Addison, and the repose and dignity of 'Gray's Elegy in a Country Churchyard.' What matters if the philosophy and insight of the glorious verse of Thanatopsis was beyond the reach of our comprehension, the rolling measure of its cadences was music to our ears, even then stirring to the harmonies of the universe."

I read this for its pleasant picture of an old-time Massachusetts school back in the woods, for the good they got out of it, and the satisfaction felt by this intelligent woman as she recalls school days profitably spent here, where good manners and good morals were matters of first importance, and where acquaintance was made and life-long assoctation assured with some good people in books.

A Boy Who Wishes to Do Good.

DEAR MR. GARRISON:—I am a little boy eleven years old. I live in Cuba, Mo. Mamma takes your paper. Papa and mamma belong to the Christian Church, but there is no Christian Church house in Cuba, so we hardly ever have preaching. I want to help build a church house. I wish to start an endless chain of letters like we read of a young lady doing. Mamma said I could not do any good, but I begged her to let me try.

GROVER C. TIEMAN.

[We commend Grover for his good intentions and his desire to help on the Lord's work. But we think his mother is right. The "endless-chain" letter is a novelty and under very peculiar conditions worked a wonderful result in one case. But it has been worked too much to succeed any longer. We suggest a different plan to Grover. We think if he should get some pledges from people in Cuba and from his friends elsewhere, to have a good meeting, there would be no trouble about building a house afterward. Suppose he try that and report.—EDITOR].

The Pastor's Warning.

BY P.

A pastor, earnest, good and true,
Faithfully toiled the whole year through;
Full fifty years had passed since he Began the march to eternity.

His health was good, his body strong,
Active in mind, although not young;
With lore and Scripture truth replete,
Arrayed in panoply complete,

He loved his work and kindly tried
To lead his flock by river's side,
To pastures green along the way,
To happiness and endless day.

Of righteousness he preached, like Paul,
And temperance; and, too, withal,
To saints' and sinners' ears inclined,
The final judgment of mankind.

He preached the Christ to sinners lost,
A Savior, who at priceless cost
His sinless life once freely gave
That man he might redeem and save.

One eve, as at his desk he thought
Upon a sermon that he ought
To preach to his dear beloved flock,
He heard a loud and sudden knock.

Two elders did themselves present,
With message from church board intent,
To notify the pastor grave,
The time had come for him to leave.

They for this step no reason had,
But plentiful excuses made;
Among the rest was found the plea,
That their church pastor young must be.

Alas! the truth must now be told,
The minister was growing old;
His hair was white, yet he was strong;
'Tis true, he was no longer young.

The pastor now another fold
Must seek that wants a preacher old.
In vain he seeks; for there are none
Such churches found beneath the sun.

And so the preacher finds himself
Laid all too soon upon the shelf;
Another business he must learn,
From pulpit work forever turn.

Weary and sad he turns away,
Wakeful at night, he sighs for day;
The days pass by without relief,
No balm is found to soothe his grief.

Weary of wand'ring round and round,
Seeking for rest while none is found,
He looks beyond to realms above,
Where all is joy and peace and love.

This thought brings comfort, hope and cheer:
Only a while he'll tarry here;
Then go where churches no more grieve,
And preachers' full reward receive.

In Life's Market Place.

What is the price of a frowning face?
The comfort of those most dear.
What is the price of an action base?
Peace and all good cheer.

What does it cost to fret and complain?
Beauty and health and youth.
What is the price of the love of gain?
Sometimes honor and truth.

What do they cost—those words that pierce?
Often, alas, a friend!
What is the price of a temper fierce?
The sweetness of life to its end.

What must you give for hatred and strife?
Happiness—all you control!
What is the cost of an evil life?
Ah, an immortal soul!

Temperance Sentiment.

BY H. M. BROOKS.

While we admit that the sentiment on this question is not what it ought to be, there has been a great change in many quarters in the past 25 years. In Eastern Ohio, the place of my birth, I remember hearing the older people tell of an incident that occurred at a yearly meeting of some religious gathering that would seem rather strange to-day. It seems that some one member of that body had signed a temperance pledge, and the act was of such grave importance as to call forth a reprimand from that body. By and by there was a charge brought against another member for "gross drunkenness," and he was severely censured by that body. It was at this juncture of the proceedings that another member rose and demanded some information. Said he, "Yesterday a brother was reprimanded for signing a temperance pledge, and to-day you have censured another for being drunk. Now," said he, "Mr. Moderator, I wish this body would fix the amount of whiskey that a man ought to drink in order to be a consistent Christian." Henry Clay Trumbull, in one of his Northfield sermons—which, by the way, every preacher ought to read—tells of a New England preacher who owned an interest in a distillery while he was pastor of a church. By and by he got a controlling interest in the distillery and ran it and filled the pulpit at the same time. And not being able to run both institutions successfully he became involved in debt. And it seemed that the law at that time was such that a man could be imprisoned for debt. But the officers dare not go into his study during the week to arrest him, nor dare they arrest him on Sunday. And for a whole year he was compelled to stay in his study, never leaving it, save on Sunday when he went to fill his pulpit. Now the point to which I wish to call attention is the great change in sentiment along this line. No man can hold an interest in a distillery to-day and at the same time hold a pulpit.

Not long ago I was talking to a traveling man on the temperance question, and he told me that 25 years ago the man who could dress the loudest and drink the most whiskey was the hero of the grip, but that a drunkard cannot hold his job to-day any longer than it requires for the firm to ascertain this fact. Furthermore, he said that a moderate drinker was not tolerated any great length of time. This is also a change for the better.

It used to be a common thing to see a drunken engineer, fireman or conductor on the railroad, but sometime last year I saw an account of one railroad company in Chicago discharging 27 men in one day for visiting the saloon.

People are demanding sober doctors and lawyers. But few farmers in this part of the country will tolerate a hand that drinks, and the business man who has a drunken clerk will lose trade in almost all departments of trade.

But I want to mention a point or two where there is great room for improvement on this question.

First, with the young ladies. Any young lady who will not demand the same virtue in man that man expects of woman is living beneath her privilege, her duty and her station in life. How long would a man live with a woman if she persisted in coming home every evening stupidly drunk? And what a great pity and mistake it is for a woman to tie herself to a man with the expectation of reforming him. In all my observation I have seen but one woman who made a success in such a venture. For the woman who marries a drunkard with the expectation of reforming him I have about the same feeling of disgust that I have for the man who fools with a gun and cripples himself or kills some one else and says, "I didn't know it was loaded." Women must learn that a drunkard is always loaded for crime.

In the second place, there is an awful necessity for a change of sentiment of the people toward those who make and administer our laws. It seems that about the only use that any of us have for a drunkard is to send him to make and administer our laws. We vote for men whom we would not think of introducing to our wives, sisters or daughters, whom we know to be reputed libertines, lichens and drunkards, men whom we would not trust at the cash drawer or any private trust. Why is it thus?

Striking Force of a Big Gun.

A battleship, or indeed any vessel designed to take a place in the line of battle in a sea fight, must combine three qualities —great offensive and defensive power, the ability to give and receive heavy blows in action and good sailing qualities, to enable her to change her position on the sea with celerity and safety. The performance of the Oregon has demonstrated the sailing qualities of the battleship. Her power for offensive purposes in action was shown at Santiago. But her defensive qualities, her ability to withstand the shock of a heavy blow, has not been tested. A 13-inch naval gun loaded with a normal charge of 550 pounds of brown powder sends 1,100 pounds of metal spinning through the air at the rate of 2,100 feet a second, and its striking energy at the muzzle is over 33,600 feet—sufficient energy, if properly applied, to lift the Oregon with all her weight of hull, machinery, armor and guns, three feet out of water. The energy of the discharge of a 13-inch gun loaded with smokeless powder is equal to the energy of nine forty-ton locomotives running at the rate of a mile a minute and one twenty-ton locomotive running at the same speed thrown in. No battleship has yet received the shock of such a blow. What bolts will draw, what plates will warp, what leaks will develop when it occurs we can only conjecture.—Catholic News.

SWITZERLAND (Vaud).

The canton of Vaud is a favorite resort for the tourist attracted by the beauties of Lake Geneva and the historical associations of the Castle of Chillon.

He finds himself among grand mountains in rich fertile valleys where agriculture is the chief industry and where the people are modest, industrious farm owners, generally well educated.

The photograph shown in the current issue of the Singer National Costume series represents a characteristic group of the native Swiss in Vaud. It shows the simplicity of the dress generally worn by the women, a plain skirt and bodice with blouse and apron of spotless white lawn. Their heads are covered with either a bonnet or cap of dark silk when indoors but in the open air a broad-brimmed hat is worn.

The Singer trade-mark is well known in Switzerland and sewing-machines carrying this mark are to be found in the majority of Swiss cottages. This popularity is due, not only to the superior excellence of the machine, but also to the liberal terms on which it may be purchased.

Women who suffer with any of the Ailments Peculiar to their Sex, and who are discouraged by past experience with Doctors, patent medicines, and so-called sure cures, should write to Mrs. Adeline Hardy, Box 12 Indianapolis, Ind. She has had placed in her hands (by a noted physician of Germany) a remedy which absolutely cures every form of female disease. It will be mailed free to any reader of this paper. The doctor considers it his religious duty to place his infallible cure within the reach of every sufferer.

NELIA M'GAVACK.

"Sometime, when all life's lessons have been learned,"
Aye truly all; and some hold naught but prose
So sad and mournful that the teardrops start,
And pale lips quiver as the lines unclose,
And sorrow fills and floods the breaking heart.
But through some lessons throbs the glad-some beat
Of life's sweet poetry unmixed with care;
And sad hearts thrill through moments glad and sweet,
Learning with thankful joy life's beauties rare.

"And things o'er which we've grieved with lashes wet,"
The fleeting cares or heart-break grief of life
Which mingle with the pleasures of life's daily cup—
Sometime we'll learn that in this mortal strife
To gain Heaven's crown earth's cross must be borne up.
Yet, when in grief the bitter teardrops fall,
A refuge sure we have in God alway;
For he doth love us and will comfort all.
Remember, "God will wipe all tears away."

"Shall flash before us out of life's dark night,"
Illumined with the light of endless day,
Which glorifies the dwellings of the blest
(For there, where sorrows all have passed away,
They need no more the twilight's balmlike rest).
What we deem shadows hovering by our side
May prove good angels shielding us from wrong;
And griefs of life may come forth glorified,
And sorrow's sobs change to sweet, joyful song.

"And we shall see how all God's plans were right."
'Tis strange we ever doubt his boundless ken;
But "we are dust," forever tossed about,
Doubting the fullness of his wisdom, when
We know 'tis he brings all life's good about.
Then let us cease our doubting, for we should
In steadfast faith rely upon his Word,
Which says all things together work for good
To them that ever truly love the Lord.

"And what we thought reproof was love most true."
How meagerly we answer all God's love!
Unknowingly, perhaps, although for those
Who ask, God lights with wisdom from above
A "candle" to illume the dark, disclose
His love. And still beneath his sheltering wing
He loves to gather us, and when life's cord
Is loosed, oh! may we hear from Heaven's King,
"Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."
Colfax, Ill.

"There is no end to anything," replied Mr. Edison. "Man is so finite that he cannot learn one millionth part of what is to be known. He might put in fifty years on the study of water alone, and beyond learning the component parts of it he would know nothing. Only the ignorant say we are near the limit in invention. There is no limit. I believe the life of man can be prolonged. Man ought to live to be 100 years of age. This can be done by supplying lost tissues from the lower animals by transfusion and engrafting. We would live longer, but we abuse ourselves by excesses and indulgence."—Exchange.

THE NEW METHOD OF BLOOD PURIFYING.

What the New Discovery in Medical Science Has Accomplished.

The Prompt Way to Cure Yourself When Symptoms Show That Your Blood is Out of Order.

THE EMINENT SPECIALIST'S FREE OFFER TO ALL READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST."

For a great many years it has been the custom for sick people to say: "My blood is out of order. It needs purifying. I feel all used up. My skin needs clearing. My brain feels tired."

They are right, but do they act right?

They generally go and get a laxative (bowel-cleaner) to purify their blood.

Does their blood run through their bowels?

Science has to-day furnished proofs that all the purifying that your blood needs, in fact, all that can be done, must be done by your kidneys.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys strain or filter out the impurities in the blood—that is their work.

Purifying your blood is not a question of taking a laxative or physic.

Does your blood run through your bowels?

What the bowel-cleaner does is to throw out the poisons confined in your bowels ready for absorption into your blood, but the poisons which are already in your blood, causing your present sickness, it leaves there.

There is no other way of purifying your blood except by means of your kidneys.

That is why bowel-cleaners fail to do their work—they fail to help the kidneys.

When you are sick, then, no matter what you think the name of your disease is, the first thing you should do is to afford aid to your kidneys by using Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great Kidney Remedy.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Dr. Kilmer, the eminent physician and specialist, has attained a far-famed reputation through the discovery and marvelous success of Swamp-Root in purifying the blood, and thereby curing chronic and dangerous diseases, caused by sick kidneys, of which some of the symptoms are given below.

Pain or dull ache in the back or head, rheumatism, neuralgia, nervousness, dizziness, irregular heart, sleeplessness, sallow complexion, pimples, blotches, skin troubles, dropsy, irritability, loss of ambition, obliged to pass water often during the day, and to get up many times at night, and all forms of kidney, bladder and uric acid troubles.

Swamp-Root is sold by all dealers, in fifty-cent or one dollar bottles. Make a note of the name, SWAMP-ROOT, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

The great discovery Swamp-Root has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent absolutely free by mail, postpaid. Also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact, their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of Swamp-Root. Be sure and mention the ST. LOUIS CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

A Remarkable Incident.

Two Americans who were crossing the Atlantic met in the cabin on Sunday night to sing hymns. As they sang the last hymn, "Jesus, lover of my soul," one of them heard an exceedingly rich and beautiful voice behind him. He looked around, and although he did not know the face, he thought that he knew the voice. So when the music ceased, he turned and asked the man if he had been in the Civil War. The man replied that he had been a Confederate soldier.

"Were you at such a place on such a night?" asked the first.

"Yes," he replied, "and a curious thing happened that night which this hymn has recalled to my mind. I was posted on sentry duty near the edge of a wood. It was a dark night and very cold, and I was a little frightened, because the enemy was supposed to be very near. About midnight, when everything was very still, and I was feeling homesick and miserable and weary, I thought I would comfort myself by praying and singing a hymn. I remember singing this hymn:

"'All my trust on thee is stayed,
All my help from thee I bring;
Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing.'

"After singing that a strange peace came down upon me, and throught the long night I felt no more fear."

"Now," said the other, "listen to my story. I was a Union soldier, and was in the wood that night with a party of scouts. I saw you standing, although I did not see your face. My men had their rifles focused upon you, waiting the word to fire; but when you sang out—

"'Cover my defenseless head
With the shadow of thy wing,'

I said, 'Boys, lower your rifles; we will go home.'"—Drummond.

National Animosities.

With a single conspicuous exception, modern wars have left no abiding animosities between the nations engaged in them. In 1854 France joined England in making war against Russia, but to-day France and Russia are warm friends and allies.

In 1866 Austria was defeated by Prussia in the "Seven Weeks' War," yet for years the participants in that struggle have been members of the Triple Alliance.

The war with Russia in 1877 deprived Turkey of a large part of her territory, and left her with financial obligations not yet settled. Nevertheless, Russians do not now hate Turks, nor Turks Russians because of it.

China and Japan, Greece and Turkey, lately enemies, are friendly to-day. Between Spain and the United States, as the Companion has already remarked, there is no deep-seated resentment.

The one conspicuous exception is found in the case of France and Germany. Time has not healed the wound caused by Germany's act in taking Alsace and Lorraine. When the Tsar made his recent proposal of disarmament, the instant reply of the French was, "What about Alsace and Lorraine?"

Yet France and Germany acted together in diminishing Japan's exactions from China, and if the statesmen of both countries are prudent, even this feud may die out.—Youth's Companion.

True Courage.

There is in truth a virtuous, glorious courage; but it happens to be found least in those who are most admired for bravery. It is the courage of principle, which dares to do right in the face of scorn, which puts to hazard reputation, rank, the prospect of advancement, the sympathy of friends, the admiration of the world, rather than violate a conviction of duty. It is the courage of benevolence and piety which counts not life dear in withstanding error, superstition, vice, oppression, injustice and the mightiest foes of human improvement and happiness. It is moral energy, that force of will in adopting duty over which menace and suffering have no power. It is the courage of a soul which reverences itself too much to be greatly moved about what befalls the body; which thirsts so intensely for a pure inward life that it can yield up the animal life without fear; in which the idea of moral, spiritual, celestial good has been unfolded so brightly as to obscure all worldly interests; which aspires after immortality, and therefore heeds little the pains or pleasures of a day; which has so concentred its whole power and life in the love of godlike virtue that it even finds a joy in the perils and sufferings by which its loyalty to God and virtue may be approved. This courage may be called the perfection of humanity, for it is the exercise, result and expression of the highest attributes of our nature. Need I tell you that this courage has hardly anything in common with what generally bears the name and has been lauded by the crowd to the skies?—William E. Channing, in the Christian Science Journal.

Dishonesty.

Call it moral dishonesty, mental dishonesty, or what you will, it is worse in character than that dishonesty which neglects or refuses to discharge a debt represented by dollars and cents. To discharge a money obligation may be, for the time being, an impossibility, but this is never true of that dishonesty of which we speak. Do you withhold from your fellow the meed of praise for the good he has done? Then you are dishonest. Do you refuse to accord to your fellow the recognition of his virtuous qualities, his generosity, his courage, his ability? Then you are weakly dishonest. Do you refuse to pay the debt of gratitude you owe your friend for the good will and kindness he has bestowed upon you? Then you are meanly dishonest. Do you attempt to pass off upon men a counterfeit religion, a false modesty, an ability which is not yours, and an information you do not possess? Then you are not only dishonest, but a hypocrite as well. It becomes a man to be frank and open and honest with all men. A made-up walk, a made-up tone, a made-up address, is none of these, but a fraud and a deceit. But especially can no man afford to practice dishonesty with himself. Self-deception is most fatal. A self-deceived man is well-nigh beyond remedy. He who is true to himself will be true to others, and he who is false to himself will be false to others. The remedy lies in self-examination—diligent, earnest, faithful, continued self-examination. An examination of self as to motives, purposes, designs, and that without flattery or self-pity, is demanded, imperatively demanded. Eternal consequences are involved. Think of these things.—Joseph Cain, in Christian Leader.

A Good Clergyman.

Will Carleton, the poet, well says: "A good clergyman preaches not only on Sunday, but all the time; not only with his words, but with his actions; not alone with his words and his actions, but with his manners; not alone with these, but with his appearance, his smile, his frown, his expression of countenance, indicating approval or disapproval. The pastor to-day can get nearer his people, and his people nearer him, than ever before. He has discovered to be divinely human is much better than to be inhumanly divine." The pastor who, like his Lord, can be divinely human in the true sense, is the pastor who will draw and hold the people. But to do this he must copy his Master. Like Christ, he must strive to be philosophically simple rather than simply philosophical; he must exercise care to be profoundly practical rather than impractically profound; he must get down to the people and lift them up, rather than call down to the people to come up to where he is. He must be, in his manner, simple as a child, yet profound as a philosopher; he must be tender as a mother, yet manly as a true man; he must be kind as a father, yet unyielding as a true instructor and advocate of the truth. Jesus was the most tender and sympathetic of brothers, and at the same time he was the most manly of men.—Religious Telescope.

Picked Up Paragraphs.

"Coppage, you always come in when I'm busy." "No, you always get busy when you see me come in."

"I am really delighted at the interest my boy Tommy is taking in his writing," said Mrs. Hickleby. "He spends two hours a day at it."

"Really? How strange! How did you get him to do it?"

"I told him to write me out a list of everything he wanted for his birthday, and he's still at it."—Sunny South.

There was picked up on the field of El Caney a Bible which had evidently saved the life of some American soldier, for a Mauser bullet had struck it squarely. It is interesting to know that the ball penetrated the Bible as far as the Book of Job, the shining point resting harmlessly at Job 35:7, 8: "If thou be righteous, what givest thou him? or what receiveth he of thine hand? Thy wickedness may hurt a man as thou art; and thy righteousness may profit the son of man."

More Pets.

Rubie Snider (12), Rosendale, Mo.: "Fido is grandpa's pet dog. We say, 'Fido, get upon the chair, hang your paws and sing!' Then my cousin plays the organ and my sister Myrtle (11) and I sing 'At the cross, at the cross;' and Fido will throw back his head and bark, high or low, just as we sing; this is the only tune we could teach him. Dear grandpa is not here now; he has gone to live in heaven. We want to go there sometime." Nina Martin: "We have moved to Mt. Pleasant, Kan. By changing our address we missed the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for two weeks, so I am perfectly dumb as to how the Advance Society is progressing." Madge F. Daily: "The only pet I have is one cross old cat, and she is too mean to write about." Maude E. Kimler: "I can hardly wait for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to come; I want to see what our society has done in another week" (she is on our Honor List). Jessie B. Shafer: "I began the work as soon as I saw about the society. Once I came home from school sick and I forgot to read a verse of the Bible; but I began again the third time, then grandama took very sick; I had to help mamma and take care of grandma, she is so good and kind. I intend to keep up the reading. My sister Eunice (10) sends her name." Children, isn't this a soldier against difficulties? I believe we will yet see her name on the Honor List. Myrtle Snider: "We call our pet kitten Snowball; she is the nicest kittie in the world. Once when we were eating supper, the door swung open with the little kittie hanging on the latch. She had learnd that way of opening the door. That was pretty thoughtful for a little kitten, wasn't it?" Floy Popplewell, Eureka Springs: "Kizar is a black-and-white shepherd dog. I walk nearly two miles to school and he is my only company and protection; and the wolves are very bad in our neighborhood." Mattie Maxfield: "I saw in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST about the children going to wear a ribbon with 'Av. S.' worked on it. My sister is going to work one for Grady and me. I like the continued story, especially George and the Robber. We children run home in the evening from school to get to read it first." Frank Weiss (11), Conway Springs, Kan.: "I used to belong to the St. Louis Christian Orphans' Home. I now have a papa and mamma and a sister three years old, who came from the Home with me. I have been with my new parents nearly two years. I have a large St. Bernard dog. I get in the wood and help papa feed the stock; we live on a farm."

Grace T. Flaglor, St. John, N. B.: "I am very sorry that I cannot send my name for the Honor List, but I hope to do so in twelve weeks. Last April came a little twin brother and sister. Marguerite was very fair; but Douglas was dark and sturdy, just like a boy. The little girl was never strong and at last the Lord took her to Him. Douglas was the only boy we had among five girls; but he took sick and died eight days after Marguerite, and O, it is such a change, for now it seems that we have nothing to do! This is the reason I am not on the Honor List." "We are the Essix, Ia., band; Hazel Gilmore is seven. Myrtle Soward (12) joined the church the same day she joined the Advance Society. Lola Gilmore (12) joined the church and society at the same time. We are cousins." Bertha Beesley: "One day a gentleman was telling this story: A boy climbed a tree to a crow's nest, choked the crow and dropped it to the ground; but when it reached the ground it flew away. My little brother, hearing the story, exclaimed, 'Why didn't he catch her by the hind legs and pull her down?' He didn't know crows have only two legs!" Emily Rice (13): "My kitten, Dewey, is striped like a tiger and has blue eyes. He will play by himself with a string. He is always ready for fun. I send my sister's name, Ethel Rice, aged nine years.

Maurice Bragg (13), Shelbina, Mo.: "A young man's kitten died and his father thought he would give it a decent burial. As he was carrying the kitten away in a box, two little boys followed behind and one of them said, 'Poor Chub!' Chub was the kitten. 'Well, poor Chub was a Christian!"

E. Witmer Pardee, Snyder, N. Y.: "Once we had a crow named Zack. He could laugh, bark like a dog and cackle like a hen. He got so he could say words very plainly. When we gave him a piece of dry bread, he would carry it to his waterdish and soak it till it suited him, then eat it with a great relish. Once papa lost a cuff button, in the yard. I was cracking nuts in the kitchen when Zack came in, said 'Hello!' and laid down the button. In the afternoon he would hop upon the grapearbor and cry, 'Elmer. Elmer, Come home!' and he would keep it up till he saw me coming from school. The day after July 4th he seemed sick, and the next morning he fell over and died. He must have eaten some little pistol-caps. We buried him under a bush that he loved to sit on, and we kept flowers on his grave all summer." Nora Cunningham: "Earl, Elsie and I have moved to Grenola, Kan. I wish some of the members would write to me. I am proud of the Advance Society, and of its success. I hope to secure new members." Lina Pike: "While I bake the battercakes, my cat will stand on her hind legs and beg for them. So it can stand longer it will rest its forepaws against my dress, and it is fun. I made it a bed in the woodhouse, put kitty in it and started to the house; before I got in, kitty was ready to go in, too. Kitty never would stay in its bed."

May Greenlee (10), Bertrand, Neb.: "Two little sisters were going to school; the younger saw a grasshopper, and mistaking what it was cried, O sister! see, there is a beeblebum!' She thought it a bumblebee." Cora Scribner, Bilfry, Minn.: "I am 12. The funniest thing I ever saw was, one Sunday, a dog entered church and walked straight up to the preacher. The preacher said, 'The dog is welcome,' but its master took it away. I have read, Sparrow the Tramp, Drummer Boy, Five Little Peppers, Tales of a Grandfather, etc." Gus Rosborough (12), Chauncey, Ill.: "One day I went to the corn pen to get some corn to feed. In the field I saw a large black monkey with its side toward me. I watched it; it slowly turned its face toward me, and showed its teeth. I hurried home very much frightened and with just a little corn. I told my folks, but they found out it was only a big, black stump." Elbert Taylor: "We are two dogs. My name is Bruno and I am a Newfoundland; I sleep on the porch. Trip is a shepherd and sleeps in his kennel. We like to go to the field with the boys and run rabbits. Once some children harnessed me to a small cart. It was great fun to them, but I would rather have been the driver than the horse." Winnie Pearl Largent (12), Sand Coalee, Mont.: "When brother Russell was five, he was not feeling well one day. He said whiningly: 'Mamma, I don't feel well; either my blood is out of joint, or my heart just moves once in a while.' " Edna Crumpacker: "The dogs used to play and the pup became jealous because no attention was given her. So she would catch hold of one of the dogs' tails, sit down, and make the dog drag her about. In this way the pup got to play too." Bessie Smith, Downing, Mo.: "My neighbors have a large, affectionate St. Bernard. He is yellow, with a white ring around his neck and a white star in the middle of his forehead. You can write a note and put it in the dog's mouth and he will take it to the butcher's, grocer's, or anywhere you wish. I am very much interested in the continued story; I hope George's adventures will be something nice." Mattie Upton: "William Jennings Bryan was a fine bird dog. My papa taught him several plays. My sister and I tried to train him for a horse, but he would not let us. He was a yellow dog; he would not bite any one. Last winter some men killed him." Mabel Worcester, Colorado Springs: "Skip is a little black-and-tan dog. When we first got him, we taught him to stand up pretty. When he wants something he walks around and looks so cute that he generally gets it. He thinks so much of us. He is very playful. Whenever he gets a marble he nearly goes wild. Mischievous things that we don't want him to do, he delights in doing. A little dog comes here and sometimes gets one of Skip's bones; to this Skip does not agree; and no matter how small the bone is he catches one end and pulls. If I don't come home from school at the time he thinks I ought, he goes out in the street to watch for me; if I don't come then, he goes after me."

But I must put away the letters, though I have so many others. Here comes 14 from Parsons, Kan. Isn't that a splendid band? The secretary is Bertha Field, 1709 Kennedy Ave. One letter from Doniphan, Neb., brings five names, where Blanche (13) and Virga Harshfield (9) got some schoolmates to join. So our work goes on. HONOR LIST:—Mildred Hughes, Mattie Maxfield, Nora, Elsie and Earl Cunningham, Bertha Beesley. Many read a chapter of the Bible each day instead of a verse. Some reach over 1,000 pages of history in the twelve weeks. Next week, our continued story. I hope you are reading my continued story in Our Young Folks. It is to run through the year.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

THE UPPER ROOM.*

The last week of Jesus' public ministry began with the triumphal entry into Jerusalem on Sunday, following the evening on which had occurred the anointing at Bethany. The week brought closer contact with Jesus' enemies and a more precious disclosure of himself to his disciples. The period of their education was drawing to a close. The time of delay, lest events should hasten too rapidly, was over, and Jesus met the issue of his life with perfect calmness, knowing that the week was to bring betrayal, mocking and cruel death. That the disciples would be disappointed at this result of his work he knew full well; but to its accomplishment he had deliberately set his face, knowing that only in this way could his designs for the revelation of God and the redemption of the world be realized. When Jesus entered the city on that Sunday amid the wild acclamations of the enthusiastic multitudes the disciples believed that their dream of the new kingdom with its bestowals of place and power for themselves was about to be accomplished. It must have been a bitter disappointment, therefore, when Jesus turned quietly away from all that the situation seemed to offer and went back to Bethany, leaving his enemies in possession and his disciples mystified and chagrined. And yet such misunderstanding was the price Jesus was compelled to pay for their education. In no other school could he teach them that he was not seeking temporal power, but the spiritual emancipation of his people and the world.

The days followed each other rapidly in that eventful week. On Monday occurred the cleansing of the temple, in which act Jesus assumed the lordship of the sacred courts and defied the power of the Sadducees, the rich possessors of the valuable temple franchises for the sale of sacrificial beasts and the exchange tables for the Jewish tribute. This act arrayed against him that powerful priestly faction who had hitherto been unconcerned with his disputes with his Pharisaical rivals. From this moment the two parties joined forces for his destruction. Tuesday was a day of controversies carried on with various groups of questioners, all seeking to entangle him in argument, and on the same day Jesus pointed out the generous gift of the poor widow and expressed deep emotion at the visit of some unknown Greeks who sought an interview with him and seemed the representatives of that wide-reaching circle of the Gentile world waiting to give him a readier welcome than he had found among his own people.

Of Wednesday's event nothing is said in the Gospel records, but Thursday was the day set apart for the eating of the Passover feast, and Jesus, like an obedient son of Israel, prepared for the solemnity of this night. He had always been observant of these ceremonials of Judaism in so far as his ministry permitted, and now he was to eat with the disciples the last Passover of his life, which was itself to receive striking significance from the events which so rapidly followed. He knew that his hour was come. It was that hour to which he had been looking forward from the day on which he turned the water into wine at Cana. It was the hour, too, in which his deep love for the disciples was to manifest itself in fullest measure. These men he had selected with unusual care and had come to love, not alone because of what they were, but because he perceived in them qualities which were to make them the heroes of the faith in future days. His love grew up to the very close of his association with them. One of them had already proved his unworthiness of that love by an agreement with the Jewish rulers to reveal the place where Jesus might be arrested. Of this treachery Jesus was aware, though the disciples did not know it as yet. The hour in which they sat down to the Passover was, therefore, deeply impressive to Jesus, and full of tenderest memories.

Had not Jesus, however, known these men so well and perceived the imperfection of their spiritual education he would have been shocked at their contention for precedence at the opening of the meal. Perhaps their order at the table at which each guest was usually assigned to a place denoting his relative rank among those who were invited, caused them to raise the question of superiority. At any rate, when Jesus took his place among them he perceived that they were in no frame of mind to receive the final instructions which he had reserved for that memorable hour. To impress their minds with the insignificance of these trifling distinctions among men, he performed the work of a servant which none of them had seemed willing to do, in washing the feet of the disciples and wiping them with the towel with which he had girded himself. Around the astonished circle he passed, performing for one after another this act of refreshment which was always the prelude to an Oriental meal. But when he reached Simon Peter he encountered, not alone astonishment, but protest. This disciple, so full of contrasts, refused to permit the Master to wash his feet. He did not perceive that the act had a deeper significance than the preparation for this meal. Jesus told him that he would afterward understand more fully than he then could what its meaning was, but still Peter refused until Jesus insisted in words so striking and imperative that the disciple begged that not only his feet but his hands and his head as well might share in the lustration. This Jesus assured him was not necessary, for those once fully cleansed need only to remove the daily defilements of life. One who has dedicated his life to Christ needs, not constant rebaptism, but only the cleansing from sin to be secured through daily prayer.

Then resuming his outer garments which he had laid aside, Jesus explained his act, fulfilling his promise to Peter that he should understand later on the significance of the washing. He told them he had given them an example. It was not an ordinance, but a simple act which illustrated the relations of Master to servant, and much more of servants to each other. The Master's place was won, not by asserting rights, but by performing the most conspicuous service. Jesus was greater than they all because he had rendered the most notable service to the world. Thus Jesus taught in the most eloquent manner the necessity of humility in the lives of his disciples. This humility was first of all in himself. It was not a professional or external humility. Jesus did not act the part of humility for the sake of making an impression on his followers. He deliberately chose through his whole career to live in accordance with this highest ideal of human nature, and in harmony with this he demanded for himself no prerogatives, and he disclaimed all external honors. And yet Jesus' life was not one of self-abnegation in the ordinary monastic sense. It was a life complete and perfect because it realized to the fullest and highest interests as opposed to the lower or self-interests. Jesus seemed to lose himself in his work; he seemed to abandon those things which men most esteem; and yet no life was ever so complete or ample as his. It is only the life that is intent on selfish purposes that is small, scanty and dissatisfied. True humility, the refusal to make self the first concern of life, will banish those sins which are not only most destructive to spiritual health, but are most to be avoided as blots upon a fair character. Among these sins which find their root in self is pride, whether in family linenge, money, education, title or personal success. Another such sin is sensitiveness. It is only the man who thinks too much of himself who is always fearful that he may not receive proper attention from others, or is suspicious that he has been slighted in the bestowal of recognition or honors. Another such sin is anger or intolerance, which arises from the elevation of self and one's own opinions into the judgment seat, and the disposition to excommunicate, denounce, antagonize and destroy everything which varies from one's own opinions. No such states of mind as these and others that might be mentioned can have place in one who has the mind of Christ, and it should be the prayer of every follower of the Master, "Let this mind be in me which was also in Christ Jesus."

LIKE A STURDY OAK.

This is the age of surprises. New inventions are brought out every moment; new discoveries are made almost daily, and the good old ways of our forefathers are being discarded. Mechanical art has produced wonders; the developments in chemistry have astonished the world, and medicine and surgery have made rapid strides.

Nobody would today endeavor to cure disease by bleeding, nor would the treatment of our forefathers be endorsed of physicking by means of drastic purgatives. But one old remedy, like the sturdy oak, has withstood the onslaught of time, and it stands still proudly erect, fresh and green, full of vitality, spreading its beneficent branches over humanity.

Planted over one hundred years ago, by a good Samaritan at the foot of the Blue Ridge Mountains, it stands today a monument of the past, but also for the present. Thus does the discovery of Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer by old Dr. Peter Fahrney date back into the past century.

During its existence, hundreds of so-called medical discoveries have sprung up, only to be cast aside and forgotten, because they could not stand the test of time, but the Blood Vitalizer has held its well-earned place in the field of medicine, and is today without a rival as a family medicine.

Composed exclusively of herbs, roots, leaves, barks, etc., it is nature's true medicide, unaltered, as nature does not change. The human constitution is the same today as it was one hundred years ago. It is subject to the same troubles and ailments and the Blood Vitalizer demonstrates to the living generation its effectiveness, as well as it did to those of the past.

Attempts have been made, time and again, to imitate it; the public has been offered so-called substitutes under the pretense that they were "just as good," "just the same," etc., but these imitations and substitutes have had but a short existence.

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is a popular medicine, among those who are familiar with it because it is perfectly harmless, containing no narcotic or mineral ingredients, such as morphine, opium, bromides, mercury, calomel, bismuth, arsenic, etc., but is a purely botanical remedy. It is a favorite medicine, because it is adapted for children and persons of weak constitutions. It is pleasant to take and produces no nauseating effects. Although it is a mild laxative, it is pre-eminently a blood purge, driving the impurities out of the system through nature's proper channels.

A long record of success in the treatment of human ailments is the history of Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer, the old and time tried remedy.

TOPIC FOR APRIL 16.

THE ETERNAL MORNING AND MODERN MISSIONS.

(Is. 60:1-12.)

[A Missionary Meeting.]

It is noble music which the prophet sounds out for us here, and nobly has it been sung many times since then. Music and morning sure go well together; so, to many a darkened land does the Son of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings and with the music of joy.

The morning came once, the crowing of the cock, and struck terror to one of our Lord's disciples, because he had denied his Master. Forbid that the dawn should ever come upon us, Endeavorers, who have failed to do our duty, and thus have denied our Lord.

We hear the question often asked to-day, Has not the "New Theology" cut the nerve of missions? We no longer have sympathy with the old-time missionary plea, that we must go to heathen lands to save men and women from everlasting condemnation and punishment, and is it not true, then, that there is no adequate plea to make? All thinking men are agreeing to-day that there is much that is beautiful and true even in some of the heathen religions; that—and that just in so far as they are true they are the witness, without which God has left no nation. Does it not follow, then, that we should let the nations alone to develop and expand toward the true light?

In reply to these sincere questions, let us sing the song of the prophet: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is arisen upon thee." The nerve of missions has not been cut, even though a newer and stronger ground for action is now beneath our feet. Go to the heathen to save them for to-day and not merely for eternity. Go to the heathen to save men and women, and not merely disembodied souls. Go to the heathen to cleanse their souls, heal their diseases, purify their morals, establish their family life, teach them industry, economy, and lead them into all those paths of peace and ways of pleasantness that are known only where Jesus' footprints fall. Go to them with this newer, larger, saner, motive. Go to them to save them in this world, letting our good Lord look out for the world to come. Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?

Heathen religions have some broken lights of God, but ah, it is sadly broken! Only the few in those darkened lands have even the few high thoughts of these religions. The great mass are sunk in degradation and darkness. By their fruits ye shall know them! And Paul's description of the heathen world is none too black for this modern heathen world. What have their religions produced? Infanticide, child-marriage, the suttee, polygamy, the zenana, superstition, dwarfing of feet and dwarfing of brains and hearts. Is not the motive clear—arise, shine, send the morning light we have?

If our preachers will no longer try—as most of them do not—to frighten their congregations with statistics of the numbers of heathen who go down to "Christless graves" every hour, implying that they are eternally lost; if our position is frank and honest in disclaiming reponsibility for the future judgment of the heathen, but in acknowledging responsibility for the present judgment of them, and their present condition of misery; if we meet modern thought squarely face to face, and appeal to modern humanitarian motives which do have weight to-day where the motives of an outgrown, burnedout theology do not, we shall continue, no matter what the changes of front in theological thinking, to feel the missionary impulse; nay, I believe, to feel it stronger than before.

A WORN-OUT FAD

"Spring Medicines," "Blood Purifiers" and "Tonics" an Old-Fashioned Idea.

Pure blood, strong nerves and muscles, firm, healthy flesh, can only come from wholesome food well digested. "Blood purifiers" and "nerve tonic" do not reach the cause of the mischief. The stomach is the point to be looked after. The safest and surest way to cure any form of indigestion is to take after each meal some harmless preparation of this kind composed of vegetable essences, pure pepsin, golden seal and fruit salts, sold by druggists under the name of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, and these tablets taken after meals assist digestion wonderfully because they will digest the food promptly before it has time to ferment and sour, and the weak stomach relieved and assisted in this way soon becomes strong and vigorous again.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are superior to any secret patent medicines because you know what you are taking into your stomach.

They are sold by druggists everywhere at 50c. per package. Write F. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich. for book on stomach diseases, mailed free.

The Missouri Lectureship at Huntsville.

One of the most enjoyable sessions of the Lectureship has just closed its labors. The lectures were well prepared and well received. Pres. J. T. Ogle, of Carrollton, made a good presiding officer, bringing the sessions through on time, and meriting the many nice things that were said of him. W. F. Richardson reported for the executive committee, the finances and other matters pertaining to the management of the affairs of the Lectureship during the year, showing the careful work of the committee. The next meeting will be held in Palmyra, next March. Columbia contested with her for the honor of entertaining this most intellectual of all our gatherings.

The first lecture was delivered by Geo. H. Combs, Kansas City; subject, "Christ in Modern Literature." He made the following classification of literature as respects the Christ:

1. The literature of silence.
2. The literature of revolt.
3. The literature of skepticism.
4. The literature of sadness.
5. The literature of faith.

He cited many writers under each head, and discussed in a masterly way many of their productions. His lecture was itself a classic poem.

J. P. Pinkerton in his own genteel way reviewed the lecture by Bro. Combs.

The second lecture was delivered by Prof. A. M. Haggard, of Drake University. Subject, "Scientific Thought and its Application to the Resurrection of Jesus." He first set forth the canons of scientific thought, or the rules by which scientific conclusions are tested, viz.:

1. Must explain sufficient cause.
2. Must explain final cause.
3. Must not contradict fact.
4. May correlate.
5. May fulfill prediction.

He then showed that the resurrection of Jesus (1) stood all the usual combinations of one or more of these rules, and (2) that it stood under a threefold combination of these canons; under a fourfold combination; under a fivefold combination of them, and that no scientific problem known to him stood these last three tests. Thus he made a stronger proof, from a scientific point of view, for the resurrection of Jesus than any scientific conclusion has for its basis. Prof. Haggard won golden opinions from the Missouri brotherhood.

J. B. Briney, in his scholarly and unique way, reviewed Prof. Haggard's lecture.

The inability of Prof. Geo. D. Herron, on account of sickness, to give his lecture on "The Pulpit as a Factor in the Solution of the Social Problem," was regretted on all sides. But the time was given to J. B. Briney, who preached a powerful sermon from the theme, "A Note of Warning."

The last lecture of the course was given by Pres. Clinton Lockhart; subject, "The New Testament View of Prophecy." The lecture includes so much matter—all vital—that any effort at condensing is baffled. It will not condense, which, I take it, is evidence that the lecturer gave it all the boiling it would stand. It was scholarly; it was exhaustive; it was clear; it was conservative—an excellent presentation of a difficult subject.

A. B. Phillips reviewed the lecture, and succeeded in bringing out a lively discussion.

The devotional services were very precious, a half hour being given to this at the beginning of every session. Brethren Ely, Errett, Abbott and others led the services of song. I have never attended a meeting where we enjoyed the services of so prompt and accomplished an organist as Mrs. Neal Payne, of Huntsville, who was always at her place. Pastor Grimes was thoughtful and accommodating, and the Huntsville people sustained the reputation of Missouri people for hospitality.

There was a painful sense of the absence of some of our giants of the passing quarter of a century, such men as Jones, Monser, Plattenburg, Haley, et al. We also regretted that our editor royal, chief of his tribe, J. H. Garrison, was unable to attend.

The Ministerial Association held one of its most enjoyable conventions following the Lectureship.

The addresses by H. F. Davis, "Relation of the Minister to the Bible-school;" J. B. Jones, "The Minister of the Twentieth Century;" Levi Marshall, "The Minister's Library;" L. J. Marshall, "Studies of Uneducated Preachers;" Pres. Clinton Lockhart, the president's address—all these were of the very highest order.

The new officers are Davis Errett, president; Edmond Wilkes, vice-president; J. H. Bryan, secretary.

ORGANIC EVOLUTION CONSIDERED. By A. Fairhurst. Christian Publishing Co. Price, $1.50.

I have read with unabated interest the volume, "Organic Evolution Considered," lately issued by the Christian Publishing Company, by Alfred Fairhurst, Professor of Natural Science in Kentucky University. Personally, I have never been able, with the light that has come to me, to become a believer in the doctrine of "organic evolution."

I have read with interest from Darwin, Huxley, Spencer and others what they have said in advocacy of the theory. But after all I have read from these gifted men my faith yet clings tenaciously to the declaration of fact in Genesis: "God created man, in the image of God created he him, male and female created he them." And notwithstanding the later efforts of E. D. Cope and others referred to in Fairhurst's volume I am still a firm believer in the declarations of this book of Genesis in regard to man and the world he lives in. As I read the book prepared by Prof. Fairhurst I was impressed with the candor and intelligence with which the author has dealt with the arguments and facts of the various advocates of "organic evolution." He has shown himself a master of their arguments and a keen critic of the results of their work. I was also impressed with the thought, how little the greatest, the best and most candid of scientific students know about the origin of life or man. At the end of their best labors, as Prof. Fairhurst clearly shows, the Word smites their most laborious and honest efforts to the heart with the stroke of a Titan. Prof. Fairhurst has shown himself to be, not only a master in the realm of natural science, but able also to use good-natured irony with splendid effect in dealing with some phases of his subject. This is seen in his trenchant review of E. D. Cope, with which the book is closed. Most books of the class under review are "hard reading," but to me this book has the fascination of a romance. "Organic evolution" has been a subject of considerable interest for the last third of a century, but it might as well be buried now, for it is a "dead issue." The most of the volumes of its advocates lie in "innocuous desuetude" in the libraries of men. It is pleasant, however, once in awhile, to examine them. But if we take the "dote" we ought to take the "antidote" as soon as possible.

Prof. Fairhurst has provided the "antidote" in a palatable form, but strong enough to produce radical results. He has won his way to a standpoint which denies science none of her rights, but refuses to accept a philosophy of the universe or of man at her hands.

The Christian Publishing Company has done its work well and the handsome volume of 386 pages is, mechanically, as much a delight to the eye, as its contents are a stimulus to the mind.

MAGAZINES.

Nearly thirty short stories will be published in the four April numbers of the Youth's Companion, and the publishers promise that they will all be first-rate. There will be humorous stories, pathetic stories, stories that teach a good lesson in a general way, animal stories and stories of thrilling adventure. There will be stories that will interest men and fascinate boys; stories that will charm women and delight their daughters.

The April number of the Coming Age, published at Boston, Mass., with a branch office n t his city for the West, is full of ably written articles on practical and popular subjects. The editorial sketches of Joaquin Miller, Hon. S. . Jones and Geo. C. Lormer, D. D., in the reported interview with each, are in the nature of a new feature in magazine literature and cannot fail to interest even a casual reader, especially the opinions expressed upon present-day topics. This magazine covers a wide range of topics, and the variety thus secured prevents dullness in the hands of any lover of magazine literature. It is up to date on all subjects, and all articles are vigorously written.

The article in St. Nicholas for April on "Fire Making," by H. L. Jerome, and so admirably illustrated by Otto L. Bacher, from primitive fire-making machines in the Smithsonian Institute, Washington, D. C., is very interesting. It gives the reader some vivid ideas of the crude methods of the uncivilized tribes of the world, past and present. The entire number of St. Nicholas for April is good.

Rear-Admiral Sampson's account of the naval battle off Santiago, July 3, in the Century for April, will be read with interest for many reasons. He gives an account of the movement of the squadrons from the first start toward meeting Cervera to the destruction of his fleet with the additional light of many of the telegrams from Washington. The article in this number on "Absolute Zero" and experiments with liquified air is also exceptionally interesting.

In the Americsn Monthly Review of Reviews for April the editor reviews the work of the Fifty-fifth Congress, examines the present status of the various plans for interoceanic ship transit, discusses the latest developments in the Philippine situation, and comments on the other news topics of the day in home and foreign politics, including the Cabinet change in Spain and the altered relations of Germany, England and the United States.

Two articles in the Atlantic Monthly for April will be read with exceptional interest. These are, first the article on "The Mystery of Evil," by James Fiske, and "Our Solar System in the Light of Recent Discoveries," by T. J. J. See. These articles are so related to long-accepted theories that they will strike the reader as decidedly revolutionary in their character. We advise a careful reading of each article in full. They are thought-provoking, mind-stretching articles.

Mr. Clark Russell, continuing in the April number of the Pall Mall Magazine his fascinating account of the evolution of naval architecture, describes the rise of the iron ship. His next paper will deal with the invention of the screw propeller.

F. Marion Crawford's "Romance of Rome," profusely and beautifully illustrated, is one of the notable features of the April Frank Leslie's Popular Monthly. It is strong in its descriptive characterization of the Eternal City, of St. Peter's and the Vatican, and of the venerable Leo XIII. This number also includes illustrated articles upon "Aguinaldo and the Filipino Envoys."

The article in Lippincott's Magazine for April on "The Difficulty of Pronouncing Cuban Names," by William Ward Crane, ought to make it an exceedingly popular number in the United States. But this is not the only interesting article in this number.

Senator Hoar, in Scribner's Magazine for April, gives political reminiscences of the early days of the Free Soil party, continuing into the formation of the Republican party, down through the administration of President Grant. His estimates of the great "war horses" of the Republican party are unusually frank.

The Rev. Prof. Francis Brown, D. D., of the Union Theological Seminary, New York, deals with the question, "What is Orthodoxy?" in the North American Review for April. Dr. Brown is of the opinion that the time will surely come when the church will call nothing heresy that is not schismatical and immoral; just as the time will come when no orthodoxy will be recognized that does not utter the harmonious convictions of a united church.

BAILEY.

Mrs Catherine J. Bailey (nee Embry), was born June 13, 1823, and died at her home in Stanford, Ky., March 11, 1899. At the age of 16 she married Judge Winfred Bailey, "Christian, representative, senator, judge and citizen, all of which positions he filled with fidelity and honor." She was a worthy helpmeet to this grand man. For years their home was the preacher's home, and I dare say no preacher ever found a better one. A woman of unusual prominence, both in the church and community, she will be greatly missed. She was a lovely and generous Christian woman. No one who knew her doubts that hers is the realization of the saying: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

BLAKE.

But a few days ago I sent you the notice of the untimely death of Bro. Emerson E. Blake, of Bemidji, Minn. A letter just now brings the sad intelligence of the sudden death of his wife, Maggie E. Blake, who died of grief, Feb. 27, after a severe illness of but two days. She was the daughter of George and Sarah Hershey, was born June 22, 1872, at Warsaw, Minn., was immersed into Christ Oct. 6, 1887, by Thomas Randall, and married to Emerson E. Blake, March 16, 1892. They are now united where bonds are never broken.

BOSS.

William Boss died at Joplin, Mo., March 24, 1899, of paralysis, in his 81st year of age. He was born in North Carolina in 1818, lived in Illinois, then in Iowa, where in 1846 he married Miss Jane Pincock, of England. Later he came to Southwest Missouri, since their home. Bro. Boss leaves a wife 78 years old, two sons and a daughter. One son, Philip, is an honored officer in our congregation. Bro. Boss accepted Christ at Fidelity, Jasper County, Mo., with his wife in 1863 and for years was a member at Antioch, Newton County. The end came suddenly and peacefully. The loved ones sorrow, but not as those who have no hope. W. F. TURNER.

CHURCHILL.

Cadwalader Slaughter Churchill was born in McDonough County, Ill , April 25, 1834. In his childhood his parents returned to Kentucky. He was reared to young manhood in that state. He obeyed the gospel in his youth and continued a faithful member of the Christian Church to the day of his death, covering a period of much more than forty years. He was married in Macomb, Ill., by the writer to Miss Eva Trayman, April 3, 1860. They raised three children, a lovely daughter and two sons. The daughter grew to womanhood and was married, but died several years ago. The mother and two sons, now full-grown men, survive the husband and father. He died August 28, 1898, aged 64 years, four months and three days. Death came suddenly and wholly unexpected. He died on Lord's day night and the whole city of Macomb was shocked on Monday morning when word went out that C. S. Churchill was dead. Death did his work so quickly that there was no time for a word, scarcely a thought. In his home he was a very tender and loving husband and a kind, affectionate father, greatly devoted to the care and comfort of his family. He was a superior man in intelligence, though modest and retiring in disposition. He was a man of a clean mouth. His words were pure and chaste. He was a polished Christian gentleman. In business his honesty and integrity were never called in question. He was reliable. As a citizen no man stood higher in the estimation of the people of the whole county of McDonough. Three times they elected him clerk of the circuit court. For twelve years he discharged the duties of that important office to the satisfaction of the people. Forty-two years a citizen of the city and county and well known to both private and public life, no one is found to cast a slur or point out a dishonorable deed in that long period of citizenship. This is high praise, but C. S. Churchill is worthy of it. He was an honored member of the Masonic fraternity, and the high esteem in which he was held by the members of that order was shown by the large number of Masons who attended the funeral. Bro. Churchill's purity of life, his liberal financial support and his wise counsel made him an exceedingly valuable member of the church. In his death the church suffers an irreparable loss. So also his family and the whole community. Religious services were conducted by the writer in the house before the casket was taken to the church. There Brother L. D. Goodwin preached a funeral sermon, after which the Masonic brotherhood tenderly and lovingly laid our brother's body to rest in Oakwood cemetery to await the great resurrection and judgment day. Farewell, my dear brother! I hope to meet you on the other shore. J. C. REYNOLDS.

HILL.

Bro. William H. Hill was born in Tennessee, Nov. 20, 1822, and died in January of this year. He was married to Minerva Vernon, in 1846. They united with the church in 1850, under the preaching of Bro. T. Fanning. In 1852 they removed to Texas, remaining here until their death. Sister Hill died in 1896. They were charter members of the old Rock Church near Manor, and when the Manor Church was organized they united with them. Bro. Hill's life was consistent with his profession in Christ Jesus. C. E. SMOOTZ.

KIER.

While Sister Kier was critically ill herself, Bro. T. B. Kier, an elder in our congregation, was instantly killed in a mine by a falling boulder, March 24, 1899. Gloom was cast over the entire church and community. He was born in Canada, near Hamilton, in 1847. Later he lived at Morrison, Ill. At Chicago he became a prominent railroad man. For years he was a passenger conductor in Kansas, living in an elegant home at Cherryvale. After losing a limb on the railroad he removed to Joplin, Mo., and for 12 years engaged in mining. He was devoted to his family and a rare type of Christian manhood. The excellent family have the sympathy of all in this dark hour.

PARKER.

Joel K. Parker fell asleep in Jesus Wednesday evening, March 22, 1899, aged 62 years. The summons came suddenly as he sat in his accustomed place in the Lord's house, just before prayer-meeting service began. He came into the church during our recent meeting. He was very earnest and very happy in the Master's service. It seemed right that he should go from the Lord's house to meet his Lord. His wife, Sister Clara Parker, resides here. An only son, Dr. Eugene Parker, lives at Spring Hill, Mont. These, with a host of friends, mourn his departure.

Publishers' Notes.

The names of Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, Barton W. Johnson and Otis A. Burgess are well known to many of our church members, yet but few are acquainted with the lives of these prominent men. The opportunity is now before the church members to read an account of the lives of all the above men, presented in a concise and brief manner, making the study of these biographical sketches entertaining and profitable.

The sketches of the lives of these prominent men among the Disciples of Christ are from the pen of Thos. W. Grafton, whose former work, "Life of Alexander," has had such widespread reading. The author has given his new book the title of "Men of Yesterday."

It is a work of 281 pages, handsomely bound in cloth, and the price is $1.00, postage paid.

Those who want to know the habits and customs of all the prominent Oriental nations of the world and their need of the gospel of Christ should read "A Circuit of the Globe," written by A. McLean. The book contains what the author saw while making a tour of the globe. It has more than one hundred half-tone illustrations which were made from photographs taken by the author while on the ground. It is full of information concerning foreign countries and Foreign Missions. The price is $2.00 per copy, postage paid.

The persons who have carefully read "Life of Alexander Campbell," written by Thos. W. Grafton, are well prepared to take up the study of the same author's new work, "Men of Yesterday." This new book will give a historical sketch of some of Campbell's co-laborers and contemporaries, and then bring the reader up to the study of the lives of men who were worthy advocates of the cause of primitive Christianity as preached during the nineteenth century. "Men of Yesterday" is a volume of biographical sketches of prominent men among the Disciples of Christ, and the information it contains should be in possession of all church members.

Every Sunday-school teacher needs the "Bible Student" in the preparation of the lesson. The "Bible Student" is published quarterly and contains an elaborate exposition of each lesson for the quarter.

Considering the small cost of this quarterly, no teacher should fail to provide themselves with such a help. Send ten cents to the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo., and on receipt of your order they will send you a copy postpaid. It will enable you to have in your home a book that will aid you in doing proficient work as a teacher.

The young preacher will find the following books contain model sermons, and each book is sent postpaid on receipt of the price, $1,00.

"Trible Sermons," by Prof. J. M. Trible, who was professor of New Testament literature in Bethany College.

"Sermons and Songs," by the noted evangelists, J. V. Updike and J. E. Hawes, containing sermons, sayings and experiences of these men.

Young ministers will find the sermons in the above-named books models, and their careful study will prove helpful to them in their pulpit work.

Another Competent Minister.

It affords me great pleasure to report through the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that Rev. J. F. Adair, of Villisca, Ia., has severed his connection with the Advent Christian Church and united with the Church of Christ in his own town.

I have personally known Bro. Adair for the last fifteen years or more, and know him to be a conscientious, cultured and competent Christian gentleman, and one who will bear a long acquaintance. As a speaker he is fluent, forceful, logical and convincing. Among the Adventists he was one of their most able preachers and writers. His life and character are above reproach. We have been intimate correspondents for years, and I have known for quite a long time that he was contemplating making this change. Yet I have never tried to influence him, other than to answer the questions he has asked of me, for in his case I knew it would be useless, as he is a man who does his own thinking.

I quote from his letter to me, bearing date Feb. 14th, 1899:

I have made some changes in my church relations, and am now a member of the Church of Christ, and the Church of Christ only. I made the change here last Sunday, Feb. 12th. I have, as you know, moved slow and carefully and have not allowed myself to be influenced by any one, acting wholly on my own judgment.

To any of our churches wanting a safe, experienced and competent pastor, you will make no mistake by securing Bro. Adair. I heartily commend him to the confidence of all. Brethren, I ask you to make him feel that he has come among Christian friends, by putting him at work with some good church.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

"In faith, Unity; in opinion and methods, Liberty; in all things, Charity."

Vol. xxxvi. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, April 13, 1899. No. 15

CURRENT EVENTS.

The municipal campaign in Chicago has been an object of national interest, and the victory of Carter Harrison, who was re-elected as mayor, ought to be a source of satisfaction to all friends of good government. Mr. Harrison was the regular Democratic candidate. Opposed to him were Zina Carter, Republican, and John P. Altgeld, ex-Governor of Illinois, Democrat. The administration of Mr. Harrison, though marred at its beginning by laxity in the enforcement of the civil service law, has been strong, clean and business-like. Its chief virtue has been its firm stand against the fifty-year street railway franchise which Charles T. Yerkes was trying to get for little or nothing under the now repealed Allen law. The repeal of this law has not discouraged Mr. Yerkes, but the re-election of Mr. Harrison may well do so, for the franchise question was the real issue of the campaign. It is for the most part true, as Mr. Harrison himself said, that the campaign was solely upon local issues, and yet the outcome was not without a bearing upon national questions. The nomination of ex-Governor Altgeld as a rival to the regular nominee of his party was a protest against Carter Harrison's supposed apostasy from the Chicago platform. Mr. Harrison still declares himself a silver Democrat, but he did not care to make that, or any other item of national politics, an issue in his municipal contest. For this reason among others Altgeld and his camp consider that a systematic attempt is being made to "Tammanyize" the Chicago Democracy as led by Mayor Harrison, and Altgeld's candidacy was intended to rally the Democracy around the 16-to-1 banner. It failed to rally as desired. Mr. Altgeld received about 15 per cent. of the total vote. The party had the sagacity to observe that there was nothing to be gained by rallying around a currency doctrine in a city campaign where the real issue of the hour related to franchises and monopolies. To meet this objection, Altgeld tried to make a strong anti-monopoly campaign, but Harrison's was even stronger on that point, since he had the record of his first administration as a proof of his sincerity and efficiency. The victory of Mr. Harrison is really the victory of the independent voter, who chooses the most efficient man for public office, votes in a municipal election upon the local issue, and refuses to allow party politics and questions of national policy to be dragged into a local campaign.

The re-election of Mayor Jones, of Toledo, last week, is another case where the independent voters registered their will in favor of an honest business administration, and defeated the regular party candidates. Samuel Jones' preparation for the mayoralty was not a course in "practical politics" (i. e., the art of making politics a paying profession), but a study of those economic problems which confront a wealthy manufacturer who sees problems arise in the condition of his own employees and in his relation to them, who sees that these particular problems of his are typical of larger ones, and who sets himself seriously to the task of working out the solution. At the outset of his administration he announced his intention to put the golden rule into practical operation. He is a radical in some things, but even those who cannot go the full length of his more extreme views are willing to overlook these for the sake of his solid worth. He has been strong in opposing the aggressions of monopolies, and has guarded the city's business interests well, but has been unfortunately weak in the enforcement of the laws in regard to gambling houses and saloons. Mayor Jones was defeated for renomination by the Republican convention, but nominated himself as an independent candidate on a platform of municipal ownership and an eight-hour working day, and received a majority of all votes cast. Much enthusiasm has been created among the labor unions and the municipal ownership people by the mention of Jones for the governorship, and it is believed that he has virtually agreed to be a candidate for that office in the approaching campaign.

The President's Commission, sent to investigate conditions in the Philippines, has issued its long-expected proclamation to the Filipinos. The substance and general tenor of it may be well enough seen from the first two of its eleven articles: "1. The supremacy of the United States must and will be enforced throughout every part of the archipelago. Those who resist can accomplish nothing except their own ruin. 2. The amplest liberty of self-government will be granted which is reconcilable with just, stable, effective and economical administration and compatible with the sovereign rights and obligations of the United States." As a statement of the fact that the United States has a work to do in the Philippines and that it cannot be done until order is restored, this proclamation is eminently satisfactory. So far as one concedes that we have any business to remain in the Philippines at all to do a work of civilization in those islands, it must also clearly be admitted we are justified in carrying on any military operations which are made necessary by attacks or by armed resistance from the Filipinos. If our possession and present control of the archipelago are but the fulfillment of our duty, then we cannot allow the course of destiny to be blocked by the reluctance of these savages to receive our aid. But whatever may be our duty to the Philippines, it cannot now be said that that duty either includes or requires annexation or our permanent possession of the islands. It requires present control, and that is all. The proclamation, as we read it, seems to go beyond this. If it does not speak explicitly of permanent sovereignty, neither does it suggest the slightest hope that American sovereignty will ever be exchanged for Philippine independance. It appears to contemplate no future for the Filipinos but one of perpetual subjection to American masters. If this interpretation is correct, this proclamation goes beyond any preceding utterance of the administration and seems to us to give color to the claim that the insurgents are acting in accordance with highest patriotism.

Since Cuba is now developing within herself some of the conditions prerequisite to independent self-government, it is inevitable that there should appear rudimentary political parties, representing the various elements of the Cuban population and the several opinions about the future of the island. There are at present in Cuba four factions, as stated by Rev. Samuel W. Small, of Georgia, who is serving as chaplain on Gen. Bates' staff in Santa Clara province: the Gomez party, the Democrats, the Maceo faction or negro party, and the annexationists. The first is composed of those whose political creed consists chiefly in an appreciation of the services and ability of Gen. Gomez and a blind confidence in the wisdom of any plan which he may put forth. Their program is: make Gomez President, let all classes unite in support of his administration, forgetting individual interests and differences, and approve whatever policy he may adopt. The Democratic party is composed of the conservative element who distrust the capacity of the ignorant mass of Cubans for self-government. They fear the chaos and anarchy which may result from the successful revolution if the right of suffrage is placed in the hands of the ignorant majority, epecially the negroes, and they propose the establishment of a republic with limited suffrage. This party contains the best element of the native Cubans, but is less numerous than the Gomez party. Opposed to this conservative and aristocratic Democratic party is the Negro party which has taken the name of the late Gen. Maceo and has made him its hero and patron saint. It stands for universal suffrage and obliteration of the color line in Cuban politics. The Annexationists, called in derision the Yankeefilo party, include the foreign element. They are English, Scotch, German, American and Spanish, either by birth or by parentage. They have no particular interest in seeing Cuba ruled by Cubans, but having come for commercial purposes, they want such a government as will give greatest security to their financial interests and investments. Naturally they believe that it is safer to trust the rule of the United States than any Cuban Republic. They are the unpopular, unpatriotic party of the hour. With these four factions already fully developed, Cuban politics starts on its career with an abundance of issues and parties to match.

The Cuban Assembly, by its own vote, has ceased to exist. But then it never did exist as a real factor in the situation except in its own imagination. The Cuban Assembly had nothing to do but manage the Cuban army, and the Cuban army had nothing to do but lie in camp and wait for the distribution of the $3,000,000 bounty. But the Assembly did not approve of the $3,000,000 idea. Consequently after a futile attempt to get the United States to raise the amount to $15,000,000, it disbanded both the army and itself. It did not formally recall its objections to receiving the $3,000,000; in fact, it did not have much to say about that proposition. But it is believed that it adjourned with the understanding that individual soldiers might receive anything which the United States cared to offer them. The Assembly still reserves the right to negotiate a loan, at some future time when its credit is better, and pay the army adequately without regard to any bounty which the United States may have given. There is now nothing to stand in the way of the distribution of the $3,000,000, except the fact there there seems to be no satisfactory agency through which to do it. The muster rolls which were in the possession of the Assembly have not yet come to light. Gomez is out of office and hence not available. His successor was chosen to oppose the bounty in the hope of getting a larger one, and even now that that hope has been abandoned he is scarcely a proper person to employ. The Assembly, which would be equally unavailable even if it continued to exist, is now indefinitely adjourned. The army is under orders to surrender its weapons to the nearest municipal authorities and disband. The outcome must be another delay more or less protracted before the privates of the Cuban army can receive their $100 apiece.

On Thursday of last week the bodies of 336 soldiers who lost their lives in the war in Cuba and Porto Rico were buried in Arlington Cemetery at Washington. Nothing that the government could do in honor of the dead was left undone. The President, Cabinet and most of the high officials attended the ceremony, and the day was observed in the city in a manner befitting Decoration Day. It is all a piece of sentiment, this bringing back of the bodies of dead soldiers, many of them unknown, to rest in their native soil. Their sleep would be as sweet there under the palms, beneath a tropic sky, as here on the bank of the Potomac. Yes, it is all a piece of sentiment, but such sentiment that without it life would be a flat and tasteless thing. May this nation never see the day when it shall be accounted not worth while to bring back the body of the fallen private, known or unknown, and pay military honors to the dead. This deed represents the true spirit of our government, and the world should know from this that we are a nation which cares for its common soldiers. We put this episode over against the beef scandal, and risk the assertion that, whatever mistakes, mismanagement, or even fraud, there may have been on the part of individuals, it is impossible to conceive that a government which voluntarily assumes the trouble and expense of bringing home the bodies of unknown common soldiers would deliberately feed its soldiers upon insufficient or inferior food.

The situation in Samoa is one of quiet waiting for the differences of opinion to be settled. The consuls there have been informed that a joint commision is to be appointed to investigate, and meanwhile order has been restored. Great Britain has already appointed as her representative on the commission Mr. C. N. E. Eliot, an Orientalist of high reputation and a diplomat of wide experience. A commission composed of such men will be sure to attain satisfactory results. There is really no need for discussion of the situation until the commission has done its work, published the facts and rendered the verdict. Nevertheless discussion is going on at a very lively rate in the British and Continental papers. The German press states openly its belief that England is distinctly unfriendly to Germany and is trying to win the support of the United States in her European quarrels. On the other hand, the British press is quite sure that Germany is trying to override both Great Britain and the United States and gain sole control of Samoa. As the matter appears now, it seems that it may be necessary for Germany to disavow the action of her consul, Herr Rose, in opposing the Chief Justice, and for our government to disavow the action of the Chief Justice in supporting a candidate for the kingship who was not acceptable to the people.

The Chinese Minister at Washington, Wu Ting Fang, gave an address the other day before the American Academy of Political and Social Science, on "China's Relations with the West." He mentioned as the two chief causes of friction, the spirit of commercialism, which leads other nations to demand unreasonable concession and to consider China as a harvest for them to reap, and the presence of Christian missionaries in China. His remarks under the latter head exhibited no bitterness against the missionaries, and he did not charge them with unworthy motives. But he claimed that the preaching of Christianity, accompanied as it must be by social innovations and the abandonment or denunciation of long-established custom, necessarily provokes an occasional outburst of popular fury. He regrets that such outbreaks occur, says he does not wish to justify the lawless acts of ignorant mobs, but at the same time represents these demonstrations as not deserving of police interference and as being so natural and inevitable that they do not merit any special reproach. The missionaries ought to "take these demonstrations philosophically," he says, and not stir up trouble by appealing to their governments for protection. Unfortunately for his argument, Mr. Wu tries to picture what would happen if missionaries of Confucianism came to this country and engaged in vigorous propagandism, including denunciation of our most cherished national customs such as (to use his own illustration) the wearing of corsets. He thinks they would be mobbed and that the popular indignation against them would be so great that no police protection would be possible. Then, if they appealed to their government for protection, international complications would ensue. As a matter of fact, nothing of the sort would happen. Certainly there are Confucianists in this country, and they may be actively engaged in making proselytes for aught we know. It is an indisputable fact that many other Oriental religions, cults and religio-ethical fads are being vigorously propagated in this country. Everything from Mohammedanism to vegetarianism has its missionaries, who make proselytes when they can, and denounce our customs with the utmost freedom. But we have not yet heard of any riots on that account. Certainly, riotous demonstrations against innovators in religious or social customs are natural—in China, and sometimes political troubles follow. But the fault is not with the missionaries, but with China.

IF CHRIST SHOULD COME.

There is an evident tendency in later years to test our laws, our institutions, our customs, our politics, our religious life and whatever else goes to make up our Christian civilization by the will and character of Christ. Such books as "The Mind of Christ" and "If Christ Should Come to Chicago" and similar works indicate a growing consciousness that whatever will not stand this supreme test must give place to something better. More and more is Jesus Christ becoming the standard authority in all that relates to religion, to ethics, to our obligations to God and to our fellowmen. This is certainly a most hopeful sign of Christian progress, and just in proportion as we subject our civilization to the supreme test of the mind of Christ will it become a Christian civilization.

There is, however, a fallacy, it seems to us, lurking in such phrases as, "If Christ should come." This hypothetical phrase seems to imply that there is no real judgment of ourselves, our laws, our institutions and our religious life until the actual personal presence of Jesus Christ at the end of the age. As a matter of fact, Christ has always been with His church, in a very important sense, and has been a guiding and controlling force in human history since His advent into the world. He has been coming more and more into the life of mankind from the day he visibly ascended from Mt. Olivet to the present time. In every religious reformation, in every movement which has lifted the world to a higher level of thought and of action, in all the efforts to ameliorate the condition of the unfortunate and make the condition of man more tolerable, Christ has been coming into the world. Christ has come to Chicago, to New York, to St. Louis, and to all the great cities of Christendom, and has touched and perceptibly influenced, not only their religious, but their civic and social life. All the mighty Christian and philanthropic forces at work in these great centers of life and of influence are due to the fact of Christ's having come to them.

What we mean to say is that we are not to wait until some future visible manifestation of Christ's personal coming to test our lives, our laws and our institutions. Slavery is abolished, feudalism has died, cruel forms of punishment have been discontinued, imprisonment for debt is no longer possible, polygamy is dead except in semi-civilized communities where it is sheltered under a pretense of religion, woman is no longer treated as the slave of man, and childhood is no longer neglected in civilized communities, because Christ has condemned these practices. Many offensive laws have been expunged from our statute books because Christ has vetoed them. He is to-day the most potential factor in the world's civilization. Under his growing power and influence many practices, laws and beliefs, now cherished as respectable if not sacred, are bound to go down, to be numbered with other relics of an un-Christian or semi-Christian civilization.

What the world needs to-day more than anything else is the unflinching application of this test to all that makes up our modern complex civilization. We must test our religious beliefs, our practices, by the mind and character of Christ. Our creeds must stand or fall by this supreme test. Our standing as Christians must be determined by the conformity of our conduct to the character and teaching of Christ. We may shrink from submitting to this standard of measurement, but it is the only correct one, and we only deceive ourselves in substituting any other for it. Some of the old theologies have gone down before this testing process and are regarded now as only interesting curiosities of the past.

Our present denominational divisions, our methods of carrying on the Lord's work in the world, the relations of various religious bodies to each other, our party names, our party spirit and denominational machinery—all these must be subjected to the mind of Christ. The question is, Does He approve of our present divisions, and is the spirit which animates the various denominations the Spirit of Christ? These questions cannot be evaded indefinitely. If the church fails to make the application of this test, the world will make it, nevertheless.

We must test our industrial and social life by this same standard. What does Christ think of these rapidly-accumulating trusts, of these vast monopolies? Is their aim and tendency to better the condition of the masses of mankind? Would Jesus Christ approve of them? Will they help or hinder the advancement of His kingdom? They must stand or fall according to the answer to these questions. What of our present ideas concerning the accumulation and use of wealth? Are they in harmony with the mind of Christ? What about the relation of the employer and employee? Does Christ's idea of what that relationship should be prevail in the industrial world to-day? If not, we do not have to wait until the end of the age to know that Christ condemns it.

Our political life, our state, national and municipal administrations—are they conducted upon Christian principles? What is Christ's opinion of our present political and administrative methods? Do we need to say, "If Christ should come He would be displeased with the corruption that prevails in much of our political life, and particularly in the management of our large cities?" Certainly not. Christ has come and He does condemn, unsparingly, all this corruption, bribery and dishonesty. All we need to do is to recognize the fact of His condemnation and adjust our civic life to the principles of righteousness which He has taught.

The process of advancing civilization, then, is simply the process of applying the mind of Christ to existing conditions in every department of human interest, and adjusting them to the mind of Christ. This should be the supreme aim of all the moral and religious instruction that is going on in the world. It is the great purpose for which the church exists. Whatever agency or instrumentality is not helping forward this work, is an obstacle rather than an aid to the world's advancing civilization and the triumph of the kingdom of God.

THAT CONGRESS.

It convenes in St. Louis, at the First Church, on Locust Street, near Compton, on Tuesday afternoon, 2 o'clock April 25th. The program is rich and varied. It includes some of the most vital and some of the most practical questions of the day. Some of the ablest men in the Reformation will be present to treat these great subjects. There is to be free discussion following the several carefully prepared papers, and the leaders in these discussions have been appointed.

It is needless to add that a lively time may be expected. There will be no drowsy sessions. When Greek meets Greek, then comes the tug of war. But the character and standing of the men who are to participate in this Congress give assurance that however lively the discussions may be, they will be fraternal, courteous, Christian. But there will be a supreme and controlling purpose to get at the truth concerning these great questions. There will be no attempt to decide any question by votes, nor to sum up the conclusions reached by resolutions. Each man will utter his message and leave it to accomplish its work.

This will be a great school while it lasts. None of our colleges or universities can cope with it. They will do well to adjourn and allow the students to attend this Congress. An opportunity to hear as many able men on as many vital questions does not come very often. It has never come before in our history. Our missionary conventions are for a different purpose. This Congress seeks to give expression to the best thought among us on the several living problems which are placed on the program.

Let those who value clear thinking, earnest grappling with present-day problems, free expression of honest convictions of truth and the rich mental and spiritual feast which the association of such men together is sure to supply, see to it that they are on hand to enjoy what is set before them or to assist in preparing the banquet.

DR. LUKE CRITICIZED.

An editorial criticism on Prof. Willett's "Life and Teaching of Jesus," by the Christian Standard, of last week, based on the fact that in an introductory paragraph of the book the author states the outward phenomena connected with the earliest writings of the New Testament, without mentioning the fact that these men were inspired by the Holy Spirit, reminds us of a similar criticism that could be made on another author whose writing is much older than that of Prof. Willett's. In the first sentence of Luke's introductory paragraph of the Third Gospel he says:

"Forasmuch as many have taken in hand to draw up a narrative concerning those matters which have been fulfilled among us, even as they delivered them unto us who from the beginning were eyewitnesses and ministers of the Word, it seems good to me also, having traced the course of all things accurately from the first, to write unto thee in order, most excellent Theophilus; that thou mightst know the certainty concerning the things wherein thou wast instructed."

Now, according to the standard of orthodox writing laid down in the Standard, there are some important omissions in this introduction. "Nothing in this extract would indicate that the books which 'tell the story of our Savior's life' were in any sense different from other works of history. What the author says of the records of the life of Christ, with merely a change of names, could be applied to any great historical event." Luke does not say, in this introductory paragraph, that he was moved by the Holy Spirit to write these memoirs of Jesus. He does not say that he was to be guided by the Holy Spirit in what he was to write. On the contrary, he seemed to lay emphasis on the fact that the things which he was about to narrate had been delivered to him by those "who from the beginning were eyewitnesses and ministers of the Word." He also calls attention to the fact that he had "traced the course of all things accurately from the first," as a reason why his friend Theophilus should have confidence in his narrative. It is to be noticed, also, that he says that "it seemed good to me also" to write this narrative concerning Christ. He does not intimate that he was prompted to this action by the impulse of the Holy Spirit.

Now the question is, whether these omissions do not raise a reasonable doubt as to Bro. Luke's orthodoxy. Did he believe in inspiration? Why did he not then say that he was inspired by the Holy Spirit? Instead of that "there is no hint here of divine guidance in the writing." We do not say, mind you, that Dr. Luke is to be condemned for these omissions from his introductory paragraph, but we are bold to say that if Prof. Willett is justly criticised for these omissions, then the author of the Third Gospel can hardly escape unscathed. The fact is there are a good many things in the Bible that would not pass muster if they were subjected to the hypercriticism of some of our modern severely orthodox critics.

Hour of Prayer.

JOYOUS CHRISTIANS.

(Phil. 4:4-9; Psa. 103:1:14.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The Christian life is one of supreme joy, and we misrepresent its real character and spirit to the world when we do not manifest this joy in our lives.

The Christian religion, above all religions of the world, is a religion of joyfulness and blessedness. The beginning of the Sermon on the Mount, known as "The Beatitudes," expresses the conditions of genuine happiness or blessedness. These conditions are all elements of Christian life and character, and are wholly different from those things to which the world has always looked as the sources of happiness.

It is worth while to note that the apostle urged upon these Philippian Christians the duty of rejoicing: "Rejoice in the Lord alway: again I will say, Rejoice." The duty is so important that he thinks it worth while to repeat it. It is not difficult to see how the opposite spirit to joyfulness would belie the Christian profession. If Christians believe what they profess to believe—that God has forgiven all their sins, that they are sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty, that He is their Friend and Helper during these days of earthly storm and struggle, that death has been abolished or transformed into a gateway to immortal glory and that those who love Christ are to live with Him forever in everlasting and unalloyed felicity—why should they not rejoice? What earthly condition are sufficient to quench the joy of a soul that realizes the blessedness of its conditions in Christ Jesus? When we fall into religious melancholy, or into a state of chronic murmuring at our lot in life, it is clear proof that our faith has become weak, our vision obscured, our hope dimmed.

"How is it possible," some one will ask, "for one to rejoice alway in the midst of life's disappointments, trials and conflicts?" The apostle's answer is: "In nothing be anxious; but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God. And the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall guard your hearts and your thoughts in Christ Jesus." Here is one of the secrets of a happy Christian life—making known our requests to God and securing from Him the peace which passeth all understanding. A praying Christian is usually a happy Christian.

Another source of joy to the Christian is the things about which he thinks or meditates: "Whatsoever things are honorable, just, pure, lovely, of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." What a source of joy and inspiration to the Christian life are the great thoughts, themes and promises of the gospel! There are things of a very different character upon which we may think and our hearts and minds be polluted and our lives made wretched. But since there are so many pure and noble and lovely things to think about, there is no excuse for permitting our thoughts to dwell upon low and unworthy subjects.

Another source of joy is in remembering all the good that we have received from the Lord. How many blessings He has showered upon our lives! How many are the evils from which we have been delivered! How kind and indulgent He has been with us, and how willing He has been to receive us when we have turned back to Him from our wandering!

> "Bless the Lord, O my soul,
> And forget not all his benefits—
> Who forgiveth all thine iniquities;
> Who healeth all thy diseases."

It was the remembrance of all these things that filled the soul of the psalmist with thanksgiving and joy. We are too prone to forget them. We magnify all the ills of life and minify its blessings.

O, if we only had clearness of vision to see what God has delivered us from, and to realize the blessedness of our relationship to Him as his disciples and the glorious destiny for which He is preparing us, how our lives would break forth into songs of praise and gratitude, and how our lives would be filled with rejoicing! Men of the world would read the message of good news in our countenances. They would be led to inquire as to the source of such happiness as they see in our lives. But let it be understood, clearly, that the only joyful Christian life is the faithful, loyal Christian life. It is the consciousness of duty faithfully performed that gives the sweetest joy that earth may know.

PRAYER.

O Thou who art the source of all consolation, of all joy and all blessedness, we thank Thee that Thou has sent thy Son into this world to manifest Thy glory and Thy will, and to bring light and salvation to men. We bless Thee that through Him we may enter into fellowship with Thee, receiving the forgiveness of our sins, the gift of Thy Holy Spirit and the hope of life everlasting. Fill our hearts, we pray Thee, with joy and peace, through believing, to the end that we may serve Thee more effectively and commend the religion which we profess to others who know Thee not. Help us to put away every evil from our lives that mars our Christian joy, and so live here in this present world as that we may be permitted to share with our risen Lord in the everlasting joys of the world to come. For His name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

It takes a long winter, like that through which we have passed, to put us in the best mood for appreciating the change to spring when it comes. Spring would have but little meaning if it were not preceded by winter. One eternal spring would never awaken the poet's fancy nor touch the soul as does the spring which comes out of the womb of winter. This will probably be one of the most enjoyable spring seasons that we have had for many years, because it has been preceded by so long and so severe a winter. And herein is mirrored forth the mystery of human life. We know things by contrast. We know light because we contrast it with darkness. We know heat because it is contrasted with cold. We know good because it is contrasted with evil. We know happiness because we know something of misery. Heaven will be all the sweeter because of the bitterness with which our earthly cups have been mixed. The dark background of human history will make a splendid setting for the city of God.

One of Paul's greatest and grandest generalizations is his statement: "We know that all things work together for good to them that love God and are the called according to his purpose." We do not know to what school of philosophy Paul belonged, but here is a statement based on the profoundest and truest philosophy in the universe. When a man is in right relations with God, yielding to Him the affection due to his character and Being, and responding in his life to the divine purpose concerning him, the whole order of the universe works for his good. Calamities are transformed into blessings, and obstacles become stepping-stones to higher good. The basic truth upon which this statement rests is that there is a moral order in the universe, and "a Power not ourselves that makes for righteousness." The statement penetrates to the very core of things, and recognizes the unity of God—the identity of Him who guides the courses of the planets and the course of human history, with the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ who has undertaken man's recovery from the dominion of sin. There are not two infinite Powers, the one working for and the other working against the man who is united to Christ, but "all things work together" under one supreme control for the one supreme end—the salvation of man and the triumph of righteousness. In the bewildering and confusing maze of things that surround us here, it is comforting to have this bedrock truth on which to plant our feet and feel secure. The man that is right with God has nothing to fear in all this universe. "Neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor things present, nor things to come, nor powers, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

Paul learned this deep philosophy from Christ. This was the view of man and of the world which Jesus taught. According to this great Prophet of Galilee men were not to fear poverty, or persecution, or even death, but only that which defiles the soul and unfits it for communion with God. The one thing which Jesus desired to remove from this world was sin. That is the one dark blot in the history of man. It is the great contradiction. It is the prolific source of all our woes and sorrows and suffering. How slow the world is to grasp this truth! It is under the delusion that sin is a very harmless thing, especially if it be concealed from the eyes of men, and that happiness is to be found in selfish indulgence, in gratifying the appetites and passions, in worldly pleasures, luxuries and ambitions. And yet the whole experience of the race, as well as the teaching of Jesus and all inspired men, is against this false philosophy of life. Jesus and the prophets and apostles say to us, in effect: "Fear disobedience to God and to your higher nature; fear dishonor, falsehood, uncleanness, slavery to your lower nature, selfish pride—in a word, fear sin, and you need fear nothing else in the universe." God's infinite purpose harnesses together all the seemingly adverse forces in the world and makes them "work together" for the triumph of truth and righteousness in the earth.

Here emerges into view the secret of all true success in life, namely, working with God instead of against Him. The man who succeeds in any field of human interest or activity is the man who finds out what God's laws are in that particular realm and works with and not against these laws. "We can do nothing against the truth." It is useless to kick against the goads. Why should we run against the buckler of the Almighty? This world is under law. This law is the expression of God's will. To run contrary to that law is to court destruction. To work obedient to that law is to work with God and to succeed. The man who loves God and is the called according to his purpose is one who has set himself in harmony with the divine tendency. He has not only "hitched his wagon to a star," as Emerson advised, but he has allied himself with the Hand that guides the stars. At last the world will come to see that the highest wisdom, the profoundest philosophy of life, is to love God and keep His commandments, for to such an one "all things work together for good."

The habit which the Easy Chair has fallen into, of dipping into poetry and philosophy and classic literature, while far away from our books and base of operations, exploring nature's wilds, has its drawbacks. The white light of historical or higher criticism which beats continually upon this department exposes any lapses in memory of which we may be guilty. Here is a scholarly higher critic who reposes in dignified retirement in the classic shades of Dover, to whom the muses ancient and modern pay court, who delights in picking up an editor when he finds him off his base ever so little, and whose criticism is so blended with compliment as to make it really palatable. Hear the sage of Dover on one of our latest slips:

If it were not for the novelty of the thing I would quote Keats' "a thing of beauty," and apply it to your Easter number. It was lovely. The clean paper and clear type made it pleasant to read even an indifferent article. I sincerely hope that this "thing of beauty" may be, if not "forever," still for many years to come, "a joy" in thousands of households, and I am sure they will be all the wiser, happier and better by its coming. By the way, the speculations of the "Editor's Easy Chair," in this number were both patriotic and signally graceful. But I am puzzled about that primrose; "growing on the brim" — on the brim of what? Pond, lake, fountain, dish, cup or hat? The poet's primrose grew in a very proper place, "by the river's brim." A gentleman, whose poetry is quoted from one end of the imperial commonwealth to the other, ought to quote fairly others of the genus irritabile vatum.

Questions and Answers.

A local Baptist preacher here says there is no command in the New Testament requiring us to abstain from labor on the Lord's day. Is this correct? J. E. Nugent.

Augusta, Col.

The Baptist minister is right in saying there is no direct command in the New Testament requiring us to abstain from labor on the first day of the week. We have, however, the example of the first Christians, who evidently devoted that day to religious worship in honor of the resurrection of Christ. In addition to that it is reasonable to suppose that the Sabbatic law under the former dispensation, requiring cessation of labor on the seventh day of the week, was adapted to man's needs. Indeed, Christ tells us that "the Sabbath was made for man." It was natural, therefore, to carry over into the new dispensation the idea of rest from physical labor along with the additional idea of celebration of Christ's resurrection, and religious worship. We must remember that the religion of the New Testament is not so much a religion of commandments as was that of the Jews. What instructions the early Christians received from Christ touching the observance of the Lord's day we know not, but it is significant that He met with them after His resurrection on successive first days of the week, and that the earliest disciples were accustomed to meet on this day to break bread in memory of him. This ought to be sufficient in connection with the legitimate promptings of the Christian's own feelings of gratitude and reverence.

1. Is it not the duty of the elders of a congregation, no matter how small its membership, to administer the Lord's Supper on each first day of the week when not impossible so to do?

2. Does not a church cease to be a Church of Christ when it discontinues worship on the Lord's day?

3. Is not a member justified in withdrawing from such a congregation? A Disciple.

1. It is undoubtedly most in harmony with the example and with the spirit of the New Testament church to meet on each first day of the week for worship, and the breaking of bread in memory of Christ is an important element of that worship.

2. We would not say that a congregation that occasionally neglects this duty on the first day of the week ceases to be a Church of Christ. It would certainly be an imperfect church, however, but as long as it retained the faith in Christ and maintained the worship at stated times we could hardly deny it the name of Church of Christ.

3. We should think not. It would rather be his duty, by his teaching and example, to encourage the church to meet weekly and observe the ordinances of the Lord's house. It is better to belong to an imperfect church than to no church.

I heard two men recently talking about the conversation of Christ and the rich young man. One of the men said that the words of Christ in Matt. 19:24 refer to certain small gates in the walls of Eastern cities through which belated camels might pass by assuming a kneeling posture. Now the question: Do the facts of history or the conclusions of scholars warrant the belief that Christ in Matt. 19:24 refers to small gates in city walls, and not to the eye of a sewing needle?

Tamerlane Dawes.

Boone, Ia.

We have frequently heard this explanation of the passage cited above. We know of no facts to justify the interpretation. It has always seemed to us an ingenious invention on the part of exegetes to explain what seemed to them a difficult passage. It is better, we think, to understand that this expression about a camel passing through the eye of a needle was an Oriental proverb to indicate an exceedingly difficult thing. The truth is, men who "trust in riches" cannot enter into the kingdom of God, and it is exceedingly difficult for those who are rich not to trust more or less in the virtue of their wealth rather than in the living God.

What is meant by the Holy Spirit? The Word of God, as some say, or a person? What is the office of said Spirit, and does he operate directly upon the hearts of men regardless of a biblical knowledge of the same?

T. H. Edwards.

The Holy Spirt, or the Spirit of God, is associated in Scripture with the Father and the Son as one of the forms in which God has manifested Himself to men. This, of course, implies the personality of the Holy Spirit. The office of the Spirit is to convict men of sin, of righteousness and of judgment, and to dwell in the hearts of the believers, bringing forth the fruits of righteousness in their lives. The Holy Spirit operates through the truth in bringing men to a knowledge of the truth and of sin, through the lives of believers, and in how many other ways we may not know. It is safe to say, however, that the larger our knowledge of the Scriptures the more readily can the Holy Spirit operate upon our minds and hearts.

Current Religious Thought

In the Atlantic Monthly for April there is a remarkable article from John Fiske, on the "Mystery of Evil," well worthy of a most careful reading. Some idea of the position of the writer and the nature of his argument, however, may be obtained from the following paragraph from his article:

It is an undeniable fact that we cannot know anything whatever except as contrasted with something else. The contrast may be bold and sharp, or it may dwindle into a slight discrimination, but it must be there. If the figures on your canvas are indistinguishable from the background, there is surely no picture to be seen. Some element of unlikeness, some germ of antagonism, some chance for discrimination is essential to every act of knowing. I might have illustrated this point concretely without all the foregoing explanation, but I have aimed at paying it the respect due to its vast importance. I have wished to show how the fact that we can not know any thing whatever except as contrasted with something else is a fact that is deeply rooted in the innermost structure of the human mind. It is not a superficial but a fundamental truth, that if there were no color but red, it would be exactly the same thing as if there were no color at all. In a world of unqualified redness, our state of mind with regard to color would be precisely like our state of mind in the present world with regard to the pressure of the atmosphere if we were always to stay in one place. We are always bearing up against the burden of this deep aerial ocean, nearly fifteen pounds upon every square inch of our bodies; but until we can get a chance to discriminate, as by climbing a mountain, we are quite unconscious of this heavy pressure. In the same way, if we knew but one color we should know no color. If our ears were to be filled with one monotonous roar of the Niagara, by unbroken alien sounds, the effect upon consciousness would be absolute silence. If our palates had never come in contact with anything tasteful save sugar, we should know no more of sweetness than of bitterness. If we had never felt physical pain, we could not recognize physical pleasure. For want of the contrasted background its pleasurableness would be non-existent. And in just the same way it follows that without knowing that which is morally evil we could not possibly recognize that which is morally good. Of these antagonist correlatives, the one is unthinkable in the absence of the other. In a sinless and painless world, human conduct might possess more outward marks of perfection than any saint ever dreamed of, but the moral element would be lacking, the goodness would have no more significance in our conscious life than that load of atmosphere which we are always carrying about with us.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

SECOND DECADE.

OUR FIRST MISSIONARY AND HIS WORK.

B. B. TYLER.

The Christian Bible Society appropriated money to be used by the missionary in the distribution of the Sacred Writings. This he did in the Arapic, Syriac, Syro-Chaldaic, Judeo-Arabic, Armenian, Turkish, modern Greek, German, Spanish and Italian languages.

The sum of $1,200.00 was appropriated by the board to convey Dr. Barclay and his family—wife and three children—to Jerusalem. In a meeting held October 14, 1850, after the departure of the missionary family, it was "resolved that the board place at the disposal of Brother Barclay $500.00 in addition to the $1,200.00 already appropriated for his passage to Jerusalem and the support of the mission for one year." Surely, this accomplished gentleman did not engage in this work from mercenary considerations!

D. S. Burnet, who was present at and active in the organization of the American Christian Missionary Society, who was eleted first vice-president and who served the society as corresponding secretary in the years 1852 6, and 1862-3, said of Dr. Barclay:

"His heart is in the work. He is also as much distinguished by an enlightened frugality as by the ardor of his zeal. He supremely believes that he is a trustee of the funds placed at his disposal, and he most obviously keeps a conscience void of offence in their management. Under such auspices, the mission, with the blessings of God, may be expected to do much good."

In a letter dated "London, Oct. 28, 1850," addressed to James Challen, at the time corresponding secretary, the missionary gives an account of his efforts to secure the least expensive passage to Alexandria. He "applied at the office of the Oriental and Peninsular Steamship Company," but says he "found the rates of charge so exorbitantly high" that he "was compelled to decline taking passage in that line." He "succeeded," at last, "in engaging . . . passage in the Hebe, of Glasow, a little brig of only one hundred and eighty-four tons burthen." To still further reduce expenses it was decided to "do our own vitualing," etc., the captain of "the Scotch brig" agreeing to "supply fuel and water." And so our first foreign missionary went out in luxury (?) to preach, and teach, and practice medicine among the unfortunate descendants of Abraham in the "City of the Great King." He left the United States about the middle of September, 1850, expecting to arrive at his destination by the close of the year. The voyage was unsually and unexpectedly tempestuous. January, 1851, found him on the ancient Island of Melita. At one time, as a result of the storms through which "the little brig" passed, he says: "We were reduced almost entirely to a diet of crackers and cheese." He purchased some Arabic books in London. A good deal of time was given on the way to a study of that language. Some time was also given to Greek, Latin, Italian and French. He preached on shipboard, both publicly and privately. He was "instant in season and out of season."

The first letter from Jerusalem was dated "February 28, 1851." While he was at Valetta, Island of Melita, he says: "Seeming, unexpectedly, that we could reach our destination more expeditiously and cheaply by a steamer which touched at Valetta while we were there awaiting the sailing of the Hebe than by pursuing our intended route via Alexandria we took passage in her and in six or seven days had the pleasure of landing at Beyroot."

Just as he was leaving the Hebe he learned that "the captain and second mate had decided to be baptized." He say that he was ignorant of this until "the very moment of our embarkation arrived, when it was certainly too late to administer the ordinance." He adds: "One of the sailors had previously requested me to baptize him, but such was his ignorance of 'the truth as it is in Jesus' (Episcopalian though he was), that I had come to the conclusion not to administer the ordinance until we should reach Alexandria, by which time he would have been sufficiently well 'instructed in the way of the Lord' to obey intelligently and satisfactorily." Dr. Barclay felt also that "the sailor would have been accompanied by others." The following words, taken from this letter, are worthy of especial attention at the present time as indicating the care with which "the fathers" received persons to the ordinance of baptism:

"I have seen so much evil both to the cause and to the preacher result from hastily thrusting into 'God's building' improper materials of 'wood, hay, stubble,' that I am perhaps too much afraid of precipitancy, and acted with too much caution in this instance. But still, whether or not we should 'baptize the same hour' that application is made must, in my opinion, depend somewhat on circumstances."

The missionaries were detained five days in Beyroot before arrangements could be matured for prosecuting the journey to Jerusalem. In order to avoid "heavy expenses" they determined to go by land. Moreover, time would be saved by going on horseback. They traveled along the sea coast via Sidon, Tyre, Ptolemais and Joppa, and through Lydda to the Holy City. Nine days were spent in making the journey, exclusive of the Lord's day, which was spent in Sidon. All were in good health and fine spirits when Jerusalem was reached. But Dr. Barclay says: "If I may credit what I am told on all hands, there is no worse missionary ground on all the earth than this same city." He said in the same letter: "I yearn over this benighted people, ardently long for the time when I can proclaim to them, in their own language, the truth as it is in Jesus." "There is no place on earth," he continues, "where the diffusion of the truth is more needed than this very spot." He found the most determined opposition to his efforts on behalf of the people of Israel, from the beginning to the close of his work, on the part of men who called themselves Christians. He says that he was seriously advised by a clerical friend "to join the Anglican Church if I would escape persecution." He did not join the Anglican Church; he did suffer persecution. It would seem from Dr. Barclay's letters that he found hardly anything in Palestine as he expected when he left America for the Holy Land. He found missions and missionaries. He found that money was expended freely in Christianizing (?) the sons of Abraham. There was even extravagance in the use of money contributed in large sums by European Christians. He found that the Episcopalians, besides "several ordained missionaries, who speak the language fluently, have also here and in other parts of Palestine some half dozen native colporteurs, whom they give from 150 to 200 pounds sterling per annum simply to distribute tracts and the Scriptures." When the amount that Dr. Barclay and his familey were to receive as indicated by the action of the board, above quoted, no one ought to be surprised that in his account of this matter he added: "A sum, however, entirely too high." It was an occasion of suprise also to find "the bitter hatred of everything called Christian, on the part of the Jews." He was amazed "to find such wide departure from the simplicity and purity of the faith once delivered to the saints, on the part of those not only styling themselves Protestants, but claiming succession from the apostles!"

Dr. J. T. Barclay and family left New York at noon, September 11, 1850, and arrived in Jerusalem at sunset, February 7, 1851. Upon his return to the United States, in 1854, he noted carefully that he had had an official connection with the board of the American Christian Missionary Society just "four years, four months and four days."

THE EVOLUTION OF A DISCIPLE—II; Or, My Conversion to and from Methodism.

T. R. HODKINSON.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF REMISSION.

What I have written, I have written! That this sudden baptism of blessedness was of a truth "the remission of sins" and "the gift of the Holy Spirit," may be promptly denied by the wise, the scribe, the disputer about the "direct impact," the expert in the chronology of pardon; all such are welcome to pronounce, with complacent assurance, on this and many millions of similar cases, but far be it from me to limit my Lord. All evangelical denominations hold (as we do) that belief, penitence and obedience are the essential conditions of forgiveness; but — as the legatees of man-made creeds—their views of the proper order in which these conditions occur, of their interdependence, and of their scriptural mode of expression, are as varied as the creeds themselves. It is, therefore, no wonder that many amongst us misunderstand and consequently misrepresent the denominations in this matter.

In common with all Christians I regarded belief, penitence and obedience as necessary to salvation; though as to their sequence, relationship and embodiment my ideas were doubtless somewhat nebulous. Twenty years afterwards the Disciples "expounded unto me the way of God more perfectly," for which I felt an unwordable thankfulness; and to this has been added the twelve years of continuous study of one eager to retrace false steps and regain lost time. Howbeit, I have not even yet attained to the finality of divers "out-and-out Disciples," who (judging from the tone of their writings on this philosophy of remission) "understand all mysteries and all knowledge;" and I am not, therefore, presuming to agree with them. But to all my other brethren I earnestly submit that when the overwhelming sense of God's love possessed me, all the conditions had been virtually fulfilled. There was mental assent, the soul of belief; inward turning, the soul of penitence, and such a complete surrender as only waited for the opportunity of outward allegiance—the soul of obedience. If the last was not manifested in the appointed way of Christ's own ordinance of baptism, he alone (who values motive—the essential above environment—the incidental) could measure and locate the responsibility for its omission. "Who is he that condemneth?" "One thing I know!"

CONFESSING CHRIST.

Next morning in a warehouse full of comrades—all of whom could laugh and most of them swear right merrily—I requested a moment's attention, silently prayed, then quietly confessed my Lord, and no man laughed or swore.

To cheer the disheartened worker, it ought to be added that I never saw that street preacher before nor since. He was a passing stranger who unconsciously led me to Christ. I expect to thank him in heaven.

"CLASS MEETING."

One fact was as clear to me then as now—that to save myself I must save others—so from the start I eagerly took part in the "class meeting," gaining spiritual knowledge by listening to the various "experiences," and gaining practice in speaking by telling my own. Here also was formed the habit of systematic giving. These two valuable features were so distinctive of the followers of Wesley, that Methodism amongst the poor was popularly defined as "justification by faith, sanctification by the Spirit, a penny [two cents] per week, and a shilling [twenty-four cents] per quarter." Would that in this matter of stewardship toward God and partnership toward each other the Disciples might go to school to the Methodists.

"LOCAL PREACHER."

All "likely" young men were encouraged to study for the pulpit, and as the brethren adjudged me to be of that kind (a verdict endorsed by my private opinion) I spent all my spare coins and hours on Methodist literature, Wesley's sermons holding the place of honor. It never occurred to me to question their theology; my business was to make haste to digest it. In a few months an experienced local preacher "took me out" as his assistant; and a little later, on his recommendation, I "passed the Quarterly Meeting" (by examination), and my name appeared on the Preachers' Plan, at first "on trial," and finally in the regular list. I worked in the warehouse every day, studied every evening and walked from ten to twenty-five miles to preach on two out of every three Sundays, "without money and without price." Such a system would put "Our Plea" into every township in this land inside of five years!

THE MINISTRY.

Having received a better education than the majority of my friends, I was urged to devote my life to preaching. The preliminary examination was first, as to conversion and the fruits of my local ministry (piety stood before everything else); second, education, and third, acquaintance with Methodist theology. I had a good working knowledge of the Bible, but it was reserved for the Disciples to teach me how to rightly divide the Word of truth. My proof-texts were selected from Old and New Testaments alike, with a charming impartiality and a childlike indifference to context. The result, as now seen, was "a fortuitous concourse of" references. My preaching was chiefly on sin as ruinous here and hereafter, and forgiveness through the atoning sacrifice of Christ. I have not yet seen any reason for changing. More attention was directed to preparation for death than to the art of Christian living. This has been reversed, but I much regret that the Disciples cannot be credited with the improvement; ethical preaching not being one of our strong points. "The sweet bye and bye" was my theme oftener than "the nasty now and now." Thanks be to God for the "discovery" of sociology. For several years, undisturbed by any misgivings, I "went on my way rejoicing" in the ready-made creed of that glorious reformer, John Wesley, and fairly tingled with interest whenever standing where he had preached. By my twenty-fifth year I had delivered a thousand sermons, having walked over ten thousand miles for the purpose. In impecuniosity I was a true successor of the apostles (Acts 3:6), and could not afford to ride, whilst the splendid pike roads (so eulogized by Dr. Ernest Garrison) furnished abundance of healthy exercise.

"THE PENITENTS' FORM."

My chief delight was the "penitents' form" (mourners' bench). With intense sympathy I labored with souls in distress. Bunyan's pilgrim, clothed in rags, with the great burden on his back, rushing from the City of Destruction, his fingers in his ears, and crying, "Life! life! eternal life!" was no dream to me. Neither was the Slough of Despond; had not I wallowed there myself? But some man will say, "God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are, sectarians, enthusiasts, fanatics, or even as this Methodist. I believed, repented, confessed and was immersed. I break bread every Lord's day." O, thou tither of mint and anise and cummin! "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet," for any place whereon the sinner seeks his Savior is holy ground. With sorrow I remember how the beautiful simplicity, comprehensiveness and assurance of the apostolic way af salvation were (aye, and still are) marred by traditional methods; but let it not be forgotten that these methods are attributable to the misfortune of partial knowledge, due chiefly to inheritance and surroundings. And do we not know of ultra-loyalists claiming to be disciples (little "d," please, Mr. Compo), who encumber church registers and get their own names into print by the cheap means of an assenting nod and a hasty bath? Can any excuse be thought of for such a caricature of "the truth as it is in Jesus" by men with the obtrusive parrot-cry of "the Jerusalem gospel?" May the day soon dawn when merely traditional ways of working, whether Methodist or Disciple, shall make way for knowledge and disinterested sympathy. Alas! for the "wood, hay, stubble" in the burning day.

"THE SARCRAMENT."

My ministerial functions included "the administration of the sacrament" (Lord's Supper). In this sweetly solemn ordinance the Methodists unconsciously retain just a wee bit of Romanism. How could it well be otherwise, their order of worship being founded upon the Episcopal prayer book, and the Episcopal upon the Romish missal? But it is only outwardly so—in the name "sacrament," the ministerial celebrant and the kneeling communicants. They were always deeply reverent. If I have ever seen any approach to thoughtlessness or flippancy in connection with this most sacred ordinance, it was not at a Methodist "communion rail."

"CHRISTENING."

Another of my functions was to "baptize" or "christen" infants. Think of it! to transform the dear little innocents into "Christians," as the word implies. Of course our Methodist friends will repudiate any such intention; they are much better than their book, and it is much better than its mamma—the Episcopal book—which plainly teaches that every one of the sweet babes "deserveth God's wrath and damnation" (Art. 9), and therefore considerately provide for its regeneration by baptism. Consistently with this horrible theology, infants dying unbaptized (in England), were refused funeral rites by the lords of the national graveyards—the state church clergy. Until the altered law gave popular control over "God's acre," Methodist ministers and others were often called in to hastily "christen" a dying child. But with the great bulk of English Methodists, the original idea in the word "christen" has entirely evaporated through conventional usage, and the word itself has faded into a meaningless substitute for the phrase "baptism of infants."

A SCENE—BABY OBJECTS.

On my first "round" of my first "circuit" I duly arrived at the largest town—population 15,000—for the midweek preaching. Probably three to four hundred were present, and—to close the service—there were five children to be baptized. Now I always loved the little ones, and often carried them in my arms for mere pleasure; but this being my first christening I felt nervous, although I had carefully posted up for such occasions. The parents, or special friends, having taken front places with the white-robed babes, I gave the usual short talk on Jesus blessing the children, etc., and then taking each infant on my left arm, I sprinkled it and gave it back to the mother. Four had thus passed through the regulation ritual with the utmost decorum; and I was wondering why the fifth was not forthcoming when a pretty little girl, about four years old, was pointed out. I am told that in this county it is quite common for

Methodist parents to "neglect the baptism of their children" (as their spiritual guides would deem it) until they are older; but in England such apathy was considered almost heathenish. I was, therefore, not prepared for the little maiden, but as she responded to my smile and accepted the invitation to perch upon my knee, I hoped all would be well. She had been a most interested spectator, although not tall enough to see the actual sprinkling, and I had evidently gained her confidence; but when I shook the water from my finger-tips upon her face, she sprang to the ground and rushed down the aisle screaming with all her might, "I'll tell my daddy! I'll tell my daddy!" Needless to say, whatever sacredness had previously attended the ceremonial was rudely broken up, and we were glad to retire from such a scene. The only person who acted properly was the indignant child; the remainder of us sinned through ignorance of the fact that baptism is an act controlled solely by the enlightened conscience of the person baptized.

THE CALL TO A PERSONAL AND VITAL RELATIONSHIP WITH GOD THROUGH JESUS CHRIST.

C. C. ROWLISON.

(A SERMON.)

Text—Matt. 11:28-30: Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light.

II. JESUS' OWN CALL.—Let us now give particular attention to this personal relation of man with God, and with Jesus Christ himself, as it is set forth in the life and teachings of our Lord.

In the first place, it is worthy of note that the Gospels, as we call them, are not biographies of Jesus in any exact sense of that term. Almost all that we know of our Lord and his works is found in them, but evidently the primary object of their writers was not to give his complete history, but rather to convince men "that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that so believing they may have life in his name;" not to tell a story, but to reveal a life which is able to make pregnant with life and divine vitality all who come into personal contact with him. When we become able to grasp the New Testament conception of itself, we shall at once be freed from our rabbinical stickling for the letter of the Scriptures, and shall be able to taste the sweetness of that peace and rest which is promised to all the weary and heavy laden who lovingly, trustingly come to the Master. I say, then, that the fundamental characteristic of Christ's call is that we should come unto him. He is not especially calling us to accept the distinctive doctrines of God which characterized Judaism; he does not define his own peculiar relation to God and to man, and insist that we must comprehend and accept that in order to be received by him. But he simply says, "Come unto ME," oppressed with sorrow and care, and I will remove the grief and wipe away the tear. Come unto me, ye slaves of fashion and folly, pass under my yoke and ye shall find rest and peace. Come unto me and learn of me, all ye perplexed with doubt and distracted by the systems of the world. Come, and let my life and words be lived in you, and ye shall find that peace which passeth all understanding, that truth which can make you free. This, as it seems to me fundamental position of Christ, we are just beginning to learn. Let me emphasize that Jesus is giving to the world a life rather than a dogma; he would deliver men from the bondage of the law, whether ritual or moral; he did not lay down a rule of life, but he presented a life which fulfilled the law, and he bids us follow him into the freedom and peace of the sons of God. And this personal relationship with himself, this contact of life with life, is the means which he uses to form in us the divine life. Life itself, life alone, begets life, and it is because Jesus Christ is able to impregnate us with his own self that he becomes "able and mighty to save to the uttermost all who come unto God through him."

It is very significant that in all the New Testament teachings this truth stands uppermost. In the Sermon on the Mount, for example, the significance of the beatitudes is exemplified in his life. His teaching of nonresistance, if literally observed, would turn the control of the world over to robbers and knaves. But if followed in the spirit of his life, the very robbers are put to shame, and the remaining spark of humanity, which so long smouldered, is fanned into a blaze which transforms the whole life. His doctrine, not to provide for the morrow, would bankrupt the world in a few hours, if observed as some say it ought to be; but if observed according to the spirit, and not the letter, it drives away our fretfulness and care, and enables us to make real our doctrine of the Fatherhood of God. If we should follow out the letter of this great sermon, we shall become as much slaves to the law as was ever the Jews. If we become followers of the law, then Christ died in vain; for it was to deliver us from rules and forms, to give us life, that he lived and died; yea, and now lives at the right hand of God. If this is true of the Sermon on the Mount, it is also true of almost all his parables, and it gives the real meaning to most of his miracles. What other significance has the parable of the Prodigal Son, which has been very aptly designated "the gospel in epitome," than the personal, fatherly, vital relation of God with his wayward, yet repentant children? Take away from this the thought of actual, living relationship, and there is left nothing but the hull from which every particle of meat has been extracted. The lesson of the Good Samaritan is really understood by us only as we see it in life, when the outcast publican is made a constant companion of the Lord; where the poor fallen woman is delivered from her hypocritical executors of the law, and then told to go and sin no more; where the Son of Man becomes the friend of publicans and sinners. And so of his miracles. The poor man is delivered from his palsy in order to become a living witness "that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins." His own character, life, influence, whatever we may call the grace which he imparted, so filled the sinful and diseased that in strength they departed to their home, glorifying God. He feeds the five thousand, but he does this especially to teach them the truth of that hard saying, at which so many of his disciples from that day to this have turned away and followed no more with him: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, ye have no life in yourselves. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood hath eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day. For my flesh is meat indeed and my blood is drink indeed. He that eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood abideth in me and I in him. As the living Father sent me, and I live because of the Father; so he that eateth me, he also shall live because of me."

In those marvelous chapters in the gospel of John, which gave us so much of his teaching immediately preceding his crucifixion, there is nothing so emphasized as this one thought. "I in them and thou in me, that they may be perfected in one," is the keynote of that prayer which is uttered almost in the shadow of the cross, fervently committing the way of his beloved followers to the keeping of his Father. "I am the vine, ye are the branches. . . He that abideth in me and I in him, the same beareth much fruit: for without me ye can do nothing," is the thought which permeates all the beautiful Fifteenth of John. If he comforts us with the blessed words, "In my Father's house are many mansions; . . . I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I come again, and will receive you unto myself, that where I am ye may be also;" yet he tells us above all, "I am the way, and the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father but through me."

Yes, beloved, his truest word is, Come unto me. Come with your cares and sorrows, with your burdens and troubles, with your sin and shame, with your selfishness and meanness, with your conceit and arrogance, with your folly and shallowness. Come unto me and learn what life is, what its possibilities are, what its joys and blessings may be. Come, take MY burden, it is light; come, take my yoke, it is easy; and ye shall find rest to your souls!

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

HONEY FROM THE CARCASS.

J. S. HUGHES.

The carcass in this crux is the religious deadness of the age, and the honey is from the Isle of Patmos, where Jesus met John and gave us all those precious promises sweeter than honey and the honeycomb, for such is the Word of God. The bosom disciple in his lonely exile received and then gave to us. He says it is the revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave to him—gave to him to show to his servants—and that he sent and signified it by his angel to his servant John, who wept much to see part close sealed with seven seals, but was assuredly told by one of the crowned elders not to weep, for his Master, the Lamb, had prevailed to open its seals and he was commanded to go and to take the book from his hand when he had opened and to eat it and find it sweet to his taste; and was commanded to seal not up the book, but to "write in a book and send to the seven churches the things which are and the things which were and the things which shall come to pass hereafter," and John obeyed all and published them to the world. He "bare witness of the Word of God and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, even of all things which he saw."

He received these things from him who was like the Son of Man walking among the seven golden candlesticks, clothed with a garment down to his feet and girt about the breasts with a golden girdle, and his head and his hair were white as white wool, white as snow, and his eyes as a flame of fire, and his feet like unto burnished brass refined in a furnace and his voice as the voice of many waters; having in his right hand seven stars and proceeding from his mouth a two edged sword, and his countenance as the sun in his strength.

"And at the sight of him," John says, "I fell as one dead at his feet." Jesus said, "I was dead, but I am alive forevermore." What a message to believers is this!

Now, the other, the carcass—let us see how dead it is.

When the editor of a prominent Christian journal was offered a review of a book on the Revelation of St. John, and one that was meeting warm praises, he gave this reply for declining to publish it:

"People generally have an idea that works on Revalation are impracticable and visionary, the production of a diseased or crochety mind."

This is either very hard upon John, who wrote the book, or upon the preachers and editors, who have mislead the people. I am sure the people never got it from John nor from Christ. For the "people generally" believe the professions and claims which this book makes for itself. Did John, the author of this spiritual gospel, the disciple who was nearest to Christ, have a diseased or crochety mind? Was this one of the mistakes of St. John? John tells us that God gave it to Christ to be shown, and Christ opened it and told John to write it in a book and seal it not up, but send it to the churches, and we do have it. Is it sealed up?

Where did the people get this idea? They got it from their leaders, preachers and editors, for none of them ever studied the book to any extent at college with a view to teaching it, for I cannot learn that any college on earth teaches it as the other books of the Bible, though it crowns the revelations of God to man by a great summary. In this book the Holy Spirit seven times expressly warns us, Let him that hath an ear hear what the Spirit saith to the churches.

These distrusting preachers were very sure they knew enough of it to batter down Roman popes with, but became propogandists of despair and doubt and even mockery of this mightiest of books from the innermost apostle of Jesus. God expressly claims it as his revelation, given to Christ, and the angel who conveyed it twice solemnly declares, "These are true words of God."

Christ writes seven letters and the Holy Spirit advocates them as his true words, and the apostles are mystically represented as bearing them to the churches. John's writings, which are the most exalted and spiritual, find their climax in this book. And is it a "diseased and crotchety mind" that claims this book was not intended to be sealed, that simply trusts the book's own exalted professions of exalted power and mission to bless him that reads it?

Does not the book twice appeal to him that hath wisdom to consider it? What other book in the Bible is at all this pains to get itself well and deeply read?

If this awful book closes by pronouncing a judgment upon whoever adds to or takes away from its words of prophecy as unpardonable sin, what shall be said of those who take it all away? Whose mistake is this? Could we add any further contempt of it than to say that the church people generally regard the man who tries to explain it as impractical, visionary and as having "a diseased or crotchety mind?" Is not this very like the Jews' accusation against Christ who always spoke to them in parables? When the vast and mighty claims which the Revelation makes for itself were urged at a preachers' meeting the other day a very scholarly(?) preacher said that these very exalted claims which the book makes caused him to distrust its claims. A brave young preacher was indignant, and asked the scholar if he believed the Revelation of John was any part of God's work. The scholar reddoned and halted, and swallowed a lump in his throat twice as large as a donkey's head and a hundred times bigger than his little faith, and stammered, "Yes."

This is the carcass, this unbelief. It makes "the Word of God of none effect." This Revelation from Patmos is dead just as Paul's letters to the Romans and Galatians were dead in the hands of the papacy.

Is it not the strangest thing, the greatest paradox, that the one book that says the most for itself is the one we esteem least and most disparage? They say, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? Read its professions and its promises.

Peter and Paul and John were the three great apostles in the apostolic church. Peter was chief at the start and Paul in the middle and John at the close.

Papal Rome took up Peter as its pillar and foundation, and has been, like Peter, using the sword, and like him a legalist.

Paul's writings were revived in the sixteenth century, and the Protestant Reformation has followed his teaching and genius closer than Rome has Peter's. The constant strife and debate and demand for freedom are of Paul.

John is yet to speak the last and the greatest word. But as the persecution of the Judaizers drove the gospel to the Gentiles, as Rome's having cast out Paul's letters raised up Protestantism, so Protestantism, having crucified the Revelation of Patmos, God will raise up the regeneration of the world by its mighty, its ineffable, its glorious power to bless and to save the world. Here truth is mightier with the heart of the wise than the Arabian Nights in the heart of the child.

Mark these words, Oh, you who dwell in God! you in whose souls is wisdom: John will have the last word with this world. He has begun to speak. Hear him!

Paul reached the climax of his teaching when he made faith the highest principle of the human soul, and liberty his highest achievement of labor; bnt John makes love the highest attribute in the heart of God, and peace the abiding joy of the soul of man.

The future will get honey from the dead book of Patmos, the highest sanity.

NELSON A. McCONNELL.

J. W. INGRAM.

DEAR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Hundreds of our Lord's disciples will call you blessed for bringing into their homes such a good likeness of our venerable Bro. McConnell.

The writer can never look upon that "Quaker face" without a feeling akin to reverence.

When but a lad, in the rural home of my parents, that dear face was photographed upon my heart, there to remain through all time and eternity.

When I looked upon that face for the first time, in appearance it was the face of a beardless boy; and in that early morning hour of his eventful life of labor and sacrifice, that face was shaded by care and sadness, and awakened the sympathy of the lad who leaned against the opposite jamb of the old fireplace, and studied the young stranger's face with the unerring instincts of a child.

He was among strangers, in a wild, sparsely settled country, many miles from his young wife and little girl. His temporary home was only a log house, with few of the comforts of life.

He was seeking in that wild country a field of usefulness, where he could do service for the Master and provide a home for his dear ones for whose loving companionship his loyal heart so evidently yearned.

The writer's knowledge of those early days, that tried men's souls, and of the later years of great prosperity that have visited our people in Iowa, leads him to say that no one man has done more to lay broad and deep the foundation of the Christian religion in this great state than Nelson A. McConnell.

His profound love of the truth, that alone can bring freedom to the soul, was the controlling sentiment of his life.

When the truth needed a champion, he threw himself into the breach. As a debater he was as fearless as a lion, and never lost a battle.

While not favored with a collegiate education, he was always scholarly. He always knew his ground, and his positions were invulnerable.

When he saw an "open door" he entered regardless of salary, or the hardships to be encountered. There are men and women all over the land, especially in the West and South, who speak of him in the spirit of veneration. Everywhere I go, I find those who have been led to the cross by his faithful teaching. His methods were so purely scriptural and his building so guarded that but few of those converted under his labors ever turn their backs upon the ancient gospel.

It gives me great pleasure to say to him, while he is still with us, that of the hundreds of Disciples I have met who look upon him as their father in the gospel, I have never found one that does not love him with a deathless affection. This must be a source of great comfort to him in his last days.

A mighty host will gather about him in that glad forever and tell of their love and reverence for this hero of the cross, whose strong, logical sermons, and eloquent exhortations, taught them the way of life and won their hearts to Christ.

More than most ministers he was a "preacher of the Word." Being a close student of the Bible, of history, of current literature and of men, he was always instructive and entertaining in the pulpit. For many years he was much in my childhood home, and every recollection of him in word and deed is a benediction. Morally he was as true as truth. In all that goes to make up the ideal Christian life he stands out among men as one of the tallest cedars of Lebanon.

Does he not owe it to his thousands of children in the gospel to write out his busy life in detail, covering all those years of hardship—of travel and exposure—of debate and ceaseless struggle, and have them published for the help and happiness of those who shall survive him?

Dear reader, you will the better understand these words of mine when I tell you that I write of the man who taught me my first lesson in the gospel, and won my heart to Christ, and whose hands buried both my wife and myself in Christian baptism. It was he who led me into this blessed ministry of the Word, and whose kind, encouraging words cheered me in that beginning time, when the young minister would faint by the way but for such true, noble friends, who never leave nor forsake.

With all my father's family the memory of Nelson A. McConnell has been a holy fragrance, as it has to thousands of the Father's children.

Pasadena, Cal., March 30, 1899.

Is it Fair?

If, for instance, 2,400 churches give through the Foreign or Home Societies, is it fair to report that 2,400 congregations gave to Foreign or Home Missions, leaving the impression that no others gave when, perhaps, 500 other churches gave through the C. W. B. M. or in other ways? Would in not always be well to say, "Through the Foreign or Home Society?" It is not right to take one channel through which we give, let it stand for the whole amount we give, and compare that part with the aggregate gifts of other religious bodies.

Is there not really, brethren, a little tendency on the part of some of us to ignore work done other than through our particular channels? Remember, "We forbade him, because he followeth not with us." Then the answer, "Forbid him not: for he that is not against us is for us" (Luke 9.49, 50).

O. P. SPEIGEL.

Birmingham, Ala.

Our Budget.

—It looks as if spring had really arrived.

—St. Louis will do its best to put on a little green before the Congress convenes, just by way of contrast.

—By the way, have you decided to come to the Congress at St. Louis, April 25-27? If so, have you sent your name to the chairman of the committee on entertainment, F. O. Fannon, 3126 Locust Street?

—Preparation is going on bravely for a great jubilee offering for Home Missions. A notable feature of this preparation is that of special offerings by individuals.

—No church that has any appreciation of the significance of this Jubilee Year will be content with its usual offering. This year demands a special offering; that is, an offering of special liberality.

—As for the church that thinks because of other claims upon it, it can do nothing for Home Missions this year—well, that church, if there be such an one, is entirely out of line. It is a laggard. We cannot imagine a set of circumstances that would justify such a course.

—There ought to be a number of churches reaching the $500 mark this year in their offerings for Home Missions. There ought to be a still larger number of individuals who will make a special offering of $100 to emphasize this as a jubilee offering for Home Missions.

—Remember that the success of the Jubilee Convention, of Cincinnati, next October, is to be determined very largely between now and the first of May. Unless our contributions for Home Missions shall exceed very largely the contributions of former years, we shall in no wise enter into that Jubilee Convention with any genuine enthusiasm.

—G. W. Muckley, our Church Extension secretary, of Kansas City, Mo., called at this office on last Saturday, and told us encouraging things about his work. The offerings for Church Extension thus far this year are within $4,000 of the entire offering last year, and the total Church Extension Fund is now about $185,000. This, the secretary thinks, will reach at least $200,000 by the October convention; $210,000 by Jan. 1st, 1900, and $250,000, the amount recommended at the last convention, by the end of the year 1900. This is the time within which the convention recommended that the quarter million mark be reached. It is thus very encouraging to know that all our various missionary enterprises are in so prosperous a state and going beyond all past records in their receipts of offerings. Bro. Muckley's hopeful, cheerful way of presenting Church Extension interests is rapidly increasing the list of friends and supporters of this important branch of our work.

—Our missionary department this week is devoted again exclusively to the interest of the home work and the May offering. The literature is from consecrated men and of unusual interest. We also present again cuts of some of our missionaries in the home field which adds interest to the department. The literature we furnish is educational in its character, and when read leaves more permanent impressions of the importance of the work. It is also devotional, thus deepening the missionary spirit in the heart. We are not simply making a loud noise to no purpose, but setting forth the merits of a work that stands foremost of all our great church interests. We hope thereby not only to assist in making the jubilee offering for Home Missions worthy of our plea and people, but to contribute to the continued increase of Home Misssion offerings in other years. In the meantime, let us bend every energy to the largest possible offering for Home Missions on the first Sunday in next month.

—The article in our Family Circle this week from the St. Louis Republic, showing the rapid growth and enormous proportions of the beer traffic, will furnish food for much reflection. The far-reaching evil consequences of this awful business is incalculable. It ought to arouse every Christian to immediate action and make of every voter a prohibitionist.

—In speaking of the Congress of Disciples to be held in the First Christian Church, this city, in our issue of last week, the types made us say that it begins April 22nd instead of April 25th. The date is April 25th to and including April 27th. The types made us say in another paragraph, that the editor of this paper spent Sunday and three days in Chicago on business. The editor was in Chicago three days including Sunday, but the business, transacted on Sunday was the Lord's business, as indicated in our editorial report of the trip, on another page.

—In our evangelistic columns this paper we report the accession to our ranks of two ministers. One is W. A. Taylor, of Everett, Mass., from the Congregationalists, reported by R. H. Bolton. The other is Dr. Smith, of Clarksville, Ind., from the United Brethren. Both desire hereafter to be known only as Christians and to preach Christ and him crucified only for the salvation of souls. Dr. Smith is reported to us by Wm. Knotts, of Zionsville, Ind. These men are both highly commended by the men who taught them the way of the Lord more perfectly, and we hope that their devotion to Christ and usefulness in his service may be increased by their stand on the simple faith of the Disciples of Christ.

—Last week we gave the name of the two street car lines approaching nearest the First Christian Church, where the Congress of the Disciples is to be held, beginning April 25th. To reach the First Church from Union Station, observe the following instructions: Take red car going north on 18th Street at Union Station to Washington Avenue. Then get transfer ticket for any car going west on Washington Avenue to Garrison Avenue. Walk one block south on Garrison Avenue to Locust Street, then west on Locust to 3126, the church. F. O. Fannon, chairman of the entertainment committee, and pastor of the First Christian Church, is anxious to obtain the name of every person who expects to attend this Congress that entertainment may be provided. His address is 3126 Locust Street. Inasmuch as so many of those who are expected to attend will be preachers and that they have half-fare permits, other rates could not be obtained for those not delegates than those common to the public.

—Alvin I. Hobbs, whose portrait we give on our first page, was born March 13, 1834, in Ripley County, Ind. He became a Christian in the thirteenth year of his age. In 1854 he was ordained to the ministry, while yet engaged in mercantile business. But now the calls upon him became so frequent that he sold out his business and entered Northwestern Christian University, now Butler College, in 1858, from which he graduated with honors in 1862. Having located at Richmond, Ind., in that year, he was commissioned as chaplain of the 69th regiment vols. infantry. In 1863 he returned broken in health and remained so for three years. He served as pastor of several of our leading churches, as Richmond Street Church, Cincinnati, Bloomington, Ill., Fourth and Walnut, Louisville, Central Church, Denver, Colorado. In 1890 he was chosen dean of the Bible College of Drake University, which position he filled with great ability until his death in 1894.

Bro. Hobbs was a man of commanning personality, possessing a fine physique and great natural dignity. He was a preacher of splendid ability, blending very happily the argumentative and the persuasive. He was a prominent figure in our national conventions, and his addresses on those occasions were always listened to by his brethren with profit and delight. His death occurred at the very zenith of his power and fame, leaving in the memory of his brethren the image of a strong, manly man, devoting his full powers to the advancement of the kingdom of God. His widow and three married daughters survive him, and revere his memory.

—We have received a number of very enthusiastic expressions of appreciation of our Easter number. We thank these writers for their kind words.

—"The Tract Company," is the name of a new firm organized at Kalamazoo, Mich., for the purpose of publishing and distributing tracts in advocacy of New Testament Christianity. This company proposes to publish only tracts of the highest grade and to sell them at the lowest possible cost. Taking the two tracts already published, "The Teaching and Practice of the Disciples," by W. M. Forrest and "Why Am I a Disciple of Christ," by F. D. Power, as a sample of the work proposed there promises on neat work, good literature and practical themes will cerbe fulfilled. To make this enterprise a success that will be a benefit to the church the able and responsible brethren who have launched it, call upon the brotherhood for the most hearty co-operation therein. Individual societies and churches are asked to pledge themselves to buy annually for at least two years, tracts to the amount of at least one dollar. Donations are also solicited in this work. Every gift of $25 or more will be invested in a special tract and a report of its work made to the donor annually. There are other special features of which we cannot now speak. We wish this new enterprise the most hearty support in this good work. We need more and better tracts than we now have. For further information address the "Tract Co." at Kalamazoo, Mich.

—Of the many articles of unusual interest in the Cosmopolitan for April, that of F. W. Morgan on "Great Problems in Organization" and the editor's accompanying comments thereon are especially noteworthy. Evidently there is much to be said in favor of industrial organization, as Mr. Morgan argues, but the other side of the question, so ably presented by the editor of that ably edited journal, must not be overlooked. Prosperity for the rich only is not the kind of prosperity for which the country stands in need to-day, but prosperity for the whole country. It is strange that our statesmen generally persist in overlooking our own country as an outlet or a market for our products. There are no more liberal buyers and consumers in the world than the people of these United States in proportion to their means. Give them employment at good wages and our home markets will surprise the world. Our laboring men, as well as our millionaires, would live in fireproof houses if they could afford them.

—"The Building of an Empire," now appearing in the Cosmopolitan as a serial article and written by the editor of the Cosmopolitan, is becoming exceedingly interesting. The writer gives an insight into the life of the great prophet, Mohammed, of whose empire he is writing, not elsewhere so briefly yet so vividly told. The illustrations are idealistic, yet they contribute greatly to the interest of the articles. They help the reader to realize how far in the past and how truly Oriental are the things of which the writer is treating. The passing of Mohammed's life before the eye of such a critical writer of this age and civilization as John Brisben Walker, however, is not likely to add to the moral grandeur of the founder of one of the world's great empires. Whatever Mohammed may have been morally, by the standards of his age must remain the limit of his glory in this respect. The study of his character in the light of our present standards do not seem to add to his moral stature.

—The Outlook for April contains a number of answers from prominent preachers on the question, "Is the face of Christ as depicted in art a strong one?" Cardinal Gibbons said: "The face of our Lord which I am accustomed to see expresses both strength and kindness." Bishop Potter, on the contrary, thinks the art portraits "weak and inadequate," while Dr. Parkhurst says that they are "not only disappointing, but repulsive." Rabbi Gottheil declares: "I have never seen a picture of the being called Savior of the world in which strength was a marked feature, or even indicated. Naturally so because the being was not a man of flesh and blood, but the creation of theological fancy and dogmatic construction." Many other clergymen of note join in the discussion of this question in the April Magazine number of the Outlook.

—The April number of the Christian Quarterly, new series, is to hand so recently that we have not yet had the time to more than glance at its table of contents. The themes written upon in this number are "The Three Churches," by the editor; "God," by H. W. Everest; "Christian Endeavor, Etc.," by J. J. Morgan; "Comparative Value of Long and Short Pastorates," by Levi Marshall; "The Meaning of Heresy in Theological Development," by Mrs. Alberta Allen Forrest, and "The Minister as a Student," by G. K. Berry. As will be observed, this list presents some new writers. The usual departments of the Quarterly are well filled. "Table Talk" is especially suggestive. The note from the editor stating the lack of proper support, still, for the Quarterly, is not so assuring as we should like to hear. We had hoped that the subscription list of this incomparable magazine had grown to the point of an assured and easy living. This at least is what it deserves and should have, and what is in the power of its friends to grant or secure for it.

—The election of Mr. Jones as mayor of Toledo, Ohio, on an independent ticket, by an overwhelming majority, indicates that the people are beginning to declare their freedom from political bosses and machine-made politics. Mr. Jones had more than two thousand votes more than the combined votes of the candidates of the two leading parties and seems now on the high way to the chief office of the state. Two cardinal points in Mr. Jones' platform are public ownership of public utilities and an eight-hour day at a minimum of $1.50 per day. By the way, it is remarkable how these two cardinal ideas are coming to the front in municipal politics. Some four or five mayors are now quoted as holding to these views. Evidently we re in the midst of a great industrial revolution, and the favorable results will not fall to organized capital alone. An adjustment is sure to come in which the laborer will not be the slave of trusts.

A MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Rev. C. H. Smith of Plymouth, Conn., Gives the Experience of Himself and Little Girl in a Trying Season—What He Depends Upon.

The testimonials in favor of Hood's Sarsaparilla come from a class of people whose words are worth considering. Many clergymen testify to the value of this medicine. Read this:

"By a severe attack of diphtheria I lost two of my children. I used Hood's Sarsaparilla as a tonic both for myself and little girl and found it most excellent as a means to restore the impoverished blood to its natural state and as a help to appetite and digestion. I depend upon it when I need a tonic and I find it at once efficacious." REV. C. H. SMITH, Congregational parsonage, Plymouth, Conn.

Hood's Pills cure liver ills; easy to take, easy to operate. 25c.

—The Orphan School Record, Fulton, Mo., easily holds its place well to the front in the list of college journals. The March number is made up of well-written and will-selected matter.

—The Evangel, Buffalo, N. Y., contains the briefs of a sermon on "The Conditions of a True Faith," by R. L. Lotz, pastor of the Church of Christ at Mapleton, Ohio, accompanied by good halftone picture of himself. The sermon feature of the Evangel is one of its specialties and proving quite popular with its readers.

—Alexander McMillan, corresponding secretary for the M. C. M. S. has drawn up a form of "Bylaws and Constitution" which he is recommending to poorly organized churches in his state. If any churches feel the need of rules for their business government and desire a good form, copies of those drafted by Bro. McMillan might be obtained by addressing him. They can be changed to suit any congregation. His address is Ann Arbor, Mich.

—The church at Winterset, Ia., adopted the individual communion cup by unanimous vote. Whilst claiming to be thoroughly loyal to Christ they regard the "mode" of drinking as much a matter of liberty as the mode of dress, or sitting at the table. T. R. Hodkinson, whose interesting serial article, now appearing in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on "The Evolution of a Disciple," is the pastor of the church at Winterset.

—The receipts for Foreign Missions for the first six days of April were $4,553.44. This is a gain of $923.72 over that for the same time last year.

—If the American Christian Missionary Society could have such a report as that of March for a few months the $100,000 mark would soon be passed; but of the $19,290.86 received, $18,000 of it was on the annuity plan and a gift from one party whose name has not yet been given to the public. Of this $18,000 annuity money, $2,000 was for the Foreign Society, $8,000 for Church Extension and $8,000 for Home Missions. The actual gain of the Home Society, therefore, for March over March, '98 was only $4,759.77. But considering that March is the month for the offering for Foreign Missions, this is somewhat remarkable, and a splendid omen of still greater gains for the remainder of this Jubilee Year.

—The announcement that the recent law abolishing the canteen system will not hold water will be a great disappointment to the true friends of the army. What means this persistent disposition of would-be reformers to juggle with words? It seems almost impossible to get a law against the liquor traffic that will hold water. It is either unconstitutional, lame or otherwise defective. Can it be that these defects are due to ignorance? May it not be possible that they are framed in words selected purely for deception rather than for reformation? If so, when will the people ever be undeceived in their law framers? It is simply a burning shame that the country has to endure such jugglery, such shameful deceptions, such outrageous impositions under the appearance of law year after year. The lawmakers as well as anybody knew that the demand was for a bill that would abolish the canteen system, and yet they failed to frame a bill that would secure this end.

—The indications of deception practiced by J. W. Keely in his pretended discovery of a new motor element, since his death, are about as sensational as were his frequently announced discoveries and their possibilities. That a man could successfully deceive the class of men who became the victims of Keely's scheme, for a quarter of a century, would be a greater miracle than his announced discoveries or any of their marvelous results even if his most sanguine expectations and consequent promises had been more than realized. Keely must have been seeking after something which he did not see, but evidently believed to be not far away, otherwise his deception would have been revealed. Most probably he was himself the most deceived person of all the victims of his visionary brain, and hence the manifest sincerity of the man at every crucial test (and there were many) through which he passed. People, especially capitalists, cannot always make the allowance they should for the failures of true genius.

—A poem on "Spring Cleaning" in the April number of the New Crusade, published at Ann Arbor, Mich., makes quite an extension of the annual domestic duty occurring at this season of the year on other lines, as indicated by the first stanza, thus:

Yes, clean yer house, an' clean yer shed,
An' clean yer barn in ev'ry part;
But brush the cobwebs from yer head,
An' sweep the snowbanks from yer heart.
Yes, w'en spring cleanin' comes aroun'
Bring forth the duster an' the broom;
But rake yer fogy notions down,
An' sweep yer dusty soul of gloom.

—Easter day was one of rejoicing at Sedalia, Mo. The Christian Church heard two excellent sermons, some fine music and raised $3,000 for the enlargement and improvement of the church building. Bro. Putman's preaching is to blame for the enlargement of the house.

—The Reform Burea, Washington, D. C., Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts, superintendent, sends out the suggestion that in every town of the civilized world and in all missionary stations there shall be a meeting for prayer and conference on universal peace on May 18, the date of the assembling of the official Peace Congress at the Hague Holland—an all-day meeting, if possible, on the broader theme, "How the World is to be Righted." Let us now study how so-called "necessary evils," such as the plagues of war and drink and gambling and impurity and poverty are to be abolished and the social relations of individuals and nations Christianized. It is suggested that the following petitions be adopted at this meeting or, better, earlier, that the one to be sent to the Hague may reach there for the opening of the Peace Congress, but even if not adopted until the 18th it will probably not be too late, nor will the one for Congress be to early, as public sentiment must speak in advance of Congress:

Resolved, That we hail with praise and prayer the official peace conference of all nations, called by the Czar of Russia, and authorize the president and secretary of this meeting to petition the conference in our behalf, not only to reduce burdensome armaents, but also to establish a permanent "Supreme Court of Nations," that may arbitrate between such powers as may unite in it as our own Supreme Court arbitrates between our sovereign states.

Resolved, That the same be authorized to petition the President and Congress to take up anew and carry to completion, as an installment of universal peace, the Anglo-Saxon treaty of arbitration, already approved by the people and government of the British Empire, and only postponed in the United States by the obstruction of a senatorial minority when it had been generally approved by churches and colleges, labor unions and boards of trade, Executive and House of Representatives.

—The Kinsman for March says that there should be no mistake made in the use of terms by the next Congress when it comes to deal with the constitutional amendment to prohibit polygamy. Adultery with religious sanction must not be left with a hiding-place in these United States.

—The Detroit C. E. Union has commenced the publication of a four-page paper in the interest of the coming C. E. convention. Its name is "Detroit '99." The various attractions for the convention will be set forth in the issues of this paper. The present number contains some beautiful halftone pictures of street and lake scenes.

—In an editorial last week we wrote, "Wealth is not necessarily sordid, but the disposition that regards it as an end instead of a means to a higher end is sordid." By omitting the italicised words above, the printer made us say exactly the opposite of what we wrote. The moral of this is that if the reader detects any error of that kind in our columns, he must lay it on the printer and proofreader and not on the writers.

—We are glad to know that Bro. Horace Morse, of Colorado Springs, Col., has given to the Ministerial Relief Fund $1,000, without condition. This amount Pres. Howard Cale informs us will be placed among the permanent funds as the "Horace Morse Fund." We trust this good example of Bro. Morse's will be followed by many others. The old preachers should be remembered in this year of our jubilee rejoicing.

—The New England Messenger for April contains this singularly interesting news item:

The saddening news of the death of Sister Sarah Boren, of Milton, Ind., has has reached us. She was a mute. She married a mute. Writer solemnized the marriage. She was the daughter of the late Elder W. Booth. When a young lady in a meeting the writer held at Milton, Ind., she confessed Christ and we buried her in the waters of baptism. It was a very impressive and enjoyable scene. She united with and lived a faithful member of the Church of God and triumphed in the hour of her departure.

—Dr. J. D. Craig, of Chicago, and Dr. Younkin, of this city, have begun a written discussion on "Vegetarianism" in the Chicago Vegetarian for March. Dr. Craig affirms man is so constituted that in order for his full development, both mental and corporeal, he should subsist on the direct productions of the vegetable kingdom and totally abstain from flesh and blood. Dr. Younkin affirms that man is an omniverous being, and that the eating of animal diet is in perfect harmony with his mental and physical development. The discussion will no doubt be as interesting as it is unique.

—The Church Progress seems not at all pleased with the Administration's way of doing things in Cuba and the Philippine Islands since the close of the war. (1) Sam Small, "a cheap and vulgar revivalist," is appointed superintendent of education in Cuba instead of a Catholic; (2) The Philippine Commission has no Catholics in its make-up, and (3) the establishment of a public school system in Cuba and Porto Rico instead of a public support of the Catholic schools, are some of its complaints. The Progress forgets the distinction between a Catholic and a Protestant nation. The Catholics have had their day in these islands and now comes the Protestants' turn.

—The church at Fredericksburg, Va., have asked the brotherhood for $1,000 to aid in rebuilding their house of worship at that important place. In response to their call $800 has been secured in cash and pledges. The use of this $800 is contingent on securing the $200 additional. The little band of Disciples at Fredericksburg propose to raise $500 themselves, making $1,500 in all. This amount put into their old building will give them a church property worth $5,000. Brethren everywhere are earnestly solicited to help this worthy enterprise. The Virginia churches are generally poor and have contributed freely to the fund. They ask aid from stronger churches outside. Send money and pledges to Cephas Shelburne, the pastor, Fredericksburg, Va.

PERSONAL MENTION.

J. M. Hunter goes to Forest Grove, Ore. He expects to enter the University there.

J. H. McCollough, of California, was at Vancouver April 2.

R. M. Messic goes to Kelso, Wash., half time, to Harkinson and La Centre the remainder.

Mr. Homer L. Corwine and Miss Birde M. James were married on Wednesday, March 5, 1899, at Frankford, Mo.

A. L. Zink, of Keoswaqua, Ia., desires to correspond with any church in need of a pastor for one-half or for full time.

C. M. Hughes, singer, is now at Rogers, Ark., assisting in a meeting, the first since his grippe sickness. Correspondence should be addressed to him at Rogers.

F. M. Branic reports 109 additions at Colchester, Fandon, Central and Tennessee, Ill., during the past year; 65 of these additions were at Colchester, Ill.

Bro. Mohorter, of Cleveland, O., has accepted a call to preach for the church at Boston, Mass., and will soon enter upon his work there.

S. D. Dutcher, the new pastor of the church at Mexico, Mo., has been callen upon to mourn the death of his father, which occurred on the 23rd of March.

The Christian Guide says that J. L. Parsons has resigned his work at New Albany, Ind., and commends him to any church wanting a preacher.

The State Endeavor Convention of Alabama, meets in Birmingham, April 14-16. O. P. Spiegel is chairman of the convention committee and Homer T. Wilson one of the chief speakers.

C. A. Young and family have returned from the South, where he has been lecturing at the Universities of Virginia and Georgia, to Chicago, Ill., where he is doing some special work in Semitics in the University of Chicago.

J. T. Ogle's annual pastoral report for the year ending March 31 is an excellent one: Money raised for all purposes, $5,250.08; for missionary purposes, $452.53. There were 34 additions to the church during the year. Bro. Ogle has been the esteemed pastor of the church at Carrollton, Mo., for four years.

Our Young Men, the Bulletin of the Southside Y. M. C. A., this city, for April contains the address of S. B. Moore, pastor Compton Heights Christian Church, recently delivered before the meeting of the Southside C. E. Union. It was a fine address on "In His Steps."

The Bethany Banner very deeply regrets Dr. C. A. Young's decision not to accept the presidency of Bethany College, and attribute the nonacceptance very largely to the unwillingness of the C.W. B.M. to give him up. Dr. Young has now been in their employ so long aad is so greatly impressed with the importance of their work that it is not strange that he should be so loth to give it up for a new field. Bethany College is now casting about for another man for that work.

A. J. Marshall, of Onawa, Iowa, has been called by the Mission Board of this city to the work of city evangelist. Bro. Marshall was in this city last week looking over the field and left the impression that the call from the city board would receive favorable consideration. He is doing a fine work at Onawa and the church there will be unwilling to let him go if only their wish in the matter be considered. But the larger field of work to which their pastor is called, with the prospect of enlarged usefulness for the Master, will probably lead them to consent to his resignation and removal to St. Louis.

CHANGES.

J. P. Adcock, Ft. Scott, Kan., to Sheldon, Mo.

Foreign Mission Notes.

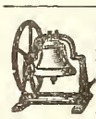
John Johnson, of Smyrna, Turkey, needs some magic lantern slides. Doubtless many persons in America have slides that they do not use and never expect to use again. It would help him very much if they would forward their slides to him.

Mr. Shishmanian and Mr. Chapman have been to Giol Dagh to dedicate the new church building there. The church has 32 members and is in good condition. Their building will be of the greatest advantage to them.

Mr. Shishmanian is making a tour of the churches throughout the empire. The churches have long been urging him to do this.

The latest letter from Africa is dated January 24th. At that time E. E. Faris was in good health. The property at Bolengi has been purchased. Dr. and Mrs. Dye sailed from Liverpool for Bolengi on the 13th of February.

Mrs. C. E. Garst and her three children have returned to America. At the present time they are at Sterling, Kansas, with Mrs. Garst's mother.



F. E. Hagin, of Pekin, Ill., has been appointed a missionary to Japan. He will leave for the field in August next.

Miss Lavenia Oldham reached Japan on the 15th of February in good health and in good spirits.

Dr. Nina A. Stevens wishes some money to support two girls in Akita, Japan. One is eleven years of age, the other twelve. The younger is a daughter of a miner, an earnest Christian, who is a leader in the church. If she is educated, it is believed that she will make a helpful woman for the work. The other is an orphan. It will take about $35 a year to support each girl.

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC

The best cure for Cough, Weak Lungs, Indigestion, Inward Pains and the ills of the Feeble and Aged. Combining the most active medicines with Ginger, it exerts a curative power over disease unknown to other remedies, and is in fact the most revitalizing, life-giving combination ever discovered. Weak Lungs, Rheumatism, Female Debility, and the distressing ills of the Stomach, Liver, Kidneys and Bowels are dragging many to the grave who would recover health by its timely use.

LIFE OF

ALEXANDER CAMPBELL

By Thomas W. Grafton.

This book is a condensed and accurate account of the life of this great religious reformer, beginning with his boyhood, and following him through his trials and triumphs to the end of his eventful life. This biography meets the wants of the busy people, who desire to know the important events in the life of this great man.

The following Table of Contents will indicate the scope of this book:

Preface, Introduction, Early Days, University Life, Emigration to America, Ministerial Preparation, Religous Discoveries, Trials and Triumphs, Christian Baptist, Religious Dissensions, The Christian Church, The Defender of the Faith, A Wise Master Builder, The Prince of Preachers, Travels at Home and Abroad, The Bethany Home, Clsingo Labors, His Place in History.

This book is printed in clear type, bound in latest style cloth, contains 234 pages, and the price is $1.00, postpaid.

English Topics.

ANTICIPATORY.

The great Jubilee Convention to be celebrated in Cincinnati will in the eyes of all of us, who are at this work in England, be the crowning incident of the 19th century. Several of us on this English side of the mighty blue streak are ambitious of presenting ourselves at Cincinnati in October. I am one of those who yearn to see as many as possible of our American brothers and sisters face to face, and I cherish the eager hope of at length accomplishing one of the dreams of my life. That dream is to see the grandest brotherhood on earth in the world's greatest country. Britain is the greatest little country the world ever saw, but America is the biggest big country. Each is bigger than the other in some things, and each is heir to greatness and glory such as no mortal has yet dreamed of. When I consider how many thousands of real Americans, and Americans of the noblest type in many cases, make their abode, happily, in London; and how many thousands of the best sort of English people delight to live in the United States, I realize that both these countries belong to both nations. But I want to see the American Disciples hasten to annex England, Scotland, Wales and Ireland, religiously and spiritually. That is infinitely more important than the political annexation of Cuba, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines, although the United States will do an incalculable service to humanity if she will simply and squarely accomplish that absorption. If I can come to America, and if several of our other brethren can do so, we will tell our American friends how to make the conquest of these islands for the New Reformation, and how thus to plant a citadel of spiritual power from which to attack the whole of the continent. It would give me unspeakable pleasure to visit as far as time permitted some of our American churches, and to preach and lecture on a few occasions here and there. I rejoice in the expectation that we shall be able to make up at least a small contingent from England for the magnificent occasion. I shall be glad to hear from churches and societies which would care to see and hear me. As I have traveled much, with my eyes wide open, in every part of Europe, and can offer lectures on what I know from personal observation of Russia, Turkey, Greece, Asia Minor and many other lands, I might be able to let some light in for American audiences on the social and religious phenomena of the continent of Europe.

THE SHELDON CRAZE.

I do not use the term "craze" in any disparaging sense when I apply it to the extraordinary wave of enthusiasm created in England by the different books, or rather booklets, of the new American author, Mr. Sheldon. I have never seen the whole English people so deeply moved by any writer. Even the sensation caused by "Uncle Tom's Cabin," in the years of my early childhood, was trifling compared with this. A few months ago sixpenny editions were issued, and at once I saw people everywhere with them in hand; and now penny issues are out, which are being devoured by hundreds of thousands of poor readers. This is an extraordinary sign of the times. Here we have a craze of the right sort, or at any rate one approaching the desired sort. The favorites amongst these little books are "In His Steps" and "The Crucifixion of Philip Strong." I am told that the impression in America is nothing like so deep and wide as that produced on this side. As is always the case when some thrill of popular emotion is evidenced, especially if it is a popular religious emotion, there is anxiety amongst the churches and the preachers on all sides; first, as to how to account for the agitation; secondly, as to how to estimate whether the sensation is likely to last, and must so be reckoned with, and thirdly, as to the best way of getting the greatest possible advantage out of the flowing tide of public feeling. I may not be right in my own estimate, but I have a conviction in my own mind that there is a powerful reason in the public mind for the intensely warm and even feverish welcome extended to Sheldon's books. The people of England have, at least amongst the masses of the workers, experienced a mighty disappointment, about which very little is said and nothing at all is written as far as I am aware. This Sheldonian wave follows the great Socialistic wave which has rolled through the community during the whole of this decade. That wave has entirely subsided. I never hear any talk of Socialist theories now in general society, though, of course, professional and fanatical Socialists will long keep up a show of activity and will find a feeble following. But the masses who had been bewitched by the silly English amalgam of Owenism, Marxism, Fourierism, Collectivism, Phalansterianism and Fabianism, chiefly under the lead of blatant striker leaders, and "Social Democratic Federationists," have been chilled by despair of ever seeing the loud promises of a new order of things even incipiently fulfilled. Christian Socialists blossomed out in High Church quarters, and parish priests who played at Mass in the morning and masqueraded as Socialists in the evening, thought they had found out at last how to bewitch the working classes and to lead back all the crowds of soiled and quagmired wanderers to the true fold of the lost sheep. But this silly sheep refused to come. Although nobody says so—at least I do not hear any such utterance—I believe that the people in countless numbers are confused and benumbed by the failure of the attempt to institute a new Paradise on earth with God and the devil alike shut out. Everybody was going to be so good, if only everybody's environment could be speedily perfected! There would be no more sin, no more sorrow, no more crying, especially no more sin; and, indeed, sin was not going even to be mentioned again, for had not Mr. Bellamy sometime since prophesied in "Looking Backward" that there would indeed be something left called Atavism, but that hereditary relic of our wicked grandfathers would be relegated to a comfortable asylum out of sight of the community generally? Well, the people are conscious in their inward hearts that they have been willingly befooled and bewitched, although there is no popular confession of the disappointment. Mr. Sheldon happened to do a timely thing, for he just at a particular crisis put into simple language, without any pretense to literary ability (for he has not a particle of that) the need of consulting Jesus. He has put God in front of the common people at a moment when, because they had by myriads forsaken him, they were conscious that all had somehow gone wrong with their most cherished aspirations. The religious organs are now beginning to discuss Mr. Sheldon, and for the present I will leave them to do so. I believe that we may find ways of helping out of the mire of scepticism many who have been profoundly stirred by these simple but heart-moving books. The question with us is not "What are Christians doing?" or "What are the sects doing?" but "What would the Master have us do?"

The artist who is in search of attitudes descriptive of torture, and poses depicting suffering, need not go to the Christian martyrs of old. If he could only see through the walls into tens of thousands of homes all over this land, he would see women undergoing tortures in silence without complaining, before which the brief ordeals of the martyrs pale into nothingness.

No one but a woman can tell the story of the suffering, the despair, and the despondency endured by women who carry a daily burden of ill-health and pain because of disorders and derangement of the delicate and important organs that are distinctly feminine. One of the worst effects of troubles of this kind is upon the nervous system. The tortures so bravely endured completely and effectually shatter the nerves. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is an unfailing cure for all weakness and disease of the feminine organism. It makes it strong and healthy. It allays inflammation, heals ulceration and soothes pain. It checks exhausting drains and tones and builds up the nerves. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Good medicine dealers sell it, and have nothing "just as good."

"Since my last child was born, thirteen years ago, I have suffered from uterine trouble," writes Mrs. Paul Devraine, of Jellico, Campbell Co., Tenn. "I consulted several doctors and took much medicine, but found no relief. I had very bad health for twelve years. Every month I was in bed a week before the monthly period and a week after. I was obliged to keep in bed for four months last summer. I was just like a corpse. I lost twenty-six pounds in four months. I was coughing so much I was considered in consumption. I suffered severely from pains in my back, bearing down pains in the womb, chills and cold sweats. After taking four bottles of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery my coughing stopped, and after six bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription my periods became regular and were passed without pain. Now I am fleshy, more so than ever before. My neighbors are surprised to see me in such good health after having seen me so low."

Constipation causes and aggravates many serious diseases. It is speedily cured by Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

New York Letter.

Easter was a high day in the 169th St. Church of the Disciples of Christ. Our new chapel on the Southern Boulevard, near 167th St., was solemnly dedicated to the service of God. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon the branch Sunday-school marched, one hundred and fifty strong, from the old meeting-place (a storeroom) in 169th St. to the chapel into which they entered singing, "Marching with Christ our King." The school then rendered a special program of interesting services, consisting of Easter songs, music by the children's choir, congratulations from the main Sunday-school, presented by a representative committee and an address by the superintendent. At 3:30 o'clock the dedication service proper was held, the chapel being crowded with happy people. The special inspiring music of the occasion was furnished by Mr. and Mrs. James Roscoe, of New Jersey, the Logan Quartet, of Pelham, N. Y., and our own church choir. A financial statement was made by the pastor and Bro. W. C. Payne, pastor of the church on W. 56th St. made an appropriate dedication address And then by prayer the building was solemnly set apart to the work and worship of God.

The chapel is a framed wooden structure, 20x48 feet. It is covered with shingles and ceiled with yellow pine. The windows are of modern design and made of colored glass. Altogether it is considered a neat, tasteful, little house, and well suited to the purpose for which it was built. The plans were presented gratuitously to the church by Mr. Harry Van Benschoten, architect, and have proven acceptable to the whole church. Mr. J. H. Demerest, one of our deacons, who is a carpenter, built the house and thereby saved the church a considerable sum of money. The church has raised a fund of $1,000 by the sale of noninterest-bearing bonds, at $10 each, to be redeemed in serial order, at the rate of two per month. In this way the church borrows money from its own members in small sums, and thus saves intrest and distributes the burden among the people. The building costs us about $1,200 and the organ and furnishings $300 more—a total of $1,500. We have leased the lot on which the building stands for a term of five years at an annual rental of $75, with the privilege of renewal at the expiration of the lease. Our Sunday-school is growing and the outlook for this new work is full of promise. The branch work has almost doubled our Sunday-school force and has broadened and deepened the intrest in our work at every point.

The Disciples of Christ in the Eastern states will hold a missionary conference at the First Church, Philadelphia, May 9-11. Bro. H. O. Breeden will be present from beyond the territory of the conference and will speak two or three times. All the preachers from Virginia to New England and others interested in the forward movement of our work in the East should be present. The Philadelphia brethren will furnish free entertainment for all who will attend the conference. All intending to be present should send their names to Vincent B. Brecht, 1917 North 11th Street, Philadelphia. This should be done immediately. We will look into the question of securing reduced transportation and make a statement as soon as possible. Bro. J. S. Myers and the First Church are anxious that large delegations be present from all our Eastern churches. A program will be issued in a short time. Will you not write us at once, saying you will be present? This conference should be the beginning of a great forward movement in the East.

Bro. F. W. Troy preached his last discourse as pastor of the Sterling Place Church of Christ, Brooklyn, the first Lord's day in April. What Bro. Troy's plans are, or what the church is planning to do in regard to another pastor, has not been reported.——Young Bro. Keevil, a recent graduate of the College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., is at the Green Point Church, Brooklyn, looking the field over with a view to locating.—Bro. Roland A. Nichols is doing a splendid service at Worcest, Mass. A Congregational Church, disbanding, asked him to enter the field and in a short series of meetings at the Belmont St. school 38 people have united with the Lord. We rejoice in his prosperity.

Using the Uniform Topics.

While variety is the spice of a prayer-meeting it may easily become its bane also. The rue idea is variety within certain limits, or variety hedged by a certain measure of uniormity. Reading, prayer, songs, remarks are and must be prayer-meeting staples. But these may be varied almost indfinitely.

1. Take the readings, for instance. There are two Scripture selections with each topic, averaging from four to ten verses each. That s a good length for public reading. They may be both read by the leader, or by the leader and the meeting responsively, or by all in concert, or by two young men chosen for the purpose, or by two young women, or one by an individual reader and the other selection by the prayer-meeting in concert. Here are six variations possible, and as many more could easily be added. Don't let even the reading be humdrum. Vary them.

2. Take the prayers also. A prayer-meeting, not to be a misnomer, should have many prayers. But how easily they fall into a rut. Heaven pity a prayer whose phraseology everybody present knows beforehand! Heaven pity a prayer-meeting afflicted with long-winded prayers that "cover all creation!" Now the Uniform Topics are meant to make the prayers brief and specific. Let it be understood that the whole meeting must center about the topic, and that prayers as well as talks must be short and to the point. Call for three or four brief prayers, one right after the other, namining beforehand the persons to offer them. Call for sentence prayers, giving the privilege of participation to all present. These for variety. The single prayer is, of course, the standby.

3. Take also the songs. Need I say that spirited and spiritual singing is a sine qua non? And how telling the song that fits the topic! Vary the program by learning a new song once in a while, by having the verses sung as a solo, all joining in the chorus, by introducing an occasional duet or quartet. Emphasize the musical feature. Make it attractive. And encourage the starting of voluntary songs by any who are so disposed, at fitting times in the meeting. Have sometimes an entire service of song, varied only by a Scripture reading and an opening and closing prayer.

4. And finaly, the remarks. It is a mistake to think they are the chief thing. The worship in song and prayer is the chief thing. But well timed remarks add no little to the interest. But they should be well-timed, devotional and should quit when they are done. And why the men do all the talking? Let the women have their liberty. Encourage thoughtful ones to bring and read brief papers on particular phases of the topics. Suggest something of the kind the previous Sunday to a sister you may choose, and see if it don't prove one of the best things of the meeting. If need be, cull from the prayer-meeting articles in our weekly papers a choice paragraph and have some one read it at the proper time. And every now and then try the "memory meeting" plan of closing all books, and getting songs, Scriptures and everything else in the meeting from the unaided memory of those present.

These are mere suggestions, of course. They could be greatly lengthened out. But they are given to stimulate thought concerning this valuable midweek meeting, and to affirm the conviction that the prayer-meeting out of which much comes must be the prayer-meeting into which much is put.

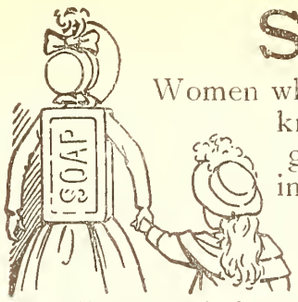
To Bible-school Workers.

Our church papers are teeming with such things as "$150,000 for the Foreign Missionary Society," "$100,000 for Home Missions," "100,000 souls for Christ," "Expansion," Enlargement," "Jubilee Year," etc., etc. We think it fitting to consider what the Bible-schools have done to aid in bringing about these enlarged efforts; also to take a pre-view of how to improve upon the past. In reviewing reports made at the last national convention we find some things worthy of note, viz., the Foreign Society collected last year $130,925. Our schools gave $34,334 of this amount. Number of contributing churches, 2,907; contributing schools, 3,180; gain in contributing churches, 321; gain in contributing schools, 370; 752 churches raised their apportionment; 926 schools raised their apportionment; 5,868 children each gave or raised as much as $1; 1,221 schools used birthday boxes. A special children's day was inaugurated in 1889 to raise funds for the Home Board. That year they raised $375; in 1890, $2,100; 1891, $2,392; 1892, $2,213; 1893, $3,550. Then special collections were abolished. Yet that year (1894) $1,597 was paid, and the next year, $334; 1896, $469, and in 1898, $584. We see the amount paid to the Foreign Society, $34,334, and $584 to the Home Society, makes $34,918 paid the past year by the schools.

Likely, our schools have paid several thousand dollars more to institutions at home and abroad. For the 7,250 schools, with their 700,047 officers and pupils, we think this is encouraging. The last national convention decided that there should be a Children's Rally Day for America, held the Sunday before Thanksgiving day, the offering thus secured to be divided as follows: One-fifth to Board of Church Extension; two-fifths to State Board of Missions of the state or district from whence it comes, and the remainder to the Board of the A. C. M. S.

An immense amount of valuable work has been done in all parts of the country (especially in cities) by the establishing of mission schools that have paved the way for organizing effective churches. It is evident from the above and other data that the rising generation of workers will be much more efficient than the present. Better educated in head and heart, and with the experience of the past to aid, great results may be expected.

The officials of the general union work places our schools and workers as second to none. This is also encouraging. But should we not, in the proper spirit, try to go far in advance. While we should feel encouraged and thus be prompted to do more work, yet from another point of view the work being done in this great and noble factor of the church is but as child's play when we think of the talent represented in our schools, the time spent each Sunday in our school work, the amount of money spent for school supplies and the superior class of helps offered workers. In addition to this, Chautauquas, assemblies, normal classes and institutes are so generally distributed that those who will may avail themselves of valuable help. Now, is the amount of money raised for various church interests, the number of schools, number of pupils, the amount of information imparted, the souls brought to Christ and the growth in grace and good works a fair showing for the capital invested, helps offered and the demands of our great Leader? We say a thousand times, No!



This brings us to the important question we wish all may be ready to carefully, conscientiously and prayerfully consider, namely, How enlarge our field of usefulness? What is in the way of greater success? We wish a number of replies. Reply on postal card in as few words as you can to save space in the Christian-Evangelist, which offers space for a number of replies. The replies will likely suggest some other topics for after consideration, such as, How produce more co-operation and uniformity in our work? How aid the Missionary Society more? Should we have a different system of Bible lessons? If so, how secure them? etc., etc. An improvement in the worker and the work will solve many questions. Let us hear from you, brethren and sister. Bethany Jubilee Offering.

In answer to a general wish, expressed in various ways, by a wide circle of the friends of Bethany College, for some kind of a popular collecton, to meet the present wants, and help the work of endowing the institution, the members of the board of trustees have united in the following appeal:

PITTSBURGH, February 11, 1899.

We, the undersigned members of the Board of Trustees of Bethany College, believing that the time has come when we can clear the institution of debt, provide for running expenses, and in the future avoid all deficiencies, hereby unite in a request for a generous, spontaneous, enthusiastic jubilee collection, to be taken for this purpose in all of our churches. We hereby declare it the purpose, if this wish is complied with, to keep the expenses of the college within its income, even to the extent of impairing its efficieny, rather than to further endanger its existence by increasing obligations which we have no immediate resources to meet. If this collection is given before the close of the present collegiate year in June, 1899, we believe that the purpose of endowing the college and of placing it on a firm and safe financial basis can be speedily attained, and the necessity for incurring future deficits avoided."

The following financial statement will give an idea of the present and prospective resources of the college:

Buildings and Lands at Bethany, W. Va., including the college proper, Phillips Hall—a dormitory that will accomodate sixty students, almost new and finely arranged, the beautiful and imposing structure of Pendleton Heights, with accommodations for twenty-five more, a residence that will accommodate an ordinary family, over seventy acres of good, rich land with a five-foot vein of coal underlaid, the aggregate cost of which was not less than	$250,000.00
Equipment, consisting of pianos, furniture, carpets, chemical laboratory, scientific apparatus, etc., etc., that cost fully	14,000.00
Real Estate in Kansas City, Mo., and a farm of 640 acres of the finest agricultural land in Texas, conservatively valued at	4,500.00
A tract of the finest agricultural and mineral lands on the Cumberland plateau in Tennessee (variously estimated at from $5.00 to $10.00 per acre)	7,500.00
Bank Stocks, at par value (quoted at $1.08)	4,500.00
Interest Bearing Notes	25,830.50
Non-Interest Bearing Notes and Pledges	30,650.00
Ten Bequests known to have been made for the benefit of the College	20,000.00
The Legacy from Edinburgh, Scotland, (estimated at foom $25,000 to $50,000)	25,000,00
Total Assets from property, etc., at Bethany, W. Va.	$117,980 50

The total indedtedness of the college amounts to about $35,000, of which about $27,950 is funded, and can be carried without much financial distress. The floating indebtedness, which includes the balance of the $35,000, is about half provided for by subscriptions.

The balance, along with current expenses for the remainder of the year, we hope to be able to provide for by the time the board of trustees meet in annual session, June 14,15, 1899. It would not be extravagant to say that we believe the entire indebtedness of Bethany College will be retired by the close of this century, and a fund of $100,000 in cash or its equivalent placed in perpetual trust as a permanent endowment. Such an achievement, however, cannot be accomplished without the co-operation of our brotherhood in her behalf as suggested above.

A generous friend of the college has recently made an offer to place in the hands of the Mercantile Trust Company, of Pittsburg, Pa., $10,000 in cash, or productive securities (which are better than cash), if the friends of the college will add $40,000 more to it, of the same kind, on or before the first day of July, 1899. This amount we believe can be realized, to meet the above conditions, by collecting what has been pledged to the endowment fund on the condition of raising $100,000 from those who are willing to do so and from other sources.

To realize this first block of $50,000 of permanent endowment, and safely invest it, will require the united and best efforts of the friends of Bethany College. It is with this in view that we come, asking for a hearty, spontaneous, ubiquitous, enthusiastic and universal jubilee collection.

We do not wish to antagonize any other interest or enterprise. Bethany has always been a warm friend of every good cause, and has always done her full share for them all. She has never raised an objection nor struck a note of discord in all her history, when any worthy appeal has been promulgated.

She comes this once, and at this supreme moment, when every dollar that is thrown into the balances will score more than ten times its value under ordinary circumstances; and most likely for THE LAST TIME, asking that in all its churches a brotherhood which owes to her its very existence will come to her help and rescue.

An average of $5.00 to each hundred members, or of five cents to each individual, would be a very small burden to bear, but it would bring to us the handsome sum of $50,000. It is not at all likely that so general an offering can be taken, but it is at least worthy of an effort.

For every dollar that has been given to Bethany in the last 58 years, she has returned a thousandfold, and is still able to do so. To desert her now, for any excuse whatever, would be an act of the basest ingratitude. She holds the supreme right of eminent domain over every other interest, at the present time, because of the crisis that confronts her very existence. We ask the hundreds and thousands of her friends to help us to take advantage of this opportunity to clear her of all financial embarrassment. If we can successfully pass this crisis, the future will be full of hope and promise. Realizing the first sum of $50,000 by July 1, 1899, another equal amount, we believe, can soon be realized, even more easily than it will be to get the first block. Our Scottish legacy alone may more than amount to that sum. It is by no means visionary to claim that behind this aggregate sum of $100,000 lies in prospective resourses at least another $50,000 for the permanent endowment fund of the college, if what we already know of the legacies and other anticipated gifts is any assurance of what we may reasonably expect.

There never was a better time for taking an offering of this kind than at present. Business is reviving and has attained to an unprecedented volume.

Perhaps never before was there so much money in so many hands as now. A warm welcome has awaited Bethany's cause wherever presented. What the people want is a chance to understand her claims and to render assistance. We ask our preachers to do this much, and the people will do the rest. Such an opportunity opens to welcome our best efforts as was never before known in the history of the college.

No particular day is named for taking the offering. We leave the time and manner of taking it to the good sense and practical wisdom of our friends.

Can you not take it before the close of the present month or by the first week of the ensuing month?

We would suggest that the names and addresses of local agents, or of those who serve on soliciting committees, or are otherwise interested or active in advancing the good cause, be forwarded to us to be placed on the ROLL OF HONOR, that they may be remembered for their disinterested kindness. May we have from you a line assuring us of your interest and your intention to help, and to try to enlist others?

The time for the offering is from now to July 1st, 1899.

All funds should be sent to

Cotner University Rescue League.

The work of raising the Trust Fund for the purchase of Cotner University goes steadily forward.

Pledges are coming in constantly, but not in arge numbers yet. The earnestness is increasing the nearer we approach the final end. Our brethren are not going to permit a valuable plant that cost over one hundred thousand dollars to be lost to the vital cause of Christian education for the want of seven thousand dollars. We must keep vividly in mind that the time is short, however, and that there must be an immediate response to this call. Send your name and address to J. W. Hilton, of Bethany, Nebraska, with a pledge to pay one dollar or more to this sacred fund by June 1, 1899.

Our preachers and business men are grasping the importance of the situation. The following is from Judge W. W. Slabaugh, Judge of the District Court, Omaha:

"Cotner University must be secured. We owe it to our name as a people, to our honor as a church, to the successful spread of our plea in the future and to those who have so faithfully toiled and sacrificed for it. We owe it to ourselves, our children and children's children, who must take up the work impressed with conditions in which we leave it, and who cannot correct the error we now make and will make unless we secure our Universitp in Nebraska. Now or never."

"I want to add that Cotner will also stand for Christian culture that is needed by our young people who go into all callings in life. This is only sure in a Christian college.

"The redemption of Cotner University would be a glory to the brotherhood and the cause of Christ. Its loss would be irreparable. In God's strength it must be done."

Preach the Word.

I recently read an e ditorial in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on the suggestion that we turn the morning service into a Bible class. I believe the following service approached that idea. The congregation read in concert Psalm 139:1-12, 17, 18, 23, 24. In place of the sermon I then read the following portions of the Word of God: Matt. 5:7-9; 6:12 15; 18:1-4, 21-35. Mark 10:42-45. Luke 18:9-14. John 15:12-17. Romans 12:3, 9, 10, 11-21; 14:9-13. 1 Cor. 13:1-13. Gal. 5:13-15, 25:6-5. Eph. 4:1-3, 31, 32; 5:1, 2. Philip. 2:1-4, 14. Col. 3:8, 12-15. James 1:19, 26; 2:12, 13; 3,1-18; 4:11, 12; 5:9. 1 Peter 1:22; 3:8-12; 4:7, 8. 1 John 2:7-11; 3:10-18, 23; 4:7-21. The reading of these passages occupied thirty minutes. At the close I said, "I can add nothing to the words you have heard. They give exhortation and command. Let us heed the one and obey the other."

The observance of the Lord's Supper that followed was marked with unusual deep feeling.

I would be happy to hear that this sermon had been preached to many of our congregations. Other sermons on the same plan might be given on Prayer, the Holy Spirit, World-Wide Evangelization, the Pre-eminence of Christ the Lord, Sin, Baptism, etc. I intend to give other sermons of the same kind. If the portions of the Word are carefully studied and carefully read the impression is reverent and deep. One member of the congregation began to say after the sermon, "I had rather hear you preach." She immediately corrected herself saying, "I should not say that, for you have spoken to us this morning the Word of the Lord." MARION STEVENSON.

A Unique Present.

Preachers frequently receive presents, but mine is unique and from a unique donor. The present consists of 18 photographs of our "Forefathers," gathered up through a series of years, and highly prized by a devout Christian woman. The pictures are of John Smith, Thos. Allen, Benj. Franklin, Joseph Waller, R. C. Ricketts, John Rogers, D. S. Burnet, Frank Allen, Alexander Procter, Jacob Creath, John T. Johnson, John Allen Gano, Knowles Shaw, Aylette Raines, Walter Scott, Oliver Steele, H. T. Anderson and last, but not least, Alexander Campbell. Of these most are "fallen asleep," but a few "remain unto the present day." All these heroes of the cross our sister has heard preach the "glorious gospel," in different states and cities, in regular ministry and in stirring revivals. How rapidly the hour sped by as this remarkable woman talked about each one of these men, telling personal incidents both humorous and pathetic. She has been an interested "eyewitness" of our glorious Reformation from its birth till the present day.

And now a word as to the unique donor. She is Mrs. S. T. Halyard, familiarly known as "Grandma" Halyard. She is a remarkable woman. Remarkable physically, being now nearly 91. She has missed church services but four times this year, attends the Ladies' Aid Society and while the others sew she entertains by reading the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST or telling conundrums and stories. She visits the sick near her and has called on the writer five times since being here. Remarkable mentally, reading her Bible daily, and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST weekly and with her remarkable memory can talk interestingly both of the past and present. Remarkable spiritually; pious, devout, loving the church, urging the spread of our churbh papers and exhorting the negligent. She lives in daily expectation of God's call to her to come up higher, but she knows "Him in whom she has believed" and is ready to go at any moment. God bless this noble woman for her present, which I shall prize as she has prized it, but more for what she is herself. W. F. TURNER.

A REMARKABLE INVENTION

BY AN OHIOAN.

A genius of Cincinnati has patented and placed on the market a remarkable Bath Cabinet, whereby any one resting on a chair within, enjoys the famous Turkish, hot vapor or medicated baths at home for 3 cents each, heretofore enjoyed only by the rich at public bathrooms, health resorts, hot springs and sanitariums. These baths are celebrated for their marvelous cleansing, purifying and invigorating effects upon the human system, and this invention brings them within the reach of the poorest person in the country.

CABINET OPEN—Step in or out

FOLDED

Clouds of hot vapor or medicated vapor surround the entire body, opening the millions of sweat pores, causing profuse perspiration, drawing out of the system all impure salts, acids and poisonous matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs and skin, causing disease, fevers, debility and sluggishness.

Astonishing is the improvement in health, feelings and complexion by the use of this Cabinet, and it seems to us that the long sought-for natural method of curing and preventing disease without medicine has certainly been found.

The makers inform the writer that 82,386 of these Quaker folding thermal Cabinets have been sold since January 1, and showed letters from thousands of users who speak of this Cabinet as giving entire satifaction.

Since this invention bathtubs have been discarded, for it gives a better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water, and, as there are millions of homes without bathing facilities, it seems this would be a good article for our readers to take the agency for.

Thousands of remarkble letters have been written the inventors, and to our knowledge persons who were full of drugs and nostrums, and have bee given up to die, have been restored to perfect, robust health, to the astonishment of their friends and physicians.

E. L. Eaton, M. D., of Topeka, Kan., gave up his practice, because, he said, he could do more good for humanity with this Cabinet than his medicines, and has already sold more than 600 of them. Congressman John J. Lentz, Mrs. Senator Douglas, Rev. R. E. Peale, Una, S. C., Rev. Samuel Cooper, John T. Brown, editor of the Christian Guide, and a host of our most eminent people recommend it.

J. A. Hagan, Richfield, Mo., afflicted 15 years with rheumatism in the worst form, was cured in 6 days. L. B. Westbrook, Newton, Ia., afflicted 45 years, was cured in 3 weeks of catarrh, asthma, heart and kidney trouble. O. P. Freeman, Sparta, O., afflicted 17 years, unable to walk, was cured of kidney troubles, piles and rheumatism. A prominent citizen of Elwood, Ind., E. Veher, was cured of a serious case of obesity. A lady in Maysville, Mo., Mrs. L. Coen, was cured of woman's troubles, and recommends it to all suffering ladies.

We find this is a genuine Cabinet, with a door, handsomely and durably made of the best materials, rubberlined, has a steel frame, and should certainly last a lifetime.

It is important to know that the makers guarantee results, and assert positively, as do thousands of users, that this Cabinet will clear the skin, purify and enrich the blood, cure nervousness, weakness, that tired feeling and the worst forms of rhematism. (They offer $50 reward for a case not relieved.) Cures woman's troubles, malaria, ague, sleeplessness, neuralgia, headaches, piles, dropsy, liver, kidney and nervous troubles. It will make you strong, energetic, full of life and vigor with the coming of spring and summer, and avoid illness later.

To please the ladies, a face and head steaming attachment is furnished, if desired, which clears the skin, beautifies the complexion, removes pimples, blackheads, eruptions, and is a sure cure for skin diseases, catarrh and asthma.

All our readers should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low. Cabinets complete, with Heater, furmulas and directions, only $5.00. Head steamer, $1 extra; and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much genuine health, strength and vigor.

Write to-day to the World Mfg. Co., 606 World Building, Cincinnati, O., for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet. You won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money after 30 days if not just as represented. We know them to be perfectly reliable. Capital $100,000.00, and they will ship promptly upon receipt of remittance.

Don't fail to send for booklet anyway.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to both men and women upon request, and to our knowledge many are making from $100 to $150 per month and expenses. It is certainly an opportunity not to be neglected.

Notes and News.

Rejoice with us over the results of yesterday. Nearly $100 raised for Foreign Missions—almost 400 at Main St. Bible-school—88 at South Side Mission school—85 at Junior C. E. One addition to the Church. Our prayer-meeting attendance is about 100 each Thursday night. The auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. now numbers 125 members. This must be our best year. MARTIN.

Enjoyed the Visit.

Pres. Hardin, of Eureka College, spent Easter with us and impressed us all with the fact that one way to express our gratitude for a risen Savior is to make our jubilee offering to Home Missions worthy of a people who have been so wonderfully blessed as we. The genial president is always a welcome guest with this congregation. GEO. L. SNIVELY.

Eureka Educational Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN:—The trustees of Eureka College have sounded the slogan for a larger work. The brethren of all Illinois ought to have fellowship in the Educational Conference at Springfield. They ought to realize the primary importance of our educational interests. Their desires ought to be drawn to Eureka. Only centralized efforts can produce large results. Very truly,

Some Things.

How gloriously the missionary spirit is growing with us. We will truly be a great missionary people. Then we will truly become a great people.

The whole brotherhood is to be congratulated on the election of Burris A. Jenkins president of the University of Indianapolis. So also is the University of Indianapolis.

C. M. Keene, pastor at Hartford City, Ind., says he is as careful of who he has in the choir as of who he has in the pulpit. At each service the pastor and choir assemble in a small room behind the pulpit and there the pastor prays just before making their appearance. I have seen nothing giddy or frivolous in that choir.

The Springfield (Ill.) Meeting.

We have just close the most successful "revival meeting" ever held by our congretion. Bro. Chas. Reign Scoville was the evangelist, Bro. F. C. Huston, director of the music, and Miss Nora McCormic, of Indianapolis, soloist. The meeting began March 5th and closed April 4th, resulting in 244 additions. Bro. Scoville is a remarkable evangelist. His preaching has several characteristics, to each of which his success is in part due. He is terribly in earnest. Now we hear the voice of John pleading the love of Christ, and again the stern warnings of Elijah or John the Baptist. He shows unclouded faith in Christ and the Word of God. He uses very forcible illustrations and many of his sermons are made effective by excellent charts that fix their outlines indellibly through the eye.

He is not self-centered, but Christ-centered, and consequently gives all honor to Christ and to those with whom he labors. He preaches the gospel as given in the inspired Word, not his own or any one's opinions. He convices the reason and does not encourage excitement, and yet his sympathetic, magnetic personality moves the hearts of his hearers.

Bro. Huston is a fine musical director for revival services. Miss McCormick sings the gospel with such a sweet voice and clear articulation that her message is very effective, in marked contrast to the choir service in many of our churches, not one sentence of which can be understood by the average listener.

Bro. Lynn is especially gifted in instructing and developing those who are added to the church, so we feel no fear of the collapse which is said to follow revival.

Two Available Preachers.

Churches, attention! I have two good preachers in readiness for work as follow:

No. 1. A very successful and peace promoting pastor, strong in the pulpit, and "everlastingly at it" through the week for the good of the church. Would locate.

No. 2. A good strong speaker, successful in building up the church, a good mixer, and successful with young people. Will do Sunday preaching in central or Northern Illinois, or Eastern Iowa, without moving his family. Address, with stamp, WM. BRANCH.

District Convention.

The central district convention will be held at Bondurant, Ia., April 17-20.

An active man is making a preliminary canvass of the churches, and it is hoped by the board that there will be a large and enthusiastic convention, which will insure the employment of a district evangelist and active district work.

Delegates should ask for a return certificate when they buy tickets, and buy them only to Des Moines, then go to the city ticket office of the Chicago Great Western R. R., at 5th and Walnut Sts., and get a round-trip ticket to Bondurant for 75 cents, subject to a rebate of 25 cents if 75 are sold. These cannot be had at the depot. Entertainment is to be free throughout. Let us have a grand convention.

Des Moines, Ia., April 3, 1899.

To the Endeavor Societies and Bible-schools of Iowa.

Convention season will soon be at hand; are you arranging to send up a good strong delegation? The schools and societies have been given a prominent place upon the programs of the various districts, and should be there to receive the help that they offer. Begin now to plan for your delegation and to talk convention. The convention is for the entire district, and a representative should be present from every school and society.

Let every county secretary see that some person is named to be a permanent representative for Bible-school and Christian Endeavor in each congregation of his county, and that said names are in the hands of your district secretary before the time of your convention.

Has your society taken the offering for state work? Has your Bible-school taken said offering? This should be taken before time of your convention. We want eight cents from every Endeavorer and Bible-school scholar in your congregation this year. See that your society reports on a part or all of this offering soon.

I expect before long to be able to visit schools and societies and spend a few days with them in the interest of their work. If you desire me write and I will place you on the list and make dates with you as soon as possible. Don't fail to send a good strong delegation to your convention. D. A. WICKIZER, Des Moines, Supt. of Bible school and C. E. Work in Iowa.

State Mission Notes.

A STARTLING CONDITION.

I am not an alarmist, but some things are full of alarm to me. We left the Trenton convention with about $350 on hands to tide over the months at the beginning of the year. We had Bro. Hugley to act as collector and his help was good. We left the Nevada convention with a small deficit of expense incurred during the convention. No appeal was made for funds and the year was begun with an empty treasury. But in addition we have had no collector in the field save the secretary and you need not wonder at all that we are now behind over $600 as compared with the collections of last year for the same time. We made our calculations that the churches of Missouri would give at least as much for State Missions as they did last year. Our operations have been based upon that and with this falling off you can see that your board has need to appeal to you for immediate and effective assistance.

We are glad of the great news of money going to the foreign field from our state. We want to see you send a great collection for Home Missions this Jubilee year, but it will be a sad commentary on our judgment if we neglect our state work. This is the basis of all work. Anything that weakens this weakens all. The army of invasion must have a base and a source of supply. This is in our state work. Missouri has attained a great place among our people because of the efficiency of her state work. What shall we do? What will you do? Has the matter come before your church? Every church in the state that has not paid its apportionment in full has received a postal to that effect. Where did it go? Why did you not answer? Your board appeals to you to come to its help now.

Do you owe a pledge? Are you an annual member and behind with your dues? Or a life member in the same condition? If so, won't you please pay at once? If you are none of these will you not follow the example of the dear brother who has just sent the following:

"DEAR BRO. ABBOTT:—Seeing you are in pressing need of money, I thought I would send you a small offering, $5.00. If every member in the state would send their mite it would doubtless relieve you, even if it was no larger than mine."

God bless the hand that wrote that letter. It is getting old but has not forgotten how to minister in sweet service. Brother, sister, let us hear from you all.
T. A. ABBOTT.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

H. H. Hobbs, one of the Canton boys, that is making his own way in his efforts to prepare himself for the ministry of the Word, is also one that sees to the state Bible-school work in his congregations, and has just handed me two dollars from the Hawk Point, for which I thank them and him, praying that God may bless him in his service for Christ, as he is doing, for the brethren speak in high terms of his work and sermons.

Bro. Hobbs' kindly deed reminds me to ask the preaching brethren again to please see to this for us, as it is impossible under the circumstances for me to do much in the way of institute work, and at the same time, visit the schools and solicit their co-operation with us, and if the preachers will only kindly see to this for us it will be fully appreciated on the part of the secretary.

At West Line, in the home of Dr. C. E. Elley, every kindness was exended your servant during my institute there, Sisters Elley and Stevenson being as true and kind in their hospitality as could be. In its work West Line is an exception, being far ahead of many schools better situated but lacking the men and women of God to prosecute the cause as they should. The weather was very much against us, causing Bro. Sterling and myself to dread the results, but the co-operation of the church and friends was usually good and fraternal. H. R. Wells as the superintendent is a perfect success, while with him are devoted men and women. Five men not menbers of the church were most generous to the work, as they are to the school and church at home. Alonzo Sterling always helps me and has his preaching points to do likewise, and here the friends gave me a fine offering, as they did also for Foreign Missions. Good for them.

The March report of Bro. M. H. Wood shows four new Bible-schools organized, one new congregation and $1,900 raised for new meeting houses. What a work, brethren, in such a month of such weather! What privations that it might be done, you have no idea that have not had like experience! Yet, he writes hopefully and determinedly about the future. You can help us make it some lighter to such, right now, by having your school co-operate with us. Will you?

The word comes from Windsor that the school as well as the church is growing and that their increased confessions came largely from the school and that the eighth year of Geo. L. Busch's work is to be made the best year in their history, and the same word comes from many of the schools, and it looks as if we were going to have one of the most prosperous years in all our work, and if so, then the finances for our work will come to the front again.

Bro. John Giddens did a hard month's work with little returns, having dedicated the new house at Charity, organizing a new congregation and reorganizing their Bible-school. The brethren hope with their new house to go right along in the Lord's work.

At Mt. Zion, Johnson County, Bro. Phil Stark is preaching, and he is always helping me, and so wrote that I come with them. But the time was most unfavorable, the roads being all but impassable, so that only a meager handful of the people could come. But those present were the salt of the church, J. G. Senior, L. C. Hocker, the Carmack family, and though no work was really done, they promised, if possible, $10 to our work, and Phil, in his goodness, is going to see that it is possible. The brethren present by unanimous vote decided to again organize their school and push the work. Bro. L. C. Hocker, one of the elders from the organization, has lately gone to his work, and such was his thoughtfulness that he will continue paying his subscription of $50 a year to the church work, while in his son is one that follows in the father's steps. I have promised and determined to visit them again in the Master's work, as I always want to give such as these and their faithful minister something in return for their favors to us.

Bro. M. M. Goode is moving things at Wyatt Park, while Bro. McCausland will do the same for the school, and word comes that the school will make us an offering this spring. Thanks to such friends for such help.

Lectures of Isaac Selby, in Defense of the Christian Religion.

We have had a visit from Isaac Selby, one of our Australian preachers. He has delivered a course of lectures in Broadway Church. Seldom have we had a series of lectures in our city that has excited more interest and been listened to with more sustained pleasure and profit. In spite of the very unfavoaable weather, large audiences came out to hear Bro. Selby night after night. The last lecture—on Australia, admirably illustrated with stereopticon views—brought together a crowded assembly in the large church. The lectures were a real success.

For ten years Mr. Selby was a prominent, accredited lecturer on the Freethought platform in Australia. In 1989 he became a Christian, and has since been an active public advocate, in pulpit and platform, of Christianity in that land. For five years he has been the preacher of one of our largest churches in Melbourne. He has lectured in most of the important towns in Australia and England.

Mr. Selby is thoroughly versed in all questions of Freethought unbelief. He treats these subjects with the utmost courtesy and fairness, but with power. His language, style and method reveal literary culture. He is a modest man and a sincere, humble Christian; it is a pleasure to hear him. Whatever topics he touches he understands.

I feel urged to say to the people who may read this, especially the churches in the cities and our places of learning: It is a pity that you should lose the opportunity of hearing Mr. Selby. Send for him and you will never regret it. He is worthy to stand before any audience that may come to hear him. He can be addressed at 650 Crescent Avenue, Covington, Ky.

From the State of Washington.

The missionary force in Washington will be depleted for the next six months by the absence of Bro. Wm. F. Cowden, Superintendent of Missions for the Northwest, in Eastern states, where he has gone in the interest of the Home Board. Bro. Cowden's many friends in the East will rejoice in the opportunity to hear him. However, Bro. Cowden does not belong more to Washington than to Oregon, Idaho, Utah and Wyoming. His field is "expansive," quite an empire in itself. The work which our sectarian brethren have given in each denomination to several men, our people have laid on the shoulders of Bro. Cowden.

The character of Bro. Cowden's work can be learned from the history of the church at New Whatcom. About eight years ago he came here when there were only a few members and no church. He spent three months, organized the church, raised money, bought a lot, had a house erected and by the aid of the A. C. M. S. sent a preacher. In like manner the cause has been planted and nurtured in other important and strategic points.

One of the important centers where our cause has been established and become self-supporting is Olympia. Here we have the largest church in Western Washington. The pastor of this church, Bro. J. S. McCallum, is a man of great energy and push, and the success of the church is due to his efforts, which I describe in the language of another concerning him, as "everlastingly preaching the everlasting gospel, and standing back of all financial obligations, and forging ahead whether he received any pay or not." This quotation is not elegant, but it is forceful and true. If Butler College has other graduates like Bro. McCallum we wish they would send them to Washington.

Our state evangelist, Bro. F. B. Sapp, is not only an evangelist, but serves Washington as editor and secretary of the Home Board. Bro. Sapp is editor of the Washington department of the Pacific Christion. He gives eminent satisfaction in every sphere of his labor. He has just closed a meeting in Walla Walla, where the largest of our state normal schools is located.

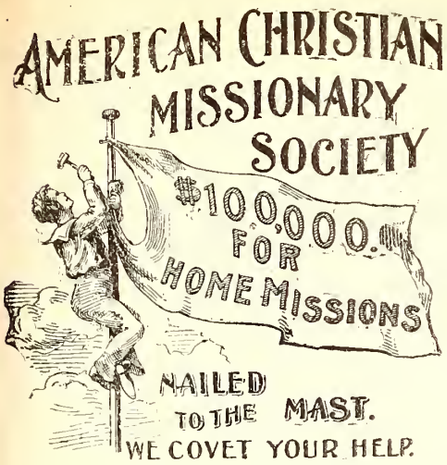
Our own work here has been greatly benefited by the recent coming of Prof. A. C. Scholes and wife, late of Sacramento, Cal. Bro. Scholes is a singing evangelist, known in ths East. Having sung with Romig and others like Romig, he is of the nonsensational order. He directs our music. Of late I have received a large number of communications from people interested in the climate and resources of Western Washington, and I regard it as a privilege to answer such communications.

WALTER S. CROCKETT,
Pastor Christian Church.

New Whatcom, Wash., March 7, 1899.

Missouri C. W. B. M.

With the opening of the spring there is an increased interest in all lines of C. W. B. M. work. We are glad to report a new auxiliary at El Dorado Springs. Mrs. Decker is the president, and Mrs. Hurst is the secretary. Mrs. Clay, our new organizer, began her work by organizing an auxiliary in the Springfield Ave. Church, Kansas City. Bro. Haley is the pastor of this church, and he urged the sisters to take up this work and then invited Mrs. Clay to visit them to perfect the organization.



The auxiliary of Bro. Combs' church, in Kansas City, complimented their president, Mrs. Middaugh, by making her a life member of the C. W. B. M. The young ladies' society of the same church conferred the same honor on their president, Mrs. Nellie Lowen Merrill. The auxiliary at Cameron likewise honored their pastor's wife, Mrs. White. Their pastor gave a life membership to the auxiliary. The Nevada auxiliary is paying for a memorial membership in the name of their lamented brother, Mr. Turnbull. How many more life memberships will we have this year to report?

The La Mar auxiliary is supporting an orphan in India. A letter from the secretary of that most excellent auxiliary at Marshall, Mrs. Campbell, says that Mrs. Eubanks has undertaken the education of an orphan in India. The Marshall auxiliary is one of the oldest in the state. They enrol about ninety members. At the present time the pastor's wife, Mrs. Wharton, is their efficient president, and Mrs. Campbell is their capable secretary. Mrs. Alice Sandidge, an elderly lady (I was about to say an elderly saint, for that word describes her character), is and has been their treasurer for many years. This silvery-haired woman goes all over the city to the homes or places of business of the members, and collects from them, quarterly, their dues and free-will offerings. I have said that one earnest woman could keep alive the auxiliary work in any community. I believe that Sister Sandidge could sustain an auxiliary in the heart of Africa, for she would first make converts, and then keep them at work regularly and systematically. She has the secret of auxiliary work.

There is one dark shadow cast on the work of this month, by the illness of our state treasurer, Mrs. Carrie F. Johnson, of Chillicothe. She has been connected with this work from the first, and since the death of her husband she says it has been a great blessing to her, as she bestowed on it her love and service. If it is our Father's will, we pray that she may be spared many years to labor in his vineyard.

One of our managers, Mrs. Hugley, of Paris, has been passing through the deep waters of sorrow because of the continued illness of her husband, that faithful man of God, who has preached the gospel all over this state.

VIRGINIA HEDGES, State Sec.

The Engineering Corps.

The Home Board of the American Christian Missionary Society is the Engineering Corps of our great Christian Army in America.

Every effective army of conquest must have its engineering corps. It is the business of this arm of the service to go with the army in the front line of the campaign, to build roads through wildernesses, bridge over rivers, sap and mine the defenses of cities to be taken and fortify them to be held after taking. Without such a corps, skilled and eqipped, any modern commander would be justified in refusing to undertake any important campaign, for he would be almost necessarily doomed to failure.

One of the evangelists in a Southern state wrote to the board last year, "The appropriation of the society has been just large enough to supplement what could be raised here and keep a man in the field. Its donations have been the bridge between failure and succcess."

This is just the work of the Home Board. It is not and cannot be the army in itself. It is the engineering corps, to build roads, bridges and forts. Grand will be the record of this branch of the Christian army in the United States when it comes to be written. In how many states has it thrown out roads into the wilderness, built the bridge between failure and success, taken cities and fortified them for the army to hold!

But its task has been heroic, for its field has been tremendously large and its resources tremendously small. Do our readers realize the extent of the field? It is the continent of North America. Not only the United States, with its North, South, East and West, but Canada, Nova Scotia and the whole continent, the vast, enormous fields on which are deploying the best energies and developing the destinies of more than one hundred million of the Anglo-Saxon race. We are on the greal battlefield of the world's redemption, and we appropriate to the Engineering Corps of our army in this field, to throw out roads through the wilderness, build bridges, mine cities and fortify points of vantage, about $30,000 a year. More than this could be economically used in any one section of the field, in the Southern States, in the great Northwest or in the city work. So enormous is the need and so wide the field, that despite all the grand work that has been done by the Home Board in the South, when it has strained its energies to the utmost, there were men at the Indianapolis convention, able and prominent men of the Southern workers, who plead for help for the South under the misapprehension that nothing had been done there. So small seemed the work in comparison with the enormous territory and the pressing need.

Cries for the work of the Engineering Corps come from every quarter of the field at once. To the men on the field who see the glorious opportunities and realize the pressing need it seems a burning shame, a treachery to our Commander, somehow or somewhere, that at the critical moment the Engineering Corps is not there to throw a bridge over between failure and success.

The field is enlarging every year. Opportunities dazzle and bewilder us on every hand. The opportunities of the new goldfields in Alaska, where men are rushing this spring by thousands and at all costs, are nothing to the opportunities for Christ all around us in this great land. It is not armies that are needed. The army is ready, hundreds of thousands of men, marshaled and ready. It is the work of the Engineering Corps, without which the work at the front will be chaos, without which there will be decades of time lost and troops lost in the wilderness and gallant charges made in vain.

It is not money that is lacking to the Lord's cause. The money and supplies in abundance are with us already. Only what is lacking is the busines sense and energy to gather it up and send it to the front. There is waste and there is neglect, and the Lord's work is badly administered in many quarters.

We want this year the largest collection ever raised for the work of the Home Board; $100,000 is the least we ought to put into this great work. Every cent of it is urgently needed. Remember that the work of the General Home Board and that of Negro Evangelization and Education are united this year. The one collection must suffice for both. The money given last year for the General Home Board would be little enough for the negro work alone, which has schools to establish and schools to sustain and evangelists to support in the whole South. God's faithful people are thirsty to hear of great conquests for the gospel of Christ. Let us make these conquests possible. When we put money in the Lord's work we put in a concentrated form our lives, our arms, our energies, our might on the Lord's side in the battle for the world's redemption. Let this year show the real power of the Disciples of Christ. Let this work have faithful service from every preacher, and a contribution, however small, from every church. Let the wisdom, the devotion, the power of the redeemed man, the American Christian, of our day, be felt this year. Let us put $100,000 into the treasury of the Home Board at the service of the Engineering Corps.

W. J. Loos.

Our Argument for Home Missions.

In no other country is there an amalgamation of so many different kinds of people as in ours. No other nation on earth so quickly and surely assimilates all peoples of whatever race or nation and incorporates them into its national life. By the genius and spirit of our institutions any foreigner soon becomes an American, and most foreigners very intense Americans. If a Scotchman goes to England, he remains a Scotchman. If an Irishman goes to England, he remains an Irishman; and proudly and in some instances almost madly cultivates his Irish proclivities. It would take several generations to convert Americans into English blood. Germany does not make Germans out of Scotchmen, Irishmen or Americans. But how quickly by the transforming power of the atmosphere of American life and institutions do the people of all climes and countries become Americans!

In this fact I see our strong argument for Home Missions among our people.

No plea is more in harmony with the genius and spirit of our national institutions than is that of the Disciples. None appeals more to the love of freedom and of individual rights and development, none is more democratic, none exalts Christ to a loftier throne. We give to Christ what other eclesiasticisms give to a presbytery, a priest or a pope, which strongly appeals to all who love Christ more than party and creed; and most foreigners are tired and sick of both party and creed.

Here, then, in our own land, where so many foreigners are dwelling, we have an excellent chance to present the plea which will speedily evangelize them, and having imbibed the spirit of our nationality, and having received the Spirit of Christ through a free gospel, they will be the first to turn in thought and heart toward the land from which they came and to carry the gospel to them. So that to a very large extent the evangelization of our own land means the evangelization of the world.

J. M. Van Horn.

Christian Endeavor and Home Missions.

The Savior's saying, "By their fruits ye shall know them," is of very wide application. The Endeavor Society must be judged their standard and does not shrink from such a test. And yet Endeavorers must give careful and diligent attention to missionary work if the verdict is to be one of approval. Why boast that there are three million members of the society if those members do not render a more excellent service to the church and humanity than others? Why tell of the sixteen years of special Endeavor training if the training be regarded as an end and not a means to the end of skilled labor in the Lord's vineyard? Why join in the feeling and fellowship of a monthly consecration meeting if that consecration is not to find expression in the occupation of neglected fields and the filling of empty treasuries? I, for one, believe that every item of the Endeavor training and organization is going to be justified by the enlarged giving to missions, and that right speedily. Else it has been in vain.

One way in which the Endeavor Society will increase the offerings of the church to Home Missions is by enlisting all the members in such work. All Endeavorers are taught that they have the same opportunities to work and the same obligations to do so. The Endeavor movement has emphasized the truth that usefulness is not confined to the few who are specially gifted with eloquence or wealth. When every one shall do what he can, whether that be much or little, for Home Missions, then great results shall be obtained.

A. McMillan.

Again, the Endeavor Society emphasizes regular and systematic giving, which is the only successful way to raise large amounts of money, as well as the scriptural plan. Theoretically, the plan of giving one-tenth has objections, for he who gives the tenth may not feel under ony obligation to give more than that amount. But practically the plan works charmingly. Perhaps it is because it is so definite. Most people think they give more than they do give. It seems to go so hard with them to give to the Lord, that it is as it were burned into their memory and remains when other giving is forgotten. If any man will sit down at the end of the year and honestly count up what he has given to the Lord's work, he will be surprised to find what a small per cent. of his income it is. I say he will be surprised. I think there are few cases in which this is not true. Try it and see!

It is also true that every Endeavorer, with only an occasional exception, can manage to get a dollar for anything which he wants very badly. Where there is a desire there will be a dollar, at least. And what shall an Endeavorer want more than to give the gospel more fully to America, to which he owes so much?

It is hoped that the Endeavorers will give at the time of the May offering for Home Missions more generally and more largely than ever before. They should give with the church, because they are of the church and in it, first of all. They should give to America, because of America they received the gospel of their salvation. They should give for the Christ's sake that, they may do what he would like to have them do. JOHN E. POUNDS.

An Open Door for Missionary Work Among the Scandinavians of the United States.

The Scandinavians in the United States number more than two million, and they can be found from New York to San Francisco.

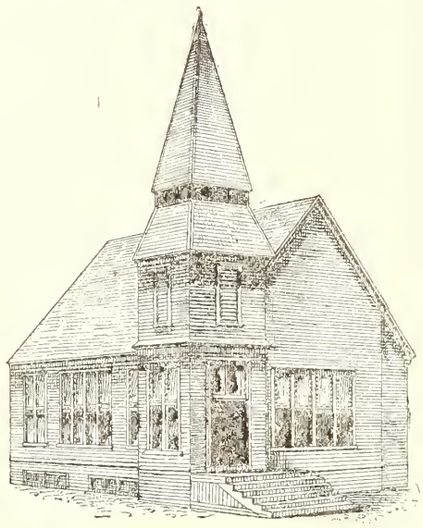
E. W. DARST.

These people are nursed in the state church of the mother country and in the Lutheran Synod of the United Sates. Generally speaking, the Scandinavians are a God-loving and God-fearing people, but are indifferent to any religious movement outside of their own nation and church. To do missionary work among the Lutherans is about as hard as to do such work among the Catholics; however, it can be done.

A wonderful change has taken place among this people during the past fifty years. Thus the Free Church in Sweden numbers 100,000 members and the Baptists 40,000. The Swedish Free Church in the United States 40,000 and the Baptists 25,000 members.

Your attention is now called to Minnesota, where we have 750,000 Scandinavians, of which number more than 125,000 reside in Minneapolis and St. Paul. The Baptists number 600,000 in the state and the Free Church about 10,000, to say nothing of other denominations.

The men of the North do not stand on street corners and sell peanuts. No, you will find them in the sawmill, in the workshop, behind the counter, in the congregation of lawmakers and in the governor's chair; but the majority are farmers.



These people are here to stay. They have churches and cemeteries. They are Americanizing rapidly, but there are thousands who dwell in our state who can receive the gospel in their mother tongue. In every house is the Bible, and for many believers the term "the Bible and the Bible alone" is most welcome.

The door is open. That good work can be done among this people is evident, not only from the statement above, but also from what is done through our brethren in Norway and Denmark. The door is open; let us enter in and bring the sons and daughters from the Land of the Midnight Sun to Christ and his church. C. A. HOLMGREN.

What a Little Money Will Do in Home Missions.

The support of the American Christian Missionary Society to our work of City Evangelization in Chicago has enabled us during the year to organize two new churches and to open two new mission points where we sustain schools and preaching. Besides, we have been able to furnish pastors for the other four churches organized since the inception of this work. We have also employed A. Larrabee, our veteran missionary layman, to devote all his time to the initiative work in the new missions and to aid in soliciting money for mission chapels and places of worship. His work is largely in the local community. Thus for one-half of the Illinois offering for Home Missions we have not one but eight men at work. We built two houses last year, while the plans are completed for three new buildings this year. As taken from published reports of our City Missionary Society we received in response to the gifts of the Home Board—personal gifts, from friends outside of the city—amounting to $409; amount raised by mission churches for all purposes, $6,430.60; the Chicago churches with all their indebtedness were stimulated to give $1,600 for city missions beside their offerings to other missionary interests. The number of baptisms, aside from those reported by E. W. Darst, are 110. The number in mission Sunday-schools will exceed 750. We have recently opened two new mission points; at one we have found over 40 members of the Christian Church, nearly all of whom are not identified with our work except in the mission. Very little of this work would or could have been done without the aid of the A. C. M. S. Society. Thus the $1,113.69 from the Illinois offering to Home Missions was the means of raising $8,439.60; employing eight men; sustaining six mission churches and two mission points, with Sunday-school and preaching. This does not include the work given in E. W. Darst's report, although he is numbered in the eight. W. B. TAYLOR,

THE EXPERIENCE OF TWO BROTHERS.

On page six of this year's issue of the "Surprise," a paper published by Dr. Peter Fahrney, of Chicago, Ill., is an article entitled "Reads Like a Miracle," which tells of the remarkable restoration to health of Mr. Ernest Neubauer, of Gonzales, Texas. He had, while in the German army, contracted a terrible skin disease, which baffled the skill of the best German physicians and even those of this country, whom he sought when he emigrated here.

At the urgent solicitation of his wife, he finally concluded to commence the use of a medicine, which is frequently referred to as "a plain household remedy," thereby regaining his health and strength.

The article has caused widespread interest and much comment. Now comes his brother, Mr. Paul Neubauer, a well-known citizen and postmaster of Floresville, Texas, and adds further tribute to the remedy by relating his own experience as follows:

Floresville, Texas, Jan. 27, '99.

Dr. P. Fahrney, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir: I am just in receipt of a copy of your paper, "The Surprise." In reading the testimonials I came to the conclusion that I could supply one myself. About two years ago my oldest boy took sick. He was then in the tender age of four years. The symptoms of his disease gave rise to our gravest fears. His limbs refused to do service for him. They seemed twisted out of shape and were so weak that he could not stand on them. He was not able to lift his arm. He seemed to lose control of his voice, until finally he could only utter a lisping sound. My wife and I tried to reconcile ourselves to the idea that we would have to raise a cripple. I consulted several physicians, but not one was able to give me any satisfactory information concerning the ailment, and far less afford relief. One of them, after thoroughly examining the child, stated that the case would require treatment for many years. This statement was far from satisfactory to me. I went to my brother, Ernest Neubauer, at Gonzales, Texas, who is agent for your medicine. He gave me two bottles of the Blood Vitalizer and four bottles of the Oleum Liniment. Then I went to work. I rubbed the whole body of my boy thoroughly with the Oleum, especially along the spine, and gave him the Vitalizer regularly. We used two more bottles of the Blood Vitalizer, and to our joy the boy was cured.

I have intentionally waited until now before writing you, as I always thought that the disease would make its appearance again, but the Lord be praised, such is not the case. The boy is now healthy and strong. I request you to use this, my testimonial, my dear doctor, as you see fit. The fact of this cure is known throughout the whole of Gonzales, Texas, for the boy was pitied far and wide on account of his helplessness.

Hoping that this, my letter, may open the eyes of my fellowmen, I remain, with deep gratitude, Yours respectfully,

PAUL NEWBAUER, P. M.

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is not a drug store medicine. It is sold to the people direct, or through local Vitalizer agents by the sole proprietor, Dr. Peter Fahrney, 112-114 So. Hoyne Ave., Chicago, Ill.

IOWA.

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Harrington are in a good meeting at Conway.

FLORIDA.

Ocala, April 1.—Our meeting continues with increasing interest; 10 additions to date.—S. H. FORRER, minister, F. H. COPPA, soloist.

MISSOURI.

Kansas City, April 4.—Two additions Easter Sunday at Westport Christian Church.—THOMAS J. DICKSON, pastor.

COLORADO.

Pueblo, March 3.—One confession and baptism and five by letter and statement at the Mesa Church this city, April 2.—R. B. PRESTON.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Beaver, March 30.—Four confessions, one by statement. We have passed the mark and still labor for 100,000 for Christ during this Jubilee Year.—Z. E. BATES, pastor.

MICHIGAN.

Cascade, April 1.—Three baptisms last week. I am engaged with the church at Petaskey and will begin work April 2nd, after spending eight and a quarter pleasant years at Cascade.—J. JAY FINLEY.

VIRGINIA.

Alexandria, April 4.—We began a meeting in this city last week and the prospects are good for a harvest. We only have six members of the Christian Church in this city, but hope to have a good church here before the meetings are over. We expect Bro. Cephas Shelburne with us. My address is at present 414 Franklin St., Alexandria, Va.—ANSON MCDONALD, evangelist.

OHIO.

Findlay.—Standing room only Sunday night, March 26; three confessions. Our March offering was $110.75, more than double what was given last year.—A. M. GROWDEN.

Nelsonville.—W. D. Robinson has closed a three weeks' meeting with the Second Christian Church with 22 additions; 12 confessions; 10 took fellowship. The church is prospering. Have hired W. D. Robinson for one year.—W. W. GIBSON.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Brockton, April 3.—Two additions yesterday.—R. E. PORTER.

Everett, April 3.—Yesterday W. A. Taylor, member and minister of the Congregational Church, took membership with us, and proposes hereafter to preach for the Disciples of Christ, if a field opens to him. He comes to us well recommended. He is a young man, good preacher, and of good promise. Churches wanting a pastor can address him thus: No. 40 Cottage St., Chelsea, Mass. Have two more new candidates for baptism. Baptize soon.—R. H. BOLTON.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

Stillwell, April 1.—Our first meeting in Stillwell closed on the night of the 9th of February, Evangelist Harry Barbour doing the preaching. We organized with 30 charter members. The ladies have since organized a Ladies' Aid Society. We will organize our Sunday-school as soon as we can get a house. This is a fine point in the Cherokee Nation, and while we are few in number and all poor we will as soon as possible take steps to build. We can heartily recommend Bro. Barbour as an earnest, consecrated worker, and any congregation wanting a meeting should not fail to secure him. Congregations wishing Bro. Barbour's services can address the undersigned.—J. C. HOLLEMAN.

KANSAS.

Eldorado.—One confession since last report. Splendid service.—C. E. EVERETT.

Lenora, March 31.—Meeting 10 miles east of Jennings continues indefinitely; six added to date. Good audiences and attention.—W. R. BURBRIDGE.

Carneiro, April 4.—H. V. Scholes, of Abilene, has just closed a very interesting meeting here with 12 additions. Bro. Scholes' sermons were all able. Everything in a working condition.—W. C. SHERIDAN.

East of Jennings, April 3.—Meeting closed. Twelve added. Take membership with Lenora congregation, making one more good church in Norton County. Bro. Mulkey preaches for them. I go to Hill City next.—W. R. BURBRIDGE.

INDIANA.

Zionsville.—Last Sunday evening I baptized Dr. Smith at Clarksville. He was a member of the United Brethren Church. Some time ago after hearing me preach on the subject of baptism, he invited me to his home and after asking many questions about that subject and our church government, he said: "It is very plain, and although it is hard to break away from home training, I will obey the Savior." He is a very promising young man in his profession.—WM. H. KNOTTS.

Hartford City, April 3.—There were five additions by baptism yesterday at this place. One reclaimed two weeks ago. Bro. E. L. Frazier assisted me in a short meeting here, resulting in 10 baptisms. His preaching did the church great good. This makes 16 added recently.—C. W. KEENE.

North Madison, March 31.—In the meeting at Scottville, Ill., 30 were were added. Will visit the church the third and fourth Sundays in April.—C. D. MAPLE.

ILLINOIS.

Harvey, April 3.—There were three confessions at our Easter services yesterday morning; five since last report.—GEO. W. NANCE.

Pittsburg, March 31.—Closed my first year last Sunday. Thirty-six added during the year.—R. F. THRAPP.

Centralia, April 3.—We closed a short meeting last week with 27 additions; 20 by conversion and seven by letter and reclamation. This makes 176 additions to this church since I took the work.—J. H. SMART.

Mason City, March 31.—One added last Sunday, a lady from the Baptists.—A. C. ROACH.

Mt. Pulaski, April 7.—At Henry one added from the Baptists April 2.—C. B. DABNEY.

E. B. Barnes reports two confessions at Normal.

Virden, April 3.—Took charge of the church here about the middle of February. Just closed a four weeks' meeting with six added by baptism. The church much strengthened. PAUL H. CASTLE.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

At Eventide.

J. M. LOWE.

(Dedicated to the aged ones.)

When day's proud king at eventide
His many-colored robe draws round,
And sinks on a couch of gold to hide
His regal form; although no sound
Of tolling bells proclaim the hour,
Nor grave is seen, nor mourners weep,
Yet death with his restless power
Is here. Another day must sleep.

And now at twilight's sacred hour,
When earth is quiet as the stars,
When peace like perfume fills the bower
Of contented minds, what are the bars,
That shut us off from God, but sin?
Life's close is sweet as close of day,
If lived out as it might have been.
Believe me, there's no other way.

Sweet sunset time makes us to know
How beautiful it is to die—
To live forever in the glow
Of the radiant face of Christ on high.
The aged pilgrim westward bends
His shortened steps towards Jordan's side.
When life's long day so calmly ends,
'Tis sweet to rest at eventide.

Our Boys.

MEADE E. DUTT.

A certain good teacher once said: "I always feel like uncovering my head when I come before my class of boys, because in that class I may have a Garfield, a Lincoln or some other great man." I am extremely sorry that so many people look on the boy as a sort of "necessary evil." Such people have never studied the boy's nature, and consequently term him something bad before they are qualified to judge.

Every boy has a sense of honor, but many times it is miserably dwarfed because of the treatment he receives.

Now I am not speaking of the boys we read about, for they are always very good or very bad, but the boy requiring attention just now is a real, live, plain, every-day boy. One who throws stones at everything he sees; one who talks impudent to the man who treats him with contempt; one who eats green apples; shouts, runs and does mischievous pranks innumerable.

Few people know what a warm, generous and loyal heart beats under that little jacket, simply because they have never taken the trouble to find out, but have judged him from outside appearance, so accuse him of being cold and void of feeling and many other mean things.

They say: "They are so noisy." Perhaps they are. A sawmill is noisy, too, but it cuts. If a boy is so languid and effeminate that he can't make a little noise, I would not give a pinch of salt for his prospects in the future.

It is said of Admiral W. S. Schley that he was always at the foot of his classes—graduated that way—not because he was a dull boy; no, sir! but because he had so much mischief that required his attention that he did not have time to get his lessons.

A boy is a baby from birth until he is four or five years old. His nature is not much different from that of a little girl. The same playthings suffice for each. Very little difference is seen. From the ages of five to twelve he is a steam engine. By this I mean that he has seen such things as locomotives, threshers, etc., and now his power of imitation and his masculine nature begin to assert themselves. His little body is just bubbling over with life and enthusiasm. He converts the chairs into steamboats. The cat is his horse. He is a train of cars, stationary engine, and flouring mill at once. The noise he cannot make by pounding and drawing sticks of wood in his wagon, he supplies from his healthy lungs. To be sure he is noisy, but right there is the beginning of a diplomat, and during that period of his life is a splendid time to sow the seeds of character and true manhood.

Do you accuse him of being cold and hard-hearted? Watch him when his playmate gets hurt and see how quickly he drops every plaything and does all his boyish mind knows to heal and soothe the pain.

Mark this: if you do a boy an injury his heart is not so tender then and you will repent of it in a way that will be the climax of awkwardness on your part. Boys are not fools, and two or three of their little brains will concoct a plan whereby you and your Sunday clothes will lay in the dust; then they will jeer you. All this will not be done in private either. You may as well try to punish a nest of hornets as to try to punish a crowd of boys.

From twelve to eighteen is a boy's smart period. He knows more than his father or mother. The Encyclopedia Britannica is nothing. For severe cases of smartness it takes longer than six years unless some one generously bestows a good sound thrashing upon them. This generally removes a good share of the smart starch. The majority go their allotted time and over.

During this period many important things take place. He smuggles his father's razor to the hay loft and shaves for the first time. When you see a boy scraping his pimply face until it looks like a picked goose and reaping nothing but a little intangible fuzz and dirt which he proudly terms "whiskers," you are safe in saying that he is in love for the first time. He has been captivated by a fair damsel, and even before he has shed his knickerbockers he is planning matrimony. He generally lives through this all right. But there are other things that happen while the youngster is evolving from a boy to a man. He wants to be a man, oh so bad. Men chew tobacco—he tries it, still imitating; see? Although it makes him deathly sick at first, yet with the success that always rewards persistent effort, he is able to sit in the hotel office or depot and spurt tobacco juice fifteen feet at a cuspidor or box of sawdust. Nice example, you men set us boys!

Boys, don't try to be that kind of an expert. Be a man. By man I do not mean the yellow-faced, nervous personage at one end of an arsenic-bleached paper stuffed with tobacco and a little fire balancing him at the other end, otherwise known as the cigarette fiend. When I see a man-elect laboring at the end of the villainous thing I am constrained to echo Sam Jones' remark: "A fire at one end and a fool at the other." You are not a fool. No, sir! not a bit of it. What are your prospects? What are you doing? What do you intend to be in the future? Surely, you do not intend to stem the raging tide of life with no education to assist you. You cannot afford to do drudgery work all your life when the world is calling for competent young men. There are those who must and will do the hard work, but there is no need for you to do it.

The boy is in a critical condition just now. These few years generally tell what he is to be in years to come. If he develops a good strong purpose he will be a success; if not, he is a bark loose from its moorings on the ocean of time.

Our silver-haired fathers proudly look at the boys of to-day for the men of to-morrow. In a lowly cottage some fifteen years ago a mother was rocking the destiny of the republic. He is in the grammar school now. I do not know who he is, neither can you tell. Time only can. Perhaps it is your boy.

During this period the youth has to run a regular gauntlet of saloons, houses of ill-fame (these are licensed by enlightened (?) America), evil associations, and I tell you it's like trying to get a washed sheep through a blackened fallow without getting any black on its fleece for a young man to live these few years without the devil getting a black spot on him somewhere!

How often men (?) get a boy drunk to see the fun. Oh, Christianity where is thy shame! Oh, vice, where is thy limit? Then, when he becomes a habitual drinker they say he is sowing his wild oats. When he becomes a drunkard and they desert him, why not show yourself a confiding and sympathizing friend to the unsophisticated boy and enable him to steer clear of the dangerous rocks upon which many gallant ships have wrecked and gone into the eternal abyss with colors flying?

If fathers would make chums of their boys, banish false modesty and tell just where the danger lies, instead of letting the damnable part be told by a traveling agent of perdition, America could boast of more fine and noble specimens of manhood than she now possesses. Are you protecting your boy from the Advance Agent of Hell, or is he just growing up like Topsy?

No wonder many boys leave home at an early age and seek employment in the city. Their homes are unattractive and unpleasant. You can not always hold the boy down. He is ambitious and wants to do and be something, but knows little of life in the great city. Consequently, he needs careful attention.

Give him a chance to get an education. Educate him how to live. Tell him how to avoid the mistakes you have made—if you ever made any!

When he is a youngster, don't be afraid to caress him with a shingle on the slack of his trousers drawn tight across your knee. I say shingle because it cracks pretty good and does not hurt so severely, but for grave offenses a cherry sprout, hairbrush or slipper is indispensible. If you teach him obedience from the first you will shed less tears at the last.

Be kind and generous with the boys. Don't make any promises that you do not expect to fulfill. If you are a (gentle) man, be one of them and when a petty difference arises between two of them, instead of encouraging their pugilistic propensities, show them that arbitration is more civilized. It is low-down to encourage dogs to fight, but shame on the men who encourage boys to fight!

If you are faithful to your trust and teach your boy the sweet and noble lessons of love and obedience you will be rewarded by seeing him bud and blossom into a man who will place his name high in the temple of fame and honor.

Beyond.

BY GRACE PEARL BRONAUGH.

O, look beyond the sodden shore,
Beyond the sullen sea whose roar
The heart affrights! The tempest raves,
The tide of desolation laves
Life's coast, yet Heaven hovers o'er.
The mist creeps upward evermore;
The stars shine downward as before;
God hears our prayer and surely saves—
O, look beyond!

The dreary coast is white with graves.
We sail the ruthless sea which staves
The stormy ship in and wrecks her store.
Yet may the soul reach Heaven's door
Like mist arising from the waves—
O, look beyond!

Fair Haven, Vt., Nov. 22, 1898.

The Growth of the Beer Habit.

The enormous increase in the production and consumption of beer in the last few years is attracting world-wide attention, and both distillers and wine manufacturers are complaining of the heavy inroads which this popular beverage is making in their business.

Although the per capita consumption in England is many times greater than in this country, it is growing rapidly here, and brewers predict that within the next five years the per capita consumption of beer in this country will be more than doubled.

The brewers of the United States pay more than one-fourth of the entire internal revenue, and the combined capital of the breweries is more than $320,000,000.

If all of the breweries in the United States were combined their aggregate capital would be more than that of the Sugar Trust, Tobacco Trust, Standard Oil Trust and Coal Trust combined.

Rudolph J. Boeckhoff of the Home Brewing Company has compiled a number of interesting statistics in regard to the production and consumption of beer, which will prove a revelation to a majority of people.

The annual output of the breweries of the world reaches the enormous total of 199,056,017 barrels, which, if put up in pint bottles, would fill 59,356,804,888 bottles. If these pint bottles were packed in cases of two dozen bottles each it would require 2,473,200,000 cases.

Allowing 1,000 cases to the car, they would fill 2,473,200 cars, which would make a train 98,928,000 feet, or 18,717 miles long. If this train was separated and made into trains of 24 cars each it would require 103,000 locomotives to draw them, and at least 515,000 trainmen to handle them.

If these trains followed each other closely and were run at a rate of 20 miles an hour, it would take them 931 hours, or 39 days, to pass a given point.

To make the cases in which to pack this amount of beer would require 17,312,401,484 feet of lumber, one foot wide, and if the boards in this amount of lumber were laid end to end they would encircle the globe more than 131 times at the equator. To construct these cases it would require 2,618,682 kegs of nails of 100 pounds each, or a total of 261,868,259 pounds of nails.

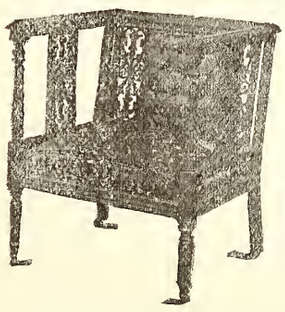
The annual production of beer in the world is equal in value to five times the output of coal in the United States, twice the value of the wheat crop, twice the value of the corn crop, twelve times that of the production of pig iron, 20 times that of petroleum, 25 times the value of the production of copper, 100 times that of lead, 150 times that of zinc and 35 times the value of the lime produced in this country.

It is worth five times as much as the cotton crop of the United States, nine times as much as the oats crop, 40 times that of barley, 15 times that of potatoes, 150 times that of buckwheat, 125 times as much as the flax crop, 110 times as much as the orange crop, 46 times as much as the entire grape crop and three times as much as the total hay crops of the United States.

The world's output of beer is valued at six times as much as the hogs of the United States, four times as much as the cattle, 30 times as much as the annual production of wool, 20 times that of gold and 30 that of the silver production of the United States.

It is worth 200 times as much as the molasses manufactured in this country, 40 times as much as the butter and 15 times the annual production of cheese in the United States.

The textiles manufactured in the United States are valued at only one-half as much as the world's output of beer and the annual output of leather in this country is worth only half as much as the beer produced in the world, and the annual output of distilled spirits in this country is worth only one-ninth as much.



The average annual consumption of beer for each inhabitant in the world is four and one-third gallons, but if the average consumption in the world was as great as that of the United States it would be nearly 12 gallons per capita.

If the world's per capita consumption was as great as that of Germany it would require an annual output of 1,254,193,548 barrels, and if it was as great as that of Great Britain it would require an annual output of 1,765,161,284 barrels, instead of 199,560,000.

In the German Empire there are 21,503 breweries and the annual sales of beer reach 51,710,719 barrels. In Great Britain and Ireland there are 8,278 breweries and the annual sales of beer reach 47,416,293 barrels. In Austria and Hungary there are 1,725 breweries and 16,340,322 barrels of beer are sold annually.

In the Unifed States there are 1,866 breweries, and the sales of beer amount to 37,000,000 barrels annually. In Belgium there are 2,977 breweries and 7,900,000 barrels of beer are sold. In France there are 2,568 breweries, and the annual sales amount to 7,100,000 barrels. Russia has 1,127 breweries and sells 3,700,000 barrels of beer. Denmark has 319 breweries and sells 1,500,000 barrels. Switzerland has 298 breweries and sells 1,400,000 barrels annually. Sweden has 531 breweries.—St. Louis Republic.

SUBSCRIBERS, PLEASE READ.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—

We want to ask a favor of each and every subscriber to your paper. Maybe it is presumptuous for us to expect so much from them, but we venture in all sincerity of purpose to ask each of them to write us just a short letter of criticism and advice. We know that your paper is read by an exceptionally intelligent class of people, and we honestly believe that a little counsel from them would do us a world of good.

In a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we advertised to send to every subscriber requesting us to do so, all charges prepaid, a full set of quadruple silver-plated teaspoons, full size, fully warranted for five years. We didn't ask any one to send any money with such request. A simple acceptance of our offer on a postal card was all that was necessary. If the spoons were all they were represented to be, and fully equal to those sold by jewelers at $2.50 a set, 86 cents was to be remitted as payment in full; if not, they were to be re-mailed to us (at an expense of four cents for postage). You, Mr. Editor, know what these spoons are, for we sent you a set, so that you could see the quality of the goods we proposed to distribute among your subscribers You doubtless also know our motive in making this remarkable offer. We were simply seeking an introduction to every head of a family on your subscription list. We wanted to shake hands with each of them through the mails. We knew that this first transaction would lead to pleasant and permanent business relations. Of course, we understood that it would cost us something to thus establish so wide a business acquaintance. We might have undertaken this in various ways, but our way was to send to each and every one a set of teaspoons—of which no family ever gets too many—at one-third actual value, payable only if pleased. So large a proportion of your subscribers have failed to clasp the hand of good-will we thus extended that we are led to believe there was something wrong with our advertisement—that it didn't ring true in the ears of your readers. We want to know where the fault lies. We want to find out how we can fix up that announcement so that people will appreciate its generous purpose. If every subscriber will refer to your Easter issue and give us a suggestion along this line, we shall be very thankful, and will file and treasure every letter as a token of friendly interest.

Permit us to add that this teaspoon offer is still open to every subscriber, and we hope ere long to have an acceptance from each of them.

Sincerely yours,

Now That the War is Over.

Now that the war is over,
And the thundering guns are still;
And the sulphurous smoke has drifted away
From that horror under the hill;
After the groans of the wounded,
And the shrieks from the surgeon's knife
Are hushed at last, and the halt and the maimed
Come hobbling back to life;
After the glare and the glory,
After the hell of it all—
The sorrow and pain that will ever remain—
Upon whose hearts will it fall—
Now that the war is over?

Now that the war is over,
And the praise of our heroes is sung;
And in far Spanish seas, to the tropical breeze
The folds of our banner are flung—
After the blood of our valiant
Is paid with a generous hand,
And the isles of the East and the isles of the West
Are bound with a star-spangled band—
What of the homes to the Eastward;
What of the homes to the West;
What of the homes to the North and the South—
That offered their bravest and best—
Now that the war is over?

Campaigning for the Boys.

May I say a word to the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on behalf of A. W. Conner, of Irvington, Ind., and his work in campaigning for "Princly Boys." He conducts these campaigns under the motto, "Every Boy is a Prince." The boy problem is undoubtedly the greatest problem before the people. Bro. Conner pleads for faith in boyhood, and for a close personal comradeship and confiding friendship between noble men and inexperienced boys who are in the "stress period" of life. The subjects discussed during the campaign are, "The Boy Problem, or Shall our Princes become Slaves;" "Our Neglected Knights, or a Fraternal Talk to Fraternal Men;" "Every Boy is a Prince, or the Royalty of Man;" "Rex Van Wonec, or the Worst Boy in Town."

Bro. Conner has just closed a campaign here, and it has been a great time of seed-sowing. He has presented to our boys lofty ideals, and awakened a love for the boys in the hearts of those who should be their true friends. These campaigns are worth many times more than they cost. Bro. Conner edits a paper called the Boys' Friend. It is the only paper in America that lifts up the standard for princely boyhood. It is not only a paper for boys, but also for the friends of boys. It is chaste, scholarly and up to date in every particular. Ministers and teachers will find it very helpful in their work among the young. I am convinced that this is a grand work, and should receive our sympathy and substantial support in every way possible. LE GRAND PACE, Pastor.

When the Papers Ridiculed Spurgeon.

When Charles Spurgeon became a popular young preacher many newspapers heaped upon him unjust and puerile criticism. Here is an example, which appeared in the Lambeth Gazette:

"He is a very young man, and the young sisters are all dancing mad over him. He has received slippers enough from the lowly minded damsels to open a shoe store or a fancy bazaar. He is a very young man, but won't this man-worship spoil him? His mannerism in the pulpit is suggestive of affectation and vanity."

The papers in after years were ashamed.

Profit from Waste.

A novel scheme has been adopted in the public schools of Brussels. Sometime ago the teachers requested the children to collect and bring to school such apparently useless articles found on the streets as metallic bottle capsules, tin foil, old paint tubes and any refuse metals. In ten months the joint collection represented about three tons weight. Out of the proceeds of this apparent rubbish five hundred poor children were completely clothed, and and fifty sick ones sent to convalescent homes, while there was a balance which went to the sick poor. This scheme has been so successful that it has been adopted in other towns on the Continent.—Sunny South.

WHAT STATISTICS HAVE PROVEN!

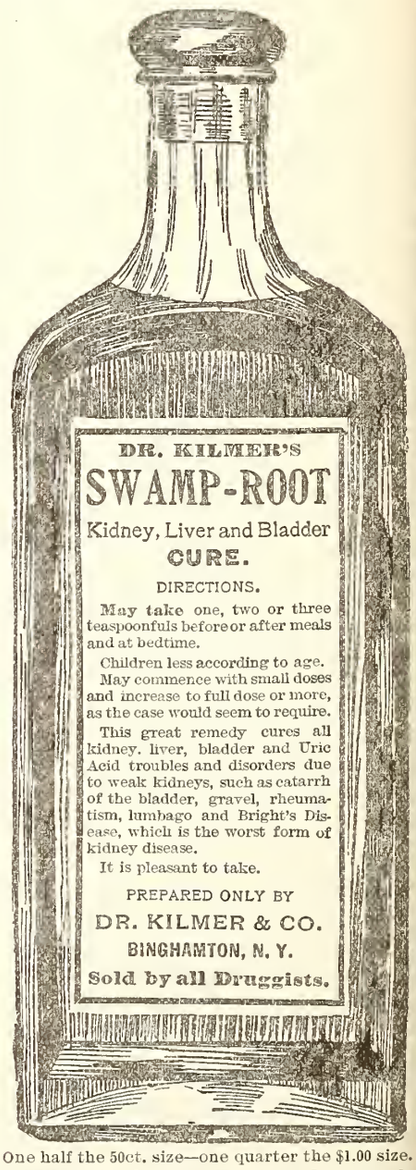
What Medical Science Has Accomplished.

THIS GREAT DISCOVERY IS OFFERED FREE TO CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST READERS.

Statistics prove that more people are brought to the grave by diseases of the kidneys and bladder than by any other disease.

Kidney trouble is in itself so insidious and deceptive that thousands have some form of it and never suspect it.

For many years medical science has been trying to discover some remedy that would positively overcome these dangerous troubles.



But not until recently was the discovery made. Doctor Kilmer, the eminent physician and scientist, after years of study and research, and after test on test that never varied in the grand result, announced the discovery of Swamp-Root, which has proved itself a most wonderful cure for all diseases of the kidneys and bladder.

While Swamp-Root has proved such a remarkable success in curing kidney and bladder diseases, it has also proved equally invaluable in the cure of blood diseases, rheumatism, liver and stomach troubles and in the regulation and cure of all uric acid troubles.

Swamp-Root has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the poor too helpless to purchase relief, and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who have not already tried it, may have a free sample bottle of Swamp-Root and thus test for themselves its wonderful curative properties.

If you will send your name and full address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., a sample bottle will be sent, absolutely free by mail postpaid, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from people who owe their good health, in fact, their very lives, to the wonderful curative properties of Swamp-Root.

This great modern discovery is for sale at most drug stores in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. Don't make any mistake, but make a note of the name, SWAMP-ROOT,

One half the 50ct. size—one quarter the $1.00 size.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember that it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

If you take advantage of this generous offer and write for a free sample bottle be sure and mention the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, when sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghampton, N. Y.

Our readers can secure a sample beauty pin free by writing to Hy. Loewenstein, Satisfactory Jeweler, 1230 S. Broadway, St Louis. See advertisement on page 479.

With The Children.

Fup.

When Miss Harriet understood that the man who had knocked was the robber, she sank upon a hall chair. "What shall we do!" she exclaimed to George. In the meantime, the two girls had crept to her side.

"Why, let me in," said the robber, who had overheard this question; "that's all I want."

"Depart instantly!" cried Miss Harriet, "or I shall arouse the neighbors and you will be taken to our county jail!"

"George Weston ain't agoin' to give me up," said the robber. "He knows I have turned over a new leaf, and have done wrote my name on the other side of it. He knows I'm agoin' to live a diffurnt man, and air agoin' back to my old mother. George Weston ain't to nip such a reform as I am, in the bud!"

"Then go back to your mother," said Miss Harriet, sharply. "Your mother is not here." From the woodshed came terrific yelps from Horace Greeley, who was trying to break loose.

"That's jest it," said Washington Shaw. "She ain't, and I am. Question is—what I was to ast you, George Weston—had I best quit my tramp life at onct, or go on and steal rides till I come to her town? I want to be square from now on. But I ain't got no money for traveling expenses. Did you send Ma that there letter?"

"Yes I mailed it this afternoon," said George.

"So I 'lowed. Now, if I kin git work and make some money, I'm willin' to begin to-night to live right. I 'lowed they might be odd jobs about here. But if you can't give me no work, I was to ast you not to tell nobody I was the gentleman of the road that you seen in the farmhouse. Cause if you told my identical, it might prejudice some people agin me."

"How can we tell you are in earnest?" demanded Miss Harriet. "Perhaps you want to get work to impose on people. If we kept still and you proved dishonest, we would be very culpable."

"George Weston, he knows I'm square," said the voice. "George Weston, he knows"—

At that moment there was a crash of glass from the direction of the woodshed, and a dog's wild barking was heard rapidly drawing near.

"Horace Greeley's broken loose!" cried Miss Harriet. "He'll tear you to pieces? Quick—get in here!" She unlocked the door with a trembling hand and the robber hurried into the hall. Before she could close the door, the big shepherd bounded through the opening and began to dance about the wild figure of the newcomer.

"Down, Horace Greeley!" shricked the terrified little lady, unconsciously brandishing her knitting-needles as if they were daggers. "George, can't you call him off? The man will be torn to pieces before our eyes!" Washington Shaw had backed against the wall, and stood waiting an attack from the dog, with his big knife drawn. But suddenly he put up his knife, as Horace Greeley leaped upon him. George had darted forward, thinking the dog was trying to sieze the strange visitor by the throat. But in reality "Gree" was licking the rough face.

The robber said, as if in a stupor, "I'm beat, I'm beat, I'm beat!" He began to pat the dog; he sank on his knees and put his arm about the shaggy neck. "Old Fup!" he said. "If it ain't my old Fup? Well, well! Where you been, old feller, for so long? And you knowed me, didn't you? How you knowed me! Good old Fup!"

There was no doubt that the dog knew him, nor that he was delighted to see his old friend. "This was my dog," said Mr. Shaw, looking up at Miss Harriet. "I raised him from a pup; from a shepherd pup, yes mom. Wha-wha-what did you call 'im?"

"He came to my house a year ago," said Miss Harriet. "He was very draggled and thin and miserable. We called him Horace Greeley."

"That ain't his name, mom. I wonder he ever answered to it. Fup is his name, jest plain Fup. You old villyan! Give me yer paw! No, the other one. Yes, that's Fup—jest like him! He never would give nobody his paw! But the trainin' he's had would do for a whole Normal. He knows a heap of things, Fup does. But he's like me; he never would show off. Well mom, I will be agoin'. If you kin promise not to tell nobody I was the gentleman what made, as we may say, free with them country victuals, I'll stay in town and try to git work, and live square, and do right by my Ma. But if it's your conscience to tell on me, you tell on me. I don't advise nobody to sit on their conscience. But in that case, I'll go at my old game again, of gettin' all I kin out of life without paying nothing for it. Come on, Fup!"

"Do you dare to think of taking Horace Greeley from me after you deserted him, and I have cared for him a year?" demanded Miss Harriet.

"Why, he kin stay with you if he wants to. Fup, does you go with me, or air you satisfied to be Horace Greeley the rest of your life?" He started toward the door, and the dog, deaf to the persuasive voice of his former mistress, kept so close to Washington Shaw's legs, that he was in great danger of being stepped upon.

"Before I goes," said the robber, "I wants to set you right on one pint; and if I do that, you'll be right on half a quart, won't you? My pint is this, that I never deserted old Fup. This is how it were: About a year ago I made up my mind to reform and pay my car fare and lead a honest and uninteresting life. I went to work for a family in St. Louis, name of Ross. They was a little girl in the family, about five year old, the brighest little flower in the garden, and her name it was Joy—funny name, ain't it? Well, I had my dog with me and I called him Pup. Joy could'nt talk plain; she called him Fup, and Fup he's been, until he was Horace Greeley. Mrs. Ross died right off. And then Mr. Ross was a widower. What did he do but up and marry in no time, the crossest woman that ever swished a silk dress. Then Joy come in for trouble. The very first time the second Mrs. Ross slapped the little 'un, Fup, he up and jumped at the old lady and bit her arm, and done it well. And she, ableeding, said the dog had to be killed. So I tuck out that night, me and Fup, him still aliving—he's aliving yet, ain't he?"

"But you haven't told how you and Horace Gree—I mean Fup—got separated," said George.

"Huh?" said Mr. Shaw. "Oh, that. Well, you see, I set Fup to guard over little Joy"—he broke off abruptly.

"How's that?" asked Miss Harriet sharply. "You said you left the place."

"So I did. You see, next Mr. Ross, he died. Then Joy was alone with her stepmother. So I set Fup to watch over Joy."

"Then you went back to the Rosses?"

"They's a lot of this story I ain't going to tell," said Mr. Shaw, resolutely. "It's enough for you to know that I set Fup to watch over little Joy. How Joy come with me and why I wanted her watched over, that ain't got nothing to do with Fup's story. Now, I left Fup, still awatching over Joy and I went up street and I strolled around, first here and then there, until a policeman thought I was drunk. I don't know how come he to thing that of me; I was never drunk, Mrs. Wilson—"

"I am not Mrs. Wilson," said Miss Harriet.

"Whoever you air," said the robber, "I never been drunk. Well, I was took to jail for the night. The next day when I come around, Joy was gone, and Fup, he was gone."

"Where was Mrs. Ross?" demanded the other.

"She? Oh, she was dead."

"I mean the other Mrs. Ross."

"No. 2? She was at home, I reckon. I never ast to see her."

"This is a very strange story," said Miss Harriet; "a remarkable story! Can you assure me that it is true upon—upon your honor?"

"Hope I may die if it all ain't straight, except I have made up the names to avoid hurting anybody's feelings," he said, piously.

"George," said Miss Harriet, "I will leave it to you. If you care to show this person to the loft, he may sleep there to-night, and in the morning we will discuss the subject further."

George eagerly took advantage of this permission, for he had a warm feeling for the robber, and believed every word he said. He lit a lantern and showed the man to the loft. Fup curled himself up at the ladder, determined not to let his old master escape. "Did you believe him, Aunt Harriet?" asked Mildred, with wide eyes, as she nestled to Jennie's side.

"I believe the part about the little girl, because it slipped out so queerly. I could see at once he was sorry he had told about her. This must be investigated!"

Continued in two weeks. Next week, letters. Please remember, no one can be printed on the Honor List who does not send to me the names and amount of books read, and the authors of quotations, if they are known.

VIA, VERITAS, VITA.*

The closing interview between Jesus and the disciples occurred on the evening of Thursday in an upper room in Jerusalem where preparations had been made by some members of the circle for the Passover feast. The strife for precedence among the disciples was followed by Jesus' significant action of washing their feet, with its attendant lesson of the necessity for humility in one who would be his follower. The Passover supper was then eaten and presently Judas withdrew from the room. Jesus then gave the disciples the memorial institution of the Lord's Supper, by taking bread and wine, elements already used in the Passover feast, and requesting them to remember him as often as they partook, thus keeping alive the story of his sacrificial death until he should come. Then came assurances that his death was near, which fell with disheartening effect upon the ears of the disciples, who in spite of all his warnings could not believe that he was actually to lose his life in Jerusalem. The distress into which this final announcement of his coming passion threw them he sought to lighten by his words of comfort with which he began his parting instruction to them upon the purposes of his life and the provision he had made for their guidance after his departure.

The teachings of Jesus in this interview are among the most precious left by him for Christians of every age and race. They touch the innermost experiences of the life of the disciple of our Lord and adjust themselves to every angle of his character. One of the most serious hindrances to success is the apprehension of coming trouble which causes one to wait irresolute rather than go forward courageously in the personal ideals of holiness. Against this timidity Jesus' first encouragement is uttered. The disciples were troubled, not only because they were distressed at what Jesus said regarding his coming death, but also because the purposes of their lives seemed about to be shattered. He assured them that there was no cause for apprehension. The follower of Christ should of all men be most courageous and confident. The expectation of success is one of the permanent elements of a true Christian character. "Fear not," is the constant exhortation of Holy Scripture, and particularly of our Lord. The disciples believed in God and in his fatherly providence. An equal faith in Christ and his power to deliver them from the particular experiences that awaited them was necessary. "All things work together for good," are the words which every disciple should bind as signs upon his hands and as frontlets between his eyes.

The ample provision made for his followers is then touched upon by the Master. The many mansions in the Father's house are the illustration by which he emphasizes the infinite possibilities and privileges of the Christian, and seeks to bring them to the comprehension of even the most simple-minded. Whatever may be the joys and occupations of the future life, they will be ample, and far beyond the language of our present life to describe or the capacity of the human mind to conceive. It is sufficient to know that the provision for the immortal life is ample and that its crowning satisfaction will be the constant companionship of our Savior.

But Jesus had spoken of his departure, and that suggested to the disciples his taking a journey, his disappearance from their sight. He seemed to them like one who was taking his departure from some other land, and Thomas voices their perplexity when he reminds Jesus that they do not know the place to which he is going and are therefore ignorant of the road by which he will travel. Jesus at once shows them that their understanding of this departure is too literal and insufficient, for it is not the taking up of an earthly journey along a highway which men may see and travel, but it is the consummation of a life purpose which displays itself in a character and a ministry. Thus Jesus was the way. When men saw his life and understood his purposes they caught a vision of a new pathway to God, which consisted in an attitude of the soul toward the Father like that which Jesus manifested. In this sense it was true that no one could come to the Father but through him. He did not stand as a barrier between the Father and humanity, preventing access to God except on terms of his own recognition as mediator. But he stood as the only possible interpreter of God, whose sole purpose was the reconciliation of mankind to the Father through the only means possible, viz., the attainment of a character kindred with that of the Father. Thus Jesus both makes it possible for men to approach God by the sacrifice which he has wrought, and as well he stands to point out the way and insure their recognition by the Father. It is only in his direction, by going toward him and under his leadership, that men can find God.

He is the truth, because he embodies in himself all truth which men need to know regarding God. This truth does not consist in a set of doctrines, but in a life which is the revelation of God's life in human terms. To understand this truth is to have all the universe center about that object. It is to change the center of gravity from self to Christ as the manifestation of God. Here is the secret of all the philosophy of life, and in comparison with this the speculations of all the schools regarding nature and God are inconsequential. He is also the life, in the highest sense, as its source and its sustaining power. He came into the world to give life and to give it more abundantly. His favorite words were life, light, love. No life is full and symmetrical which does not center in him and revolve about him. It is thus not only a sin to reject him from one's circle of acquaintance and one's intellectual and religious life-fabric; it is also the greatest misfortune and the most serious blunder. It is not respectable to reject the opportunity to be educated and refined. Can it be respectable to reject Christ and all that he means to the soul from the sphere of any life? Can one be repectable who is un-Christian?

In the Old Testament the manifestation of God to Moses was as the "I am." This was the simple affirmation of existence on the part of the divine being, but it made no statement regarding the qualities of the divine life; it still left unanswered the question, "What is God, in nature and purpose?" "I am"—what? Jesus comes to complete the sentence by affirming, in the likeness of God, that he is life, truth, guidance, food, drink—everything that the soul needs. He thus discloses God as the only natural environment of the soul that would thrive into completeness. He is all that the Christian needs.

Philip's question implied both for himself and for those of the disciples who shared his wonder and doubt, that they failed to catch this identification of Jesus with the Father, and still desired, as so many seem to do to-day, to see God visibly. "Show us the Father, and it is enough." Jesus replies that the very purpose of his own life in the world was to reveal that Father, who in the nature of the case could not manifest himself to a human comprehension except in a human life. That life Jesus was then and there living in their midst. They were saying, "Show us the Father." Jesus says, "Look on me and you see the Father." And this remains one of the most precious of our Savior's words, assuring us that in him we have the disclosure of God in our own life. When God would bring himself into the range of human vision, it must be in such a life as that of Jesus Christ. And the result of this vision of God and the association with him through the leadership of Jesus is the accomplishment of works greater even than those which our Savior performed. His miracles astonished the multitudes in his day, but greater than his miracles are the abiding fruits of Christianity in the transformation of character and the redemption of the world.

HOW CHRIST MAKES USE OF COMMON LIVES—THE MAN WITH THE PITCHER.

(Mark 14:12-16.)

Here was a man doing a woman's work, which, among the Orientals, was a very low thing to do. He went out to carry water. Doubtless the woman at the well smiled quietly as be came with his pitcher. Doubtless, some of them or of the passing urchins jeered at him as a womanish fellow to do such drudgery. But be did not give way before their jests. Perhaps the act was in aid of an aged motber, or some overburdened servant-maid. At all events, it was not without reward. He went forth to do a menial service, he acted as escort for the King of the world, He went forth to find water, he found the water of life. He went out with an earthen pitcher to a common task, he came back with radiance and honor, in a royal procession. He went out to save some woman a heavy task, and he found a Savior.

How many there are who have found their highest happiness and even their salvation in such lowly deeds. It is out of the dust of drudgery that one often looks to behold a noble sight, as the dust-clouds of the road are often rendered golden by tbe sun. It is in the tasks of common life that one often meets his Lord.

Do a good turn of a simple kind to some one in need and you come closer to your Savior. Lose yourself and you find your Lord.

Religious services are not limited to Sundays. All services that are honest, however humble, are religious. There is no distinction between the religious life and the common life. All life is religious.

"Heaven's gate is shut to him that comes alone;
Save thou a soul and it shall save thine own."

BETHANY C. E. READING COURSES.

[There are three courses: The Bible, Missions and the Disciples. The three handbooks for the first year are: "A Guide to Bible Study," "Handbook of Missions" and "Concerning the Disciples." The three handbooks for the second year are: "Life and Teachings of Jesus," "Missionary Fields and Forces of the Disciples" and "Sketches of our Pioneers." Three handbooks and the Bethany C. E. Bulletin, quarterly, sent to any address for one dollar. All orders should be addressed to the Bethany C. E. Company, 798 Republic St., Cleveland, O. Each course has a director: H. L. Willett is director of Bible study; W. J. Lhamon is director of studies in Missions; F. D. Power is director of studies Concerning the Disciples. This column is set apart to the use of these directors.]

The Plea for Christian Union.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

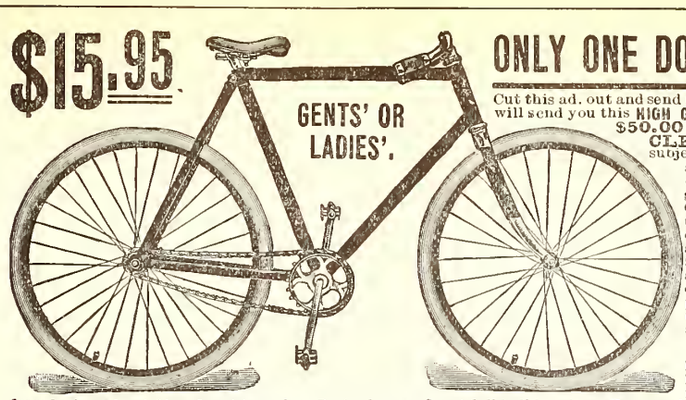
On page 94 of the handbook (Fields and Forces) there is a paragraph entitled "Home Missions in Four Words." One of the four words reads as follows: "The plea for Home Missions can be made for the sake of our plea for Christian union; nowhere can that plea receive so respectful or so successful a hearing as in America."

It is among the chief glories of the Disciples of Christ to have made the scripturalness and the rightfulness of Christian union a cardinal part of their teaching. While yet others were apologizing for sectarianism and pleading for denominationalism our great leaders asserted the sinfulness of both. Two generations have sufficed to bring the matter forward at least one step; instead of apologizing for sectarianism all now unite in condemning it, and apologies are reserved for denominationalism. Many not of our own body have ceased to apologize even for that, and have joined in the condemnation of it. Dimly, but none the less surely, it is dawning upon the Chirstian forces of America that originally the Church of Christ in Judæa and Asia and Achaia and Rome was one and not some dozens, and that the Church of Christ to-day should be one throughout the whole earth. That as a people we have contributed mightily toward this great thought-movement in favor of reunion cannot be doubted.

Another of our chief glories is this: We have not stopped with the discovery of the primval unity of all Christians in Christ, but we have also discovered the basis of that union. We have found that there is but one creed on which Jesus said, "I will build my church," namely, the creed that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God. We have refused to accept any other creed, and we have asserted that this is sufficient for all ages and for the whole world. We have found that the acceptance of Christ by faith, repentance and baptism brings the believing one, not into any branch of the church or into any denomination, but into Christ himself, and that being in Christ he is by consequence in the body of Christ which is the Church of Christ. Thus each Christian is a member of Christ's world-wide church. If I am a Christian I belong to Christ's body in Asia and Europe and Africa and South America and the whole United States quite as much as to the First Christian Church in Allegheny. I have the same right to every communion table in the world that I have to the one in my home congregation. To be in Christ is to be a citizen of his world-wide kingdom, and to have the rights of citizenship everywhere.

This basis of union is so simple that when once seen it is like a mathematical axiom, we can never see it any other way. It is as strong and scriptural on the one hand as it is simple and sublime on the other. It accounts very largely for the rapidity of our growth and the extent of our influence.

Now our handbook asserts that nowhere can this plea receive so respectful and so successful a hearing as in our own country. This is true, but it is a theme not to be exhausted in a day, much less in a three-minute study. The following reasons, however, may be assigned for the assertion:



1. The very atmosphere of freedom and truth-seeking that is abroad in America is favorable to this free and true scriptural position. Americans are practical people; they do not care much for theories and they have a laudable repugnance for such as do not "pan out." But for actuality, for simplicity and practicability, the typical American has a great liking. Our presentation of the facts of the gospel rather than a theory of religion; of Christ in deed rather than Christ in creed; of the gospel histories as a basis of faith; of faith as leading to repentance, and of baptism as an act of reasonable, personal loyalty to our personal Lord and Savior—all this commends itself to our well-educated, practical and progressive America. Then, when we go a step further and present as the basis of union this same basis of faith and obedience, the whole union matter becomes luminous in the eyes of people so capable of seeing as Americans usually are.

2. Another reason why this plea receives so respectful and successful a hearing in our own country is this: Our denominationalism is breaking down of its own weight. Even a sectarian can see that 140 sects are 139 too many. The average Methodist begins to feel that about sixteen kinds should be subtracted from the seventeen kinds of himself, and the average Baptist would like to have a dozen of his thirteen kinds canceled. A centripetal action has set in, and good people are more willing to unite now than to divide; they are more appreciative of essentials, more tolerant of opinions, more studious of the Scriptures, less dogmatic and more fraternal than ever before, and we believe that in these graces they are growing.

3. Another reason may be found in the general breaking up of old relations and associations that goes on continually in America. We are more churned than any other nation. We constantly rub against one another. Each Protestant is modified by every other, and even Catholics are becoming alarmingly Americanized. The man of sixty will probably remain a Lutheran, a Presbyterian or an Episcopalian if he happened to be so born and cradled, but birth and cradling are soon forgotten by his boys and girls in the schools and Sunday-schools of America. Myriads of them, having consciences and getting light, go according to their leadings.

4. A last suggestion is, that America is a Bible-built and Bible-loving nation, and this is wholly favorable to our plea for union. We exalt the biblical presentation of Christ as Christ, we insist upon that and that alone as the basis of union. The common study of the New Testament must finally lead to common views upon the great essentials of our faith and name and hope.

It is well, therefore, that we should give ourselves earnestly to the study of Home Missions, and that we should lend our prayers and our means to the futherance of the great work that lies heavily upon the hearts of our home missionaries, and upon many a struggling church. Our patriotism should lead to this, not to speak of the heavenly hope we ought to entertain for the people we meet every day. The love of country is a corollary of the love of God, and he loves his native people most who most obeys the Son of God.

Literature.

THE SEXUAL INSTINCT — HEREDITY AND MORALS. By James Foster Scott, M. D. E. B. Treat & Co., publishers; 436 pages. Price, $2.00.

In the light of accepted theories of heredity the above work has come at a seasonable time and evidently on a good mission. It is well to know that the physical and moral constitution of parents is also largely that of their children, whether it be good or bad. There are elements of danger in the abuse of the sexual laws far deeper and graver than are generally known even in the higher social stratas of civilized life, and of some of these this book treats in a way quite within the grasp of the common reader. Some of the things stated in this book are so startling in their character that the reader is almost ready to reject at sight, but afterwards yields because the author speaks with authority. He is a man of large experience in his profession and states the facts as they appear in the light of the latest conclusions of science. The truly interested reader of this book will feel more than ever before that "man is fearfully and wonderfully made" and will come to have a more exalted reverence for the laws of God. Some may read this book with a perverted mind or for an evil purpose, but its influence upon the seeker after a better knowledge of himself will certainly be to lift him into a higher conception of a clean life and a pure heart. Its influence upon the moral character, the purity and stability of the home and moral and physical improvement of the children born of parents under its influence will certainly be of incalculable importance.

MAGAZINES.

The recent critical illness of the Pope lends particular interest to a personal article on Leo XIII. by F. Marion Crawford, the famous novelist, and author of "Ave Roma." This article, which it published in the magazine Number of the Outlook for April, gives the best personal impression of Leo that has appeared in any American periodical. Mr. Crawford enjoys the advantage of knowing the Pope well; and he writes sympathetically, and at the same time with keen analysis. ($3 a year. The Outlook Company, New York.)

The Preachers' Helper, published at Cleana, Pa., contains so many features that it can scarcely fail to bring help to any of its preacher readers from some quarter. It not only furnishes matured thought on many subjects, but is rich in suggestions on many lines of work.

The New Crusade, Ann Arbor, Mich, for April, aside from its interesting and ably written articles on its usually practical lines, contains some very interesting poems. The New Crusade is certainly a valuable journal to mothers and teachers.

The Treasury of Religious Thought for April, 1899, closes the 16th annual volume of this valuable magazine. The index, which is full and helpful, contains a large number of distinguished names, but this closing number for the year keeps the average well up with such contributors as Pres. J. H. Barrows, Dr. John F. Carson, Dr. McLeod, Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, Dr. John Macnaughton and others. The department of "Applied Charity" is well filled with a finely illustrated article by the editor on "The Farm Colonies, and Other Recent Work of the Salvation Army."

BAKER.

A double portion of grief has come to the home of Bro. and Sister Orrin Baker. On March 25th the Good Shepherd took to his fold their babe, Charles Chester. On March 28th the angel of death again came to the home and bore away a little daughter, Ola Winifred, aged three and one-half years. Only one little daughter, Gladys, is left to cheer the grief-stricken parents. Christian faith enables the bereaved ones to bear their heavy burden. The hope of a glad reunion cheers the saddened hearts.

BRAY.

At her home, Park Place, this city, March 29, Mrs. Margaret Bray, aged 39 years. Sister Bray leaves a husband, two sons and one daughter to mourn her loss. She was a great sufferer for many months, but bore up bravely till her death which was peaceful. In her death the Fourth Christian Church of St. Louis, loses a faithful member, her husband a true wife and her children a devoted mother. Her beautiful Christian character will leave behind her a memory rich with sweetness and love as an inspiration for her dear ones and all who knew her. May we so live that—

"After the gloom and darkness of the night
We may meet thee in the morning light."

CHURCHILL.

Cadwalader Slaughter Churchill was born in McDonough County, Ill , April 25, 1834. In his childhood his parents returned to Kentucky. He was reared to young manhood in that state. He obeyed the gospel in his youth and continued a faithful member of the Christian Church to the day of his death, covering a period of much more than forty years. He was married in Macomb, Ill., by the writer to Miss Eva Twyman, April 3, 1860. They raised three children, a lovely daughter and two sons. The daughter grew to womanhood and was married, but died several years ago. The mother and two sons, now full-grown men, survive the husband and father. He died August 28, 1898, aged 64 years, four months and three days. Death came suddenly and wholly unexpected. He died on Lord's day night and the whole city of Macomb was shocked on Monday morning when word went out that C. S. Churchill was dead. Death did his work so quickly that there was no time for a word, scarcely a thought. In his home he was a very tender and loving husband and a kind, affectionate father, greatly devoted to the care and comfort of his family. He was a superior man in intelligence, though modest and retiring in disposition. He was a man of a clean mouth. His words were pure and chaste. He was a polished Christian gentleman. In business his honesty and integrity were never called in question. He was reliable. As a citizen no man stood higher in the estimation of the people of the whole county of McDonough. Three times they elected him clerk of the circuit court. For twelve years he discharged the duties of that important office to the satisfaction of the people. Forty-two years a citizen of the city and county and well known to both private and public life, no one is found to cast a slur or point out a dishonorable deed in that long period of citizenship. This is high praise, but C. S. Churchill is worthy of it. He was an honored member of the Masonic fraternity, and the high esteem in which he was held by the members of that order was shown by the large number of Masons who attended the funeral. Bro. Churchill's purity of life, his liberal financial support and his wise counsel made him an exceedingly valuable member of the church. In his death the church suffers an irreparable loss. So also his family and the whole community. Religious services were conducted by the writer in the house before the casket was taken to the church. There Brother L. D. Goodwin preached a funeral sermon, after which the Masonic brotherhood tenderly and lovingly laid our brother's body to rest in Oakwood cemetery to await the great resurrection and judgment day. Farewell, my dear brother! I hope to meet you on the other shore.

J. C. Reynolds.

CLARKE.

Nathan Clarke died at his home seven miles southeast of Westboro, Mo., March 25, 1899, of heart and lung trouble. Bro. Clarke was a man loved and respected by all. He was born near Allensville, Vinton County, Ohio, April 16, 1844, and moved to Illinois in 1868, thence to Missouri in 1875. He was married to Miss Lydia Cozad in 1866. Of this union 14 children were born, 11 of whom survive him. The family is one of the best in the state. Bro. Clarke confessed his faith in Christ at Allensville, Ohio, and was baptized by Elder Benjamin Cozad in 1865, and was steadfast in the faith till death claimed him for its own. He was an elder in the North Star Christian Church, and his absence leaves a lonsome place in that community.

S. W. Glascock.

IRVINE.

E. H. Irvine was born in Madison County, Ky., Oct. 11, 1837. When he was 12 years of age his parents removed from Kentucky to Missouri and settled in the Platte Purchase between Kansas City and St. Joseph. He was married in 1859 to Anne Eliza Forbis. In May, 1864, he began his memorable journey across the plains to Montana, arriving in Virginia City in the month of September. Thence, in 1865, he came to Deer Lodge, Mont., where he engaged in placer mining and stock-raising. In 1887 he moved to Butte City, Mont., where the remainder of his life was spent in business activity. After an illness of about two months, Edwin Hart Irvine passed away at the home of his son-in-law, J. O. Bender, in Butte, Mont. He was convalescent from a severe attack of typhoid fever, but in his feeble state a complication with kidney trouble set in which became too severe for his weakened condition to overcome. He leaves a wife and six children, F. F. Irvine, of Jefferson Valley, Mrs. Ella Mountjoy, matron of the Orphans' Home at Twin Bridges, Shelby Irvine, Mrs. J. H. Haviland and Mrs. J. O. Bender, of Butte City, all of Montana, and Mrs. Agnes Wood, Cripple Creek, Col. Bro. Irvine was a graduate of Bethany College. He was at Bethany when the school was at its best and A. Campbell was at the very summit of his strength and manhood. He entered college young in years and graduated with distinction in one of the most remarkable classes that ever went forth from that school. Among them were such men as J. L. Roland, I. B. Grubbs, J. C. Howell, J. L. Elliot, W. A. Hall, W. T. Moore, B. W. Johnson, John A. Brooks, J. A. Meng, Filander Lucas, Russell, Hobbs and a score of others of national reputation. With such surroundings, among such brainy young men as companions, and with such a man as A. Campbell at the head of the faculty, impressions were made upon Bro. Irvine that gave a delicacy to his perceptions, a clear sense of justice, deep convictions of right, a cultured intellect and a courageous and refined nature that few men possess. He went to Montana 35 years ago with the first settlers. He with a number of others traveled across the trackless plains for two thousand miles in wagons. Emigrants in those days were in constant danger and dread of Indian massacres and "road agents." When they reached Virginia City, Mont., 17 men were hanged in the town during the year they arrived by the "Vigilantes." This was the only effective law in the territory at that time. During all these hardships, privations and dangers, during all these evil surroundings and the wickedness that disgraced our earlier mountain settlements, Bro. Irvine's life stood like a giant of virtue, a lover of peace and order and a model of righteousness. No sacrifice was too great when principle was at stake. It mattered not to him what the results would be if it was a question of truth and right. He was always found on the side of the righteous. And yet, he had the esteem and respect of the ungodly as well as good men. In the year 1880 the writer went to the town of Deer Lodge, where the Irvine family was then living, to hold a meeting. They had been away from their own church privileges for 16 years. And yet, that home among the freighters, cow boys, ranchers and miners was to us a little paradise. We shall never forget how we thanked God for its delightful Christian influences. Sister Irvine, too, was a real helpmeet. Hers was a cultured and refined heart. It seemed that the Lord had made the two for each other, and in answer to his wish they made a lovely spot in the mountains they called their home. The children of this home can always say with pride, "My mother had a husband and we had a father." During this visit, after speaking of the great deprivations he had suffered on account of his being without church privileges for all these years, he said, as he named the only church in town that had regular preaching then, "I do not and cannot believe their views of the Scriptures, but I have been paying their preacher five dollars a month to get the moral instruction that he gives for my family and the community." He had united with the Church of Christ in early life and became one of the charter members in Deer Lodge in 1880. Here he had already given $1,500 to establish a school, and when the church needed a building he gave $1,000 for this purpose. He was not a man of wealth, but all he did have he gave generously for the good of the church and the benefit of his fellowmen. He was not only liberal, but generous, and gave with a willing and loving hand all through life. As an elder in the church he was always wise and instructive. When the Montana Christian Missionary Society was organized he became its president and remained so for years. The churches in Montana owe much to his wise direction and constant devotion. When our Christian Woman's Board of Missions began their splendid work in Montana he became their wise counselor and entered heartily into active sympathy with all the good work they did. Truly, a prince in Israel has fallen. A prince whose nobility of character, whose sterling integrity and whose true Christian manhood has left an impress upon the hearts of the men that will live on for good. For 35 years in the mountains of the West and often among godless men he was a light shining in a dark place. These rude men did not undestand his devotion to the truth nor his love for his Savior, but he impressed their lives. Here, there and yonder he has been sowing the seeds of truth and love. The good seed is growing, and it will bear fruitage.

ORANGE.

Died, in Mannville, Fla., on the 22nd of March, William L. Orange, aged 63 years, five months and 19 days. Bro. Orange had been an elder in this church for several years past, and was the most active and efficient member in all church work. His death will be a great loss to the congregation in Mannville. Our brother was a great sufferer during nine months' illness, yet was remarkably patient, and died peacefully, resigned to the Lord's will. His faithful Christian wife, with two small children, will continue to reside at her home here in Mannville, Fla.

PETERS.

Jane Ferguson was born in columbia Co., Ohio, Sept. 8, 1822, and became the wife of J. H. Peters, on April 1, 1847. In October, 1854, they moved to Quincy, Ill. While at Quincy they joined a colonization company and came to Fontanelle, Neb., April 28, 1855. Here they labored amidst the dangers and privations of Western life amongst the Indians. She was loved and respected by all who knew her. She and her husband were members of the Christian Church, but not finding those of their own faith here they worshiped with the Congregational Church until a Christian Church was organized with their help. When without a pastor, lately, they worshiped with the Baptists. She was faithful in every way and in her last illness she was patient. Without a murmur she passed away in the assurance of faith on the 23rd day of March, 1899. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn their loss.

Song Books.

Does your church, Sunday-school or Endeavor Society need new song books? Before you make the selection you should see the "Gospel Call." This music book is adapted for use in church services, Sunday-schools, Endeavor meetings, prayer-meetings and revival services.

It is published in parts one and two, and each part contains nearly two hundred songs with music.

The two parts are also bound in one book, making a music book of nearly four hundred spiritual songs and hymns, selected from about one hundred of the best writers of sacred music.

The prices of "Gospel Call" music books range from $15 per hundred to $50 per hundred. As soon as you need new music books write the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo., for specimen pages or sample copies of "Gospel Call." Your inquiry will have prompt attention.

"Men of Yesterday," T. W. Grafton's new book will be ready for mailing this week. It comes from the press in neat cloth binding, printed on excellent paper, 12mo size, 281 pages and the price is $1.00, postage paid.

The large number who have read the author's former work "Life of Alexander Campbell" can testify regarding the attractive style of Grafton as a writer of biography.

"Men of Yesterday" is a series of biographical sketches of Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, Barton W. Johnson and Otis A. Burgess. The history of the lives of each of the above-named men who have labored so hard in the cause of Christianity during the nineteenth century, should be known by all the young people of the Christian Church of to-day.

The whole story concerning the error of the Mormon doctrine is plainly told in "Doctrines and Dogmas of Mormonism Examined and Refuted," the late production of D. H. Bays. The author was himself an earnest and powerful advocate of the Mormon faith during a period of many years. During that time he was associated with the prominent men of the Mormon church and consequently gained the facts given in his book from the inside. The errors of the Mormon faith are brought out and demolished in a convincing manner. The book embraces 460 pages, bound in cloth, and the price is $1.50, postage paid. If you are compelled to answer Mormonism procure this book and you will be well prepared.

J. H. Stark may be aptly called the Chas. M. Sheldon of our brotherhood, with the difference in his favor of more tersely and scripturally telling his readers what Jesus would have them do. His last book, "Mary Ardmore, or a Test of Faith," is a carefully written and beautifully printed wrok of 328 pages. It is interesting from start to finish and ought to be in every S. S. and C. E. library in America. All Disciples having relations in other churches should buy a copy of "Mary Ardmore" for them. The above is the opinion of Rev. Geo. F. Hall, of Decatur, Ill., given after reading this late book from the pen of J. H. Stark. "Mary Ardmore" is brought out in latest style binding and printing, and the price is $1.00, postage paid.

The study of Bible characters is both interesting and profitable. Those who merely read what the Old Testament says concerning such characters as Queen Esther, King Saul and King Jehu may not derive as much benefit from the history of these persons as they should. When one stands on the bank of a clear, deep stream and only looks at ths surface of the water they see but little, but by continued looking the eye begins to penetrate the depths of the clear water to the bottom, where wonders are found to charm the eye and fill the mind with wonder. Many readers of the Bible have only seen what is on the surface and do not go down to the things hidden beneath the surface. Those who have explored the depths of the Old Testament Scriptures are competent to lead the minds of the readers into new fields of thought concerning prominent Bible characters. Such leaders will be found in the persons of Rev. M. M. Davis and J. Breckenridge Ellis. Both of these have lately written bcoks on Bible characters. "Queen Esther" is the title of one of those books, written by M. M. Davis, and J. Breckenridge Ellis has written two books which he calls "In the Days of Jehu" and "King Saul." These three books are worthy of the attention of all students of the Bible to-day. They are full of new thoughts to the average Bible reader.

A Surprising Offer

is that of the Quaker Valley Mfg. Co., which appears on page 473 of this issue. We are in receipt of a sample set of these spoons and as far as we are able to judge, they are all the company claim for them. They do not ask you to pay for them until you have seen them, which is in itself a very liberal offer. Simply send them your name and address and they will send you, for examination, a set of six spoons. If you are satisfied that they are all that is claimed for them, you can then send them 86 cents for the set. In ordering please mention the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

Good Alike to Renewals or New Subscriptions.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is growing in excellence, in the favor the brotherhood and in circulation. A good, healthy case of expansion expresses the situation.

It is a great satisfaction to know that this growth is obtained strictly on an appeal to merit; we are not indulging in rate-cutting to obtain subscribers. No one is anthorized to accept your subscription at less than published rates. This is official.

Have you a copy of "Wonders of the Sky?" It is a wonder indeed if you have not. If your own subscription is paid to 1900 (and if it is not now is the time to pay it) you may obtain a copy of this beautiful little book by sending us $1.50 for one new subscriber.

"Just received the Easter number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. It is superb. I admire her tast in selecting an Easter dress. May God bless the editor and his associates and enable them to furnish this good paper to our brotherhood for many years to come."

GEO. C. RITCHEY.

Harvard, Neb., March 30, 1899.

God works through human agencies largely, and if we are enabled to continue furnishing a journal of the present or even a better quality than the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, it will be because our friends realize the importance of actively and energetically assisting us in inscreasing its circulation. You can do this if you will. Try it and see.

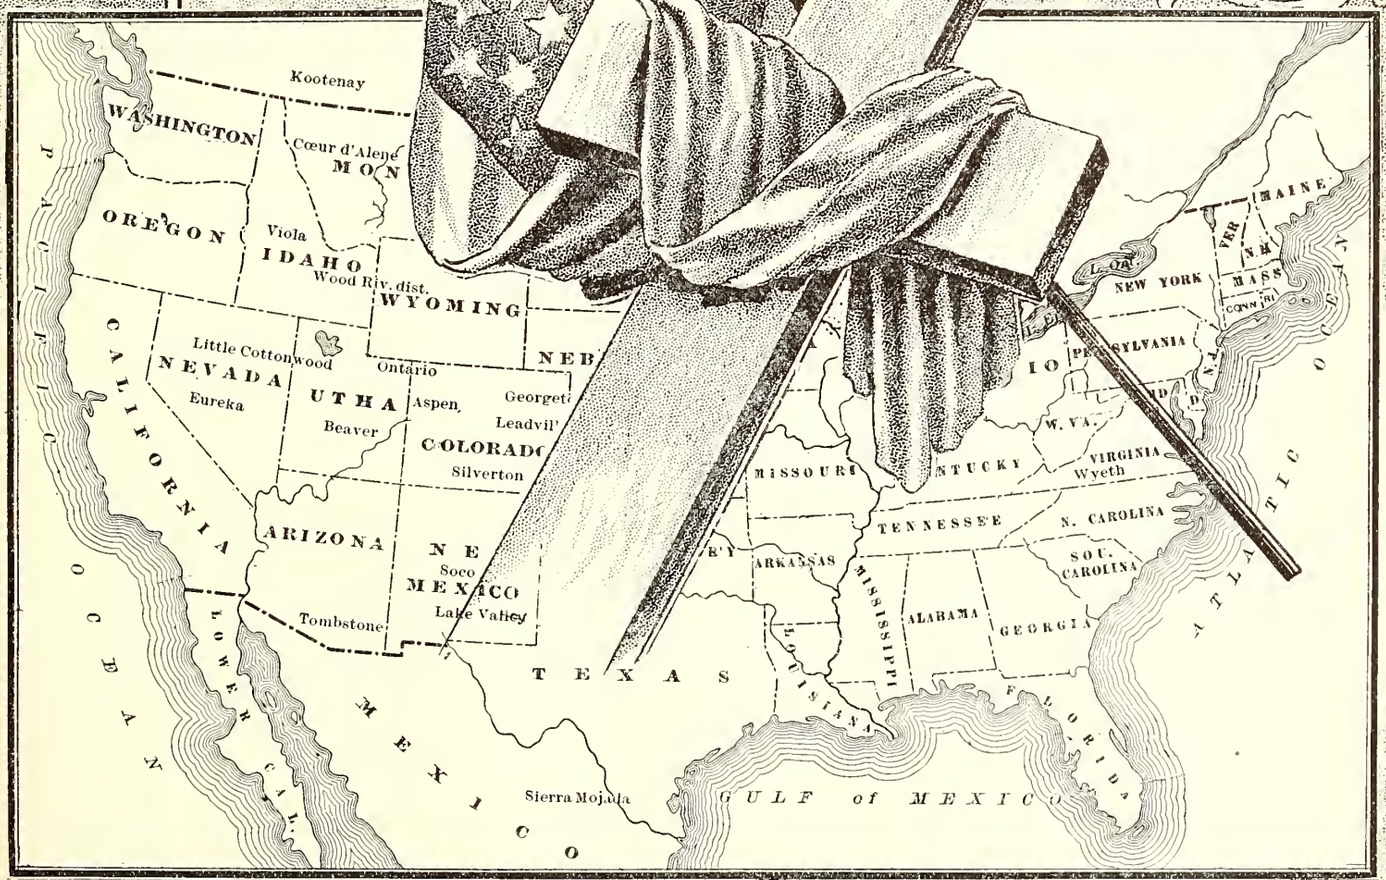
"Allow me to express great satisfaction with the Bible-school comments by Bro. Willett."

F. B. HOLDEN.

Lansing, Mich.

For a clear, comprehensive and loftly conception of the truths contained in the Bible-school lessons, and for combined beauty and simplicity in presenting them, we believe Bro. Willett to be unsurpassed. Every officer and teacher in our Bible-school need these comments in addition to such other help as they may have, and we heartily wish that a copy of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST could find its way into the hands of every one of them each week. Superintendents and others interested, cannot this be accomplished? Send to us for sufficient sample copies to bring the matter before your school.

"I offer congratulations on your beautiful Easter number. The cover is not gaudy, but neat and esthetic. It surpasses anything I have ever seen in journalistic art, and its beauty is only equaled by the luscious fruits within."



RUSSELL F. THRAPP.

Pittsfield, Ill.

We invite comparison between the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST at $1.50 per year and other religious journals at $2.00 and $2.50. Those who love bargains should not hesitate to subscribe.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

Wonders of the Sky

BY W. J. RUSSELL.

82 pages. Bound in beautiful illuminated cloth.....$ .50

This book leads the mind of the reader to contemplate the beauty, grandeur, sublimity and wonders of the heavens, directing them to a better understanding of the universe, and greater reverence for the Creator. The subject is treated, not from a scientific standpoint, but is presented in a popular style calculated to be easily understood by readers, both adults and the young.

The author of this book has looked reverently and thoughtfully into this olded volume of God's Revelation and states in a clear and eloquent way some of the facts anr truths which he has learned in this charming little book.—Extract from Introduction by J. H. Garrison.

One good feature about this book is that it is brief, yet its pages are crammed full of interesting information and inspiring thoughts.—PROF. G. P. COLER, Ann Arbor, Mich.

W. J. Russell is thoroughly conversant with astronomical literature, yet the magnitude of the study has been cleverly constructed by the author into simple, earnest language that cannot fail to entertain as well as instruct.—Daily Telegraph, Kalamazoo, Mich.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Military operations in the Philippines were continued both to the north and to the east of Manila during the past week. With the capture of Malolos and the apparent disorganization of the insurgents in that region it was assumed that the territory along the railroad line from Manila to Malolos was securely in the hands of the Americans and could be considered as a safe base for further operations. But the renewed concerted attacks by the Filipinos upon this line, although they accomplished little more than the destruction of the railroad track for a short distance and the cutting of wires in a few places before they were driven back by Gen. Wheaton's forces, indicate quite clearly that it is premature to consider the backbone of the insurrection broken. Not only will further advance be met by resistance, but the American troops must be prepared to meet constant incursions into the territory which they have already taken. The chief seat of war during the week has been to the east of Manila. Gen. Lawton, with a force of 1,500 men, crossed the large lake, Laguna de Bey, early in the week and after a severe fight took the city Vera Cruz on its eastern shore. The Filipino loss on that day is reported at 100 dead, many wounded and 400 prisoners. The following day's fighting in the district to the north of Vera Cruz was nearly if not quite as sanguinary. The American loss is said to have been small, an almost incredible statement when taken in connection with the report of fatalities among the insurgents and the strong advantage of position which they held. During the latter half of the week Gen. Lawton's brigade met but feeble resistance, and the result is said to be that the Filipinos have been driven into the hills. The prospects for a speedy termination of the war cannot be said to be bright. An American officer of high rank in the Phillipines says it will take 100,000 troops to put down the insurrection. Gen. Lawton has had long experience as a fighter of Indians, and the tactics which were successful in the Western states are being employed to good effect in the Philippines where the enemy's mode of procedure is similar to that of the Indians.

The Samoan problem is rendered more than ever difficult of solution by a new outbreak which occurred last week. A joint reconnoitering party of marines and seamen from the British and American warships fell into an ambuscade of natives of the party of Mataafa. Four Americans were killed and five wounded, while the British lost three killed. The scene of the ambuscade was a plantation belonging to a German, and the owner has been arrested on suspicion of complicity with the natives. As the matter stands now in Samoa it is England and America against Germany. That arrangement of sides in the contest has not been made by the governments concerned, but by their respective representatives who are on the ground. It is perfectly competent for any or all the governments to disavow the actions of its representatives, but every blow that is struck and every every injury that is received while the matter stands as it is now makes it so much more difficult for any of the three powers to recede from its position. It is in the highest degree important that the joint commission shall get to Samoa as quickly as possible and effect a settlement before the problem becomes more complicated than it is now.

While we may have a genuine war on our hands in the Philippines and occasional hostilities in Samoa, it may be comforting to reflect that at last our war with Spain is formally ended. The state of war, which had lasted a full year lacking ten days, ceased when the ratifications of the peace treaty were exchanged at the White House on April 11. M. Cambon, the French ambassador, acted in behalf of Spain, as he has throughout the negotiations. After appropriate preliminaries the morocco-bound copies of the treaty, one signed by the President and the other by the Queen Regent, were exchanged. There remained but one other formal action, the issuing of the President's proclamation officially announcing the terms of the treaty and the fact of its ratification "to the end that the same, and every article and clause thereof, may be observed and fulfilled with good faith by the United States and the citizens thereof." The proclamation was issued on the same day, and now the war is over and the two governments are free to resume diplomatic relations. The first act of renewed friendship will probably be the appointment of Spanish consuls in America and American consuls in the chief cities of Spain as an aid to the resumption of commercial relations. The appointment of consuls need not be delayed until ambassadors have been chosen. The consulates are an immediate commercial necessity, whereas the ambassadorships are now more important than usual, but do not imperatively demand immediate appointment. Some delay may be occasioned in finding the right man. One of the first duties of the ambassadors will be negotiation of a commercial treaty, the old one having been abrogated by the outbrsak of hostilities.

On Sunday of last week, for the first time in the history of the state, a railroad train was run through Connecticut during the hours of church service. Time was when it was as hard to get about on Sunday in Connecticut as it is now in Scotland, where there are practically no Sunday trains, coaches or other public conveyances north of Edinburgh and where even the livery stables often refuse to do business on that day. The famous Blue Laws of Connecticut have been the victims of literary and historical forgery and malicious exaggeration as well as the objects of legitimate criticism. They were not so bad as they have been painted, but making all necessary allowances they were still a set of intolerably strict regulations of civil, religious and domestic life. This law against Sunday travel, softened down in these modern days to the prohibition of railway travel from ten o'clock until sunset, is a survival of the Blue Laws. Such a statute in the present day may perhaps not be an expression of the highest conception of the Christian Lord's day (or perhaps it may—we are not arguing that point), but it nevertheless gives one a shock of pleasant surprise to find that a a measure like this has quietly lived on, not as a dead letter, but in full force, into our own non-Puritanical age. The law has lately been repealed and immediate advantage was taken of that fact to run a Sunday noon train from New York to Boston.

The Seventh International Temperance Congress was held in Paris April 3-8. The number of delegates was in the neighborhood of one thousand, representing all the important countries in the world. The reports do not indicate that any very practical measures were adopted for carrying on the temperance crusade, but there was a great deal of wholesome agitation, and much publicity was given to the facts in the case in regard to the world's drunkenness. France is said to suffer from the evil effects of intemperance more than any other European nation. In some parts of that country the decrease in population can be traced to this as one of its chief causes. This is especially the case in certain parts of Northern France and particularly in Normandy, where drunkenness is even more prevalent among women then among men, and where the death rate among children is consequently abnormally high. The question of intemperance in the army and the way to suppress it was one of the most important topics discussed. Among the speakers on this subject was Col. Parker, of the United States army. Since the enactment of the new Army Reorginization bill, with its clause prohibiting the sale of alcoholic beverages at the canteens, the United States can look the world in the eye when that subject is under discussion. The Congress undoubtedly did good. It would be impossible to get a thousand temperance workers together without good results.

The New York Evening Post is a free-trade paper. It has been a free-trade paper for over eighty years. Its editor, Mr. Godkin, is not a free-trader because he is a Democrat—in fact, he is not a Democrat—but because he detects, or thinks he detects, economic and political fallacies in the arguments for high tariff, and sees practical advantages in the practice of free trade. His freedom from party control is evident from the fact that he is at once a free-trader, a gold monometalist and an anti-expansionist. In fact, the Evening Post is as free from external control as any paper published in this or any other country. Having no political ax to grind, and, so to speak, no political ice to cut, it says what it thinks. But now come certain of the advertisers in that paper, and, by boycott, attempt to control its editorial utterances on the tariff question. The custom house officials have recently been collecting import duties with great vigor from incoming voyagers who bring merchandise with them. The Evening Post made this the occasion for a general denunciation of the whole tariff business, as it is wont to do when opportunity offers. A number of the largest retail dry goods houses, agreeing among themselves that it was inexpedient for their business that the public should be constantly reminded that some thinge are cheaper abroad than they are here, requested the discontinuance of the offensive allusions. When the editor declined to allow the editorial office to be controlled by the countingroom, they withdrew their advertisements. Undoubtedly they have a right to place their advertising as they see fit, but undoubtedly they do not have the right to attempt to control the editorial policy of a paper by threatening to withdraw patronage. The advertiser can spend his money where he pleases, but no decent paper will sell him anything more than advertising space. The question does not hinge upon the validity of the Evening Post's free-trade arguments, and it is a striking fact that the boycott has been denounced most vigorously by staunch Republiban papers, such as the Chicago Times-Herald. The question at issue is whether the editorial columns of a paper shall be considered as representing the opinions of the editor or of the largest advertiser.

Some irresponsible wretch, possibly a fiendish practical joker, or possibly a misguided friend of the down-trodden office-seeker, has started the story that 50,000 clerks are to be employed immediately in the census department. As a consequence of this entirely erroneous announcement, Washington is full of eager and expectant ones who have come from all states of the union, thinking that among so many vacant places they could not fail to get one. Some of them have spent all their money in railroad fare and board for a few days, confident that they would be set to work at once with good pay. It is at best a sufficiently pathetic sight to see ten men struggling for one small government position, but the pathos of the situation is magnified when it happens that one position does not really exist. Those who are ambitious to assist the government in taking the census for the year 1900, should remember that there have been already 20,000 applications whose names are on file. They should also remember that the present force in the census bureau numbers less than twenty, from Director Merriam to the office boy, and that there is no probability of immediate increase. In fact, most of these twenty find their sole occupation in recording the names of the sanguine but misguided 20,000. The job of tabulating the list of applicants, by the way, is itself not bad training for the work of census-taking. Director Merriam will be assisted by a few trained siatistical experts in making his preliminary arrangements for the census. There will be no need for a large force of clerks until the returns begin to come in, and that will not be until next year.

Trouble has broken out again among the miners at Pana, Ill. It will be remembered that last fall at the same time with the strike at Verdin, when Gov. Tanner brought militia to that town to prevent the importation of the colored miners, who were being brought in to fill the places of the strikers, there was a similar episode at Pana. But here, the conditions being less threatening, no effort was made to prevent the importation of the negroes. Sympathy with the Verdin strikers moved the union miners at Pana to a riot; several men were killed and martial law was declared. Peace was restored, but all the conditions remained which had provoked the outbreak before. The presence of the nonunion colored miners, holding jobs which had belonged to white union men, was a constant menace to the public peace. The outbreak came early last week. A colored miner was arrested on a warrant. He made forcible resistance and was joined by other colored miners. The whites took the other side, and what began as a simple case of disorderly conduct and resisting arrest ended in a war between the two sets of miners. Seven were killed and nine wounded, most of them disinterested parties and some of them women, before troops could be gotten to the spot, martial law declared and quiet restored. Realizing that the presence of the negroes, however lawful it may be, is bound to be a perpetual source of friction, negotiations have been set on foot for arbitration of the original difficulty between the miners and operators which led to the introduction of the negroes. What is wanted is an agreement upon some terms by which the colored miners can be turned out and the old conditions restored.

The Jefferson Day dinners, representing the several brands of Democracy now on the market, came off according to schedule. The ten-dollar dinner engineered by Croker and Perry Belmont, narrowed down in its scope to the particular section of the party which finds no occasion to take issue with the Republican administration either on its currency doctrine or on its foreign policy. Still, it was a vast assembly and a brilliant social and political event. Mr. Bryan lent the sanction of his presence to a one-dollar dinner at Milwaukee, but even here, where peace might have been expected, there was a notable absence of entire harmony. The line of cleavage was the same as that which separated the Harrison from the Altgeld forces in the recent Chicago campaign. It is not easy to say what is the issue between them, for Mr. Altgeld affirms as part of his political creed no proposition which is not in the Chicago platform, and there is no single item of that platform which Mr. Harrison denies. Yet the Altgeld faction assumes the name of "Chicago Platform Democracy" by way of distinction. Perhaps it would be a more sincere statement of the issue if the two factions were to be called simply by the names of Harrison and Altgeld. Two rival delegations to the Milwaukee dinner were organized by the two factions, and both tried to get possession of Mr. Bryan. To be recognized by Mr. Bryan seems to be the touchstone of true Democracy in the minds of all except the Croker-Belmont faction.

SOME DEMANDS ON OUR AMERICAN CHRISTIANITY.

Every careful observer of the signs of the times knows that Christianity in this country is subjected now to the severest trial, perhaps, through which it has ever passed. It has heavier demands laid upon it at the present time in the United States than in any other nation or age of the world. Ages of persecution and martyrdom do not furnish the severest ordeals for Christianity. Neither does opposition in the form of hostile criticism constitute the supreme test of its genuineness and power. The conditions now existing in this great Republic of the Western Continent make the largest demands upon the religion of Christ.

In the first place, we have in this country a new theory of government which is on trial. We are solving the problem of democracy for the whole world. We have here a government which, in the stately language of Mr. Lincoln, is "dedicated to the proposition that all men are free and equal;" . . . a government "of the people, for the people and by the people." Our revolutionary theory of government is that the people are capable of governing themselves, and that the power resides in them to select those who are to make, apply and execute such laws as are necessary for human good. This idea transfers sovereignty from kings and potentates to the people. The success of this experiment at self-government involves both the intelligence and virtue of the people. That no such government is practicable in the absence of an approximately pure form of Christianity, the history of the world has demonstrated.

The question now pressing for solution is as to whether Christ's gospel can be so applied to the problems growing out of our individual and social life as to perfect and perpetuate this form of government. It is evident to all who are capable of thinking upon such a subject that without the prevalence of the principles of righteousness and equality which Christ taught it will be impossible to maintain a pure democracy. The friends of democracy the world over are looking to our American Christianity to supply that regenerative and dynamic power which develops the higher qualities of our nature and holds in check the baser elements, and so fits men for citizenship in a free goverment. Is it capable of furnishing the salt which is to save society from moral putrefaction and disruption? Can it do this in a country where there is no union of church and state, and where Christianity must rely upon the voluntary service of its friends to teach it to the people and apply it to all the conditions of our modern life?

Another demand upon our American Christianity is made by the marvelous rapidity with which wealth is increasing in this nation. The increase of wealth is always attended with peril. No nation in the world is getting rich so fast as the United States. It is evident to every one who has eyes to see that unless Christianity by its divine sanctions, by its doctrine of unselfishness, by its conception of the real meaning of life and the right uses of wealth shall control and hold in check the greed for gain and the avarice which scruples not at the use of dishonest methods, our nation is doomed as all other nations have been which have fallen under the blighting influence of covetousness. Is our American Christianity equal to this demand upon it? Has it enough virility and aggressiveness to cope successfully with this absorbing passion for riches? Can it bring Christ's doctrine concerning the relation of man to his property into practice, even in the church and among professed Christians?

Again, Christianity under these free institutions must furnish a solution of our industrial problem. If not here, where else is it likely to do so? The conditions in this country seem most favorable, and if Christianity should fail here to point out the proper relation between capital and labor, employer and employee, put an end to our industrial warfare and effect a more equal distribution of the products of labor, to what country may we look for such a solution?

Once more: we are seeking to solve under this free government the problem of the unification of our Christian forces in order to increase the efficiency of the church in effecting these great moral and social reforms. It is clear that until Christian people can see their way to work together and bring their influence to bear unitedly along these several lines of reform, our Christianity will not meet these demands that are made upon it. Every great demand that is made upon the church emphasizes the necessity for a greater degree of unity and co-operation among Christians.

These considerations prepare the way for a just appreciation of our responsibility as reformers seeking to restore the unity, simplicity and power which characterized the church as conceived and established by Jesus Christ. We are in the midst of the preparation for a great jubilee offering to give greater effectiveness to this plea for a purer, a more vital and a more effective Christianity in this great country which is making so many demands upon us. It behooves churches and individuals who are capable of understanding the needs of the hour and the significance of this jubilee occasion to manifest their appreciation in the largest offerings which we have ever made for the evangelization of our own land and the establishment here, on stronger foundations, of the kingdom of God.

By so much as our advanced religious position gives us an opportunity of understanding the supreme demands upon our common Christianity, by so much should our offerings be greater in proportion to our wealth than those of others. Whether we will or not, we are furnishing a standard of measurement by which others will judge of the character and value of our plea for a purer and more vital Chistianity.

IS CHRISTIAN TRUTH A PROPOSITION?

Henry Vandyke declared in his recent Convocation sermon at Chicago University, if the truth and substance of Christian doctrine could have been put into a proposition, there would have been no need for Christ to come. If an abstract propositional theology would suffice to redeem mankind, the incarnation were a useless sacrifice. As Christianity could not be expressed in a proposition, but only in a person and a life, it was necessary for Christ to come.

We have been in the habit of saying that the distinctive and fundamental proposition of original Christianity was the divine Sonship of Jesus, confessed and formulated by Peter at Cæsarea Philippi. We have made this the creed of the church and the confession of it a condition of salvation. God is God and Mahomet is his prophet, as the peculiar distinction of Mohammedanism, has been a favorite comparison to illustrate the distinguishing proposition of Christianity, that God is God and Jesus Christ his only begotten Son. It goes without saying that Christian truth must be expressed in terms of the intellect as a mode of presentation to the intelligence of mankind; and yet peculiar emphasis must be laid upon the fact that the essential elements of the Christian religion are not found in any book or creed or sacrament or institution, but in the personality of Jesus Christ as the revelation of God.

The abstract, the speculative and the intellectual must not be allowed to deceive us in the belief that religion can be expressed in propositions or definitions, or that salvation can be obtained by believing and confessing them. This first acknowledgment of Christ as the Son of God, in its length and breadth, gives us a Person as the object of faith and the inspiration of love. If there is a power on earth that approaches omnipotence it is personality. Principles are inoperative till they find embodiment in persons. Abstract ideas are powerless to move the world till they find incarnation in the minds and hearts of men. There is no vital force in truth, no uplifting power, moral leverage, no irresistible, conquering might till it finds lodgement in life and personality. An abstraction or a proposition, however true, as the foundation of a church or the object of religious faith, would result in a cold intellectual philosophy, a frigid, innocuous moralism like Unitarianism, without aggressive force, redeeming influence or conquering power. This is the reason that the religion of Christ, while founded on a truth, has an omnipotent personality behind it to make it go, a divine incarnation under it to give it world-wide and age-lasting vitality. If the salvation of this poor, ignorant, sinning and struggling world depends on its comprehension of abstract ideas and principles, it is to be feared that its redemption will have to be indefinitely postponed. As this world is not made up of philosophers and magazine contributors, who are breaking their hearts in pursuit of abstract truth, it needs a personal Savior to whom it can look for help in time of need and whom it can believe, trust, love and follow through evil and through good report.

Hence faith in the apostolic church was simply personal trust in a personal Savior, who saved men from sin by saving them from sinning. The preaching of the apostles was the setting forth of a divine-human Person whom men were to trust and obey and be like in order to salvation. The faith of men who were brought to Christ under apostolic preaching was not a mental assent to an abstract proposition, but an enthusiatic, affectionate, ardent, personal attachment to the personal Christ of the Gospels. They were told of a divine and infinitely loveable man whom God had sent to redeem the world, and they believed in him and in his power to save. Their devotion and their affection centered in him, not in theories and doctrines concerning him. It was not a doctrine they believed in, but a Person, and this created in the soul and inspired in the life a love, a trust, a devotion, an enthusiasm and obedience, not possible to men who believe in doctrines and denominations.

There is a vital point of interpretation that seems entirely to have escaped our notice. Have we studied the Petrine confession in the light of Luke's context? Christ himself interprets the confession and puts into it an ethical context: "And he said to all," the next breath after Peter had spoken, "If any man come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." This is Christ's own interpretation of the confession of his divine Sonship, and he brings it at once deeply into life. The Cæsarean confession has a cross at the heart of it, and everywhere the cross is the symbol of self-sacrifice. Christ's program is self-denial, self-sacrifice, likeness to Christ in character and service. Is this putting Christianity into a proposition, or into a life? When the divine Sonship of Jesus is translated into faith and life, it involves directly and absolutely the crucifixion of the animal, sinful self, the bearing of the burden of the world's need in the sacrificial spirit of the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. Have we not eliminated the martyr element from Christianity, and thus evacuated it of its profoundest meaning? The Christian life is the great tribulation—full of noble pain for those who live profoundly. In all the lives of the saints we have a partial revelation of this side of Christianity—its trouble, its passion, its agony. The Christianity that costs nothing does not deserve the name. Every Christian must have a cross and must take it up. The life spent in self-pleasing is a life which ends in self-weariness and death. Christians still suffer with Christ, and so suffering, rise into a higher region where the air is pure. They suffer and they rejoice. They are aware of their cross, but they would not part with it for all the world. It must be theirs till Christ takes it away forever.

When people stand up in the church to make the good confession, has the preacher labored to make them understand that it means all this? We fear not. The pressing need is, not to abandon or minimize the old forms, words, and symbols, but to put more into them, or perish of superficiality, professing much, and knowing little of the religion that Jesus lived and taught.

MARBLE and granite are perishable monuments, and their inscriptions may be seldom read. Carve your names on human hearts; they alone are immortal!

Hour of Prayer.

STEWARDSHIP.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, April 26, 1899.)

Luke 16:1-13; 1 Cor. 6:19, 20.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: We, together with all we possess, belong to the Lord, having been purchased with a price; but we may so use our wealth, as stewards, as to prepare for ourselves eternal habitations.

This is one of the numerous lessons which Jesus gave concerning our relation to property and the right use of it. It is remarkable how much space is given in the Bible to this subject, indicating the importance which it had in the mind of Christ and the inspired writers. A very large part of our lives are taken up here, necessarily, with the accumulation and use of property, and it is natural that Christ's teaching should recognize this fact by the way in which he deals with the subject.

The point to this parable of the unrighteous steward seems to be that he had enough wisdom, on seeing that his stewardship was only temporary, to make such use of his position while he held it as to secure friends who would help him when he should lose his stewardship. It is the wisdom and foresight of the man that is commended, not the honesty of his course. In this respect he acted differently from most other people who are also stewards of their Master's goods. They only have a temporary stewardship as this man had, and yet, instead of using their Master's wealth so as to make them friends, and prepare themselves habitations hereafter, they act precisely as if they were to hold the office of steward forever. The man who uses his property, whether much or little, for his own selfish ends is not making any friends thereby who will help him when his duties of stewardship are ended.

There are those, however, who act more wisely. They remember the poor; they care for the widow and the fatherless; they reach out a helping hand to a worthy man that has gotten down in the world, and help him upon his feet again; they assist the poor but honest and aspiring young man or woman to get a start in the world, and they are full of good works. If poverty should come to such men a thousand friends would spring up to show them kindness and offer help, and when they surrender their stewardship here and pass on into the unseen to give an account of their stewardship to their Lord and Master, they will find that their benefactions have prepared them everlasting habitations. Which of these two classes is the wiser?

The basis for discharging rightly the duties of a good steward is stated in the second passage cited above, namely, "Ye are not your own; for ye were bought with a price: glorify God, therefore, in your body."

Perhaps this is one of the most difficult of all truths for us to realize. We acknowledge it, but we do not realize it. Of course, if we are not our own, but belong to Him who bought us with a price, even with His precious blood, then all we have, also, belongs to Him and is to be used as He would have us use it, in the service of our fellowmen. We venture to say that if this one truth were recognized and realized by professed Christians, our colleges would all be endowed, our missionary treasuries would be full, our benevolent institutions would be liberally sustained, a mighty impulse would be given to every department of Christian and philanthropic work, and the kingdom of God would move forward by leaps and bounds. Nor will the church ever accomplish its divine mission in the world until this truth comes into more general recognition. Alas, what a small proportion of professed Christians act as if they believed that they and all they have belong to God, and they are simply stewards under Him to use it as He directs!

Not our hearts simply, not our intellects alone, but even our bodies belong to God and are to be used in glorifying Him. In so far as this is done it cuts off all excess in eating and drinking and in our apparel, and thus gives us increased means for helping others and for glorifying God.

PRAYER.

O Thou, who art the source of every good and perfect gift, and by whose blessings we possess all that we have, help us, we beseech Thee, to recognize Thy ownership in all that we possess, and to use it as we believe Thou wouldst have it used, for the glory of Thy name and for the good of our fellowmen. If we have been unfaithful stewards in the past, help us to repent of our sins and to henceforth be faithful and conscientious stewards of all that Thou hast committed to us; and grant that when our earthly tabernacles shall fail us we may be received into everlasting habitations through riches of grace in Christ Jesus. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

Most of our readers have doubtless noticed the preparations that are being made for a great World's Fair, to be held in St. Louis in the year 1903, to celebrate the centennial of the Louisiana Purchase. The men who are behind this enterprise in this city are level-headed, wide-awake, energetic business and professional men, who are laying their plans with great wisdom and carrying them forward with splendid ability and energy. The fourteen states represented in the Louisiana Purchase, through their representatives who met in this city during the past winter, have entered heartily into the enterprise, and there is every prospect at present that it will be carried forward to ultimate success. It was felt that the most appropriate way of celebrating this great historical event, by which, without a battle or the use of force, so vast an empire was added to our national domain, was a great Exposition which would show the world's best products in every line of human industry and research—an exhibit of the best which our civilization has produced. Those who are best acquainted with the men who are pushing forward this enterprise do not doubt but that the great St. Louis World's Fair of 1903 will surpass in many respects anything that has ever been seen in the world's history.

Of course, an enterprise like this involves a vast amount of labor and of capital, and the only justification for it must be found in its educational value and the new stimulus it will furnish for advancing civilization. Some will, no doubt, make money out of it, but others will lose, and we may allow that these two classes will offset each other. It seems clear to us, however, that the city itself, the state in which it is held, and all the states participating, will be especially benefited in the new impetus that will be given to art, to science, to invention, to discovery, to manufactures, to agriculture, to education and to religion. This mingling and intermingling of the people of the different sections of our own country and of other lands will have a powerful unifying influence, tending to break down sectionalism, prejudices, provincialism and sectarianism. This World's Fair at St. Louis will give the people of the Eastern states, especially, an opportunity to find out that there is something west of the Mississippi River besides buffaloes, bears and savages! That, of course, is hyperbole. We mean that they will have a better understanding of the possibilities and actual achievements of these great states of the Louisiana Purchase.

In addition to that the people of Europe, who visit America and stop at New York, will have an opportunity to come West and see the United States, and find out, what some of them do not appear to know, that New York is not exactly the United States. There be thousands of intelligent people both in Great Britain and on the Continent who have no adequate conception of the extent of our national territory. They think of St. Louis, if they have ever heard of it, as a Western town just on the borders of civilization, instead of being a great metropolitan city lying about the center of the nation! The Fair will have a splendid influence in teaching the geography of this country to the people of the world. The value of the great West and the great South as important factors in this great American Republic will be appreciated after this Fair as they never have been before. The result will be a great increase in population in these sections and a new impetus given to the development of their latent resources. On the other hand, the people of these sections will, no doubt, get a great many ideas and suggestions from the older states of the Union and the older countries of the world. And so the blessings will be reciprocal between the different sections of our country and between the New and the Old World.

There is one fact, however, that Christian people should keep in constant remembrance, and that is that such a Fair as is here contemplated will furnish a supreme opportunity for disseminating Christian truth. A special responsibility, of course, will rest upon the local churches in St. Louis, but they will need reinforcement by their brethren throughout the United States in making the best use of the occasion for the advancement of the kingdom of God. Especially will it be an opportune time for promoting the interests of Christian unity. The natural tendency of such an exhibit and of such a flowing together of the people is to break down narrow prejudices and cultivate the spirit of brotherhood and co-operation. The religious features of the Fair are yet to be worked out, of course, but we have no doubt there will be numerous religious gatherings and conferences over important moral and religious questions, all of which will tend to the unification of Christians and to their closer co-operation in pushing forward the great moral and social reforms of our time. The influence of such conferences and the closer unification that will come out of them cannot fail to have a far-reaching influence on the interests of the kingdom of God. We look forward, therefore, to the proposed World's Fair of 1903 as a great opportunity for advancing, not only the material interests of the country, but especially the educational, moral and religious reforms of the age. Let Christian people be as wise in planning to make the best use of this opportunity as the children of this world are in making it serve their material interests, and the 20th century will be launched on a splendid career of Christian progress by the great centennial celebration of the Louisiana Purchase.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

SECOND DECADE.

OUR FIRST MISSIONARY AND HIS WORK.

B. B. TYLER.

It will be remembered that one reason for the selection of Jerusalem as a field of operations was the supposed fact that the people of the Holy City had been neglected by those who were engaged in the missionary enterprise.

In Dr. Barclay's annual report to the board dated "Jerusalem, February 9, 1853" he says:

"The Latins have recently established a flourishing college, and the English mission are just about to establish another college and a high school for females. The fearful odds against which I have to contend will abundantly appear from the following array of the respective forces of the principal Christian denominations in this place:

The Greek Church numbers about two thousand members and has one patriarch, three vicars, four archimandrites, two hundred and thirty monks, fifty nuns, and one physician and assistant.

The Latins number about eleven hundred, who are ministered to by one patriarch, one bishop, fifty-five monks and seven nuns, with one physician.

There are three hundred and seventy Armenians, inclusive of one hundred and twenty monks and nuns, over whom one patriarch presides.

The English mission has sixty or seventy members, one lord bishop, two priests, four missionaries proper, five male and five female teachers, three colporteurs, a hospital with physician, assistant, almoner and apothecary, a superintendent of house of industry, etc., besides officers of the consulate, established for its protection.

The Copts have upwards of fifty members, and four or five priests: the Abyssinians somewhat less than that number, and three or four priests.

The Lutherans number about twenty-three membsrs and three deaconesses, and have only one minister at present.

The Syrians have one bishop, one priest and one deaconness, but no members.

Nearly all of these communities have printing establishments and schools in the precincts of their numerous convents, some of them having about a dozen within the city walls.

In this connection I may also state that the ten or twelve hundred Jews have two hundred and forty-six rabbis, and the four or five thousand Mohammedans have probably about one hundred Dervishes.

When, in addition to this army of ecclesiastics, it is remembered that the members of these various communities are all stipendiaries, to a greater or a less extent, many of them receiving gratuitously not only house rent, but their daily supply of bread, and are unrelentingly persecuted on leaving their ranks, you will not wonder that we so earnestly ask your hearty co-operation and the fervent and effectual prayers of all the faithful. The propriety of speedily reinforcing our feeble band will also, I trust, seriously engage your attention."

This appeal was in vain. The "feeble band" was not reinforced. The Disciples were a comparatively feeble folk in those days. Their numbers were supposed to be about 200,000. Their wealth was not what it is at the present time. Nor was there such unity as now. It is also probable that there was a failure to comprehend the situation. Whatever the reason or reasons, the fact remains that the "feeble band," to use Dr. Barclay's words, was not reinforced.

It was about this time that D. S. Burnet, corresponding secretary, put to the missionary the following inquiries:

"Are you and your loved family, after all you have endured, still determined to persevere in the missionary life?"

"Do you prefer a Jerusalem with its sickness, its mixed population, the duplicity, the stolid indifference and murderous opposition of the Moslem, etc., etc., as the place for your family?"

"Does the mission offer in comparison with other fields equally available to you reasonable prospect of success?"

"Is it, or is it not, best to separate your agricultural plans from the bread-producing Artos? Do present prospects seem to justify both enterprises?"

To these questions Dr. Barclay replied under date of "Jerusalem, May 10, 1853," that for himself he asked no higher honor than to continue in the work. With this feeling his family was in entire accord. As to work in Jerusalem he said: "I so love the very dust of Zion that for some years I have cherished the hope of mingling my dust with hers; yet I am not so blindly attached to Jerusalem but that I would readily exchange my residence here for one where there is a more cheerful prospect of usefulness, be it where it may."

Concerning the "reasonable prospect of success," to which Mr. Burnet referred, Dr. Barclay replied: "Candor requires me to say that from all I can learn, many of the objections that apply so forcibly to this city exist to a much smaller extent at various other points quite accessible and available—that a more earnest spirit of inquiry exists at these points; and there is in some respects a more inviting prospect of good; but still I very much doubt the policy and propriety of abandoning our present position in favor of any one of them, for they are already preoccupied by Protestant missionaries, who not only teach a pure morality, but whose doctrinal errors are of trivial import compared with the tenets and exhibitions of the Protestantism here seen, which is so Romanized and Judaized as scarcely to evince any affinity to primitive Christianity. In addition to its other claims, the Lord has set Jerusalem in the midst of the nations, so that it is peculiarly fitted for incipient general missionary operations, whence the Bible can be widely distributed and a diffusive influence exerted through the hosts of pilgrims annually returning to earth's remotest bounds."

The reference in Mr. Burnet's letter of interrogations to "agricultural plans from bread-producing Artos" requires a word of explanation.

A man named Meshullam, and certain Americans, were engaged in an agricultural enterprise in which they were "exceedingly anxious" that Dr. Barclay should join. This, at first, he was inclined to do, for the reason that "the peculiar predicament of the proselyte in Jerusalem is such, owing to the lamentable state of the various religious communities, that without such place of temporary shelter, I have but slight hope of seeing the good cause extensively or permanently established in this land." He did not go into the Artos entesprise. He found that Meshullam was utterly unworthy. He spoke of him after discovering his true character as "this great humbugger." The last word he underscored, to give it emphasis. But our missionary held on to the idea of a retreat for his converts.

Dr. Barclay saw in the letter of D. S. Burnet an intimation of discouragement and an inclination to give up the Jerusalem work. He therefore said:

"I am not quite sure that I draw the proper inference from your remark about the responsibility of suggesting doubts, changes, etc. But I wish it to be distinctly understood that though so much attached to the cause in which I am engaged as to wish to spend and be spent, I would yet be pleased to see the mission in better hands. And even should the brethren deem the expense of maintaining it greater than is justified by the results, all that I could reasonably ask, would be to spare it until it shall be enriched, watered and tilled a year or two longer, and if it bear fruit, well; but if not—after that, cut it down, or transplant it."

From the American Baptist Yearbook for 1899 the Journal and Messenger gathers the following summary reports:

The whole number of churches in the United States is 42,893, an increase of 496 over 1898; the whole number of ordained ministers 28,409, an increase of 1,044; the whole number baptized 203,296, an increase of 4,864 over the previous year. The total membership is 4,141,995, an increase of 86,189. The whole number of Sabbath-schools reported is 24,619, an increase of 2,090. The whole number of scholars is reported as 1,726,693, an increase of 97,722. In the matter of contributions for missions, the following are suggestive figures: For state missions there were contributed $299,536.45, a falling off of $18,129.49; for Home Missions, $325,295.02, an increase of $18,353.29; for Foreign Missions, $446,-614.05, an increase of 46,799.73, which does not look as though interest in Foreign Missions were declining, as some tell us it is. For Bible and publication work the contribution amounted to $48,308.47, an increase of $5,869.85. There was a slight falling off in "miscellaneous" contributions reported, as also in those for education, so that the total for all objects amounts to $11,927,851.12, a decline of $167,739.18. As to educational institutions, our theological seminaries number seven, with 1,100 students; our universities and colleges 92, with 23,601 students; our academies and seminaries number 80, with 10,433, making the number of students in 179 institutions, 45,034. Total value of property, $28,416,394.

The Song of the Dollars.

ARTHUR O. GARRISON.

We are coming, Brother Benjamin, one hundred thousand more,
To speed the mighty Gospel o'er this land, from shore to shore.
We come from trousers pockets and from purses, round and fat;
We come from children's savings banks, and, as they pass the hat,
From the rich man's full abundance and the widow's slender store,
We are coming, Brother Benjamin, one hundred thousand more.

We have laid until we're rusty, but now we're on the road
To serve the mighty purpose of the Kingdom of our God.
The merry tinkle-tinkle of our music shall be heard
Where'er the hearts of patriots by our country's needs are stirred.
With prayers that God's rich blessing on our mission shall outpour,
We are coming, Brother Benjamin, one hundred thousand more.

From the blue grass of Kentucky and the prairies of the West;
From the slopes of the Sierras, where the eagle builds his nest;
From the hills of old New England, that are green with waving pines;
From the warm and sunny Southland, where the "Lone Star" brightly shines;
From Mississippi's winding stream and California's shore—
We are coming, Brother Benjamin, one hundred thousand more!

OUR JUBILEE OF ORGANIZED MISSIONS.

ROBT. T. MATHEWS.

The ringing Bible phrase, "the Year of Jubilee," has rightly a new turn in celebrating our half century of organized missions. That year of grace, 1849, was a historic year indeed, a turning-point in our progress as a people, in which it was settled forever that there could be no retrogradation. The name of Alexander Campbell himself is pre-eminently memorable in the transactions of that memorable Cincinnati Convention. Though absent from it in body, he was present in spirit, his influence the master force already in planting the idea of co-operation in evangelism, whether locally or nationally. The controversies among us over the scripturalness of this idea have simply been the natural travail of thought in which it has come to full fruitful growth. The only test that now remains is, by its fruits you shall know it. It is settled, and settled forever, that apostolic congregations can maintain intact their congregational polity and freely co-operate with each other in evangelism and philanthropy.

Our jubilee becomes, therefore, a unique opportunity of congregational growth and co-operative fruitage. It is the time of times for every wise measure that will bring out both in fact and hope the success of our plea in the progress of the kingdom of God.

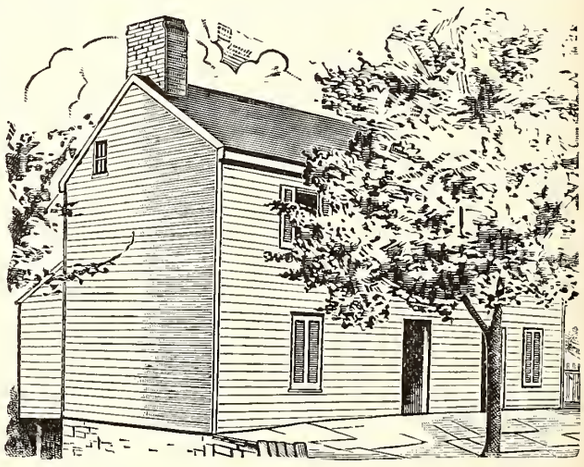
It is a fine time for statistics, diligently and accurately gathered. It is a season for many, many reminiscences of the pioneer days. It is a sacred hour for the few old men, the coadjutors of Campbell, that remain to speak like venerable Nestors to the present generation their memories of the deeds done aforetime, and to give their sage counsels to the young warriors around them. It is emphatically a year for all the interests of our history, to be read and studied for its records of the greatest religious ideal of the nineteenth century, for its annals of heroism in the ministry of the gospel, for its triumph of truth against errors and antagonisms, for its myriads upon myriads of splendid examples of the power of the cross in the salvation of sinners and in the fellowship of saints.

Are we reminded that we have shortcomings enough also to be considered? We do not deny it. But beware how you consider them. Beware always in what spirit and in what light you study any faults, individual or general. You may puncture them as a critic or satirist, and you simply aggravate the sore points. You may treat them in a Christlike way, believing deeply in the inward health always present through the grace of God, and so may inspire the individual soul and the communal soul with hope of better life and better deeds. Yes, let us faithfully study our faults and shortcomings during this Jubilee Year; but let us learn them in gratitude for what God has wrought, and in hope of finer possibilities and larger opportunities to do his will in another cycle.

Let our preachers lead the way before their congregations. Let every in preacher, prayer and by plan, set out to bring his congregation up to an enthusiastic appreciation of the Jubilee Year. Of course, it must begin in deeper individual piety. Let every preacher, every elder, every deacon, consecrate himself anew before the Lord with the ardor of a scriptural ascetic. How often a new life in a congregation and in a community starts from the spiritual renewal of one individual heart. It ought to be, it will be, a year of conversions, if the movement along the whole line originates from lives profoundly hid with Christ in God. Conversions should be prayed for, looked for, worked for, in the regular services on the Lord's day as well as in protracted meetings. Let there be a prayerful and wise campaign to enlist every congregation, every member of the congregation, in liberal giving for the propagation of the world-wide gospel. The Word of God teaches that, in answer to prayer, he will bestow the grace for such giving. His Word teaches that he will return the fruits of righteousness upon such giving. Let every Disciple, let every congregation, pray and live and work better than ever because it is the jubilee of our organized missions.

With this ideal of living and working before us, we ought to expect great things for the Jubilee Convention next October in Cincinnati. It is not too much to aim for one hundred thousand conversions. It is altogether reasonable to work for a million dollars in offerings to missions, and certainly for one hundred thousand for American missions. It is easily possible for ten thousand delegates and visitors to be attracted to the Queen City. Let the Jubilee Year become a focus of fellowship with the whole brotherhood, whether present in the National Convention in body or only in spirit. Let the Jubilee Year generate the wisest projects and methods of advertising the greatest religious plea of the nineteenth century. Let the Jubilee Year be to us more than a Pisgah, more than an Ebenezer; let it be a Patmos, with the light of universal victory shining in prophecy and hope.

PATRIOTISM AND THE GOSPEL.



W. M. TAYLOR.

Patriotism is love of country. Love bestows her best gifts. The best gift is not our blood for defence, but the gospel for inward purity and power; hence the man who withholds the gospel, "though he give his body to be burned," is neither a true patriot nor a Christian. To be a true patriot is to be a Christian missionary.

The stability of our government depends on its religious, moral and commercial purity, and that its greatest need is the gospel will be seen in observing the condition of these all-important elements. "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain, * * * waiting for the redemption."

1st. Observe the condition of the religious element. We have heathenism in its worst form. Sixty per cent. of our citizens are without Christ. Many of them as far from God, as ignorant of Christ, as the Hindoo. Ninety per cent. of those who know Christ are groaning under the weight of decaying creeds; the indifference, divisions and strifes in their churches are appalling.

2nd. Moral element. Hear the awful wails! There exists in our large cities a mass of ignorance, superstition and vice, making life terribly hideous, revolting and relentlessly cruel.

HOME OF THOMAS CAMPBELL, WASHINGTON, PA.

3rd. Material or commercial element. We have the largest material interests that any nation ever has possessed. "Bounded by the poles, the equator, the rising sun and eternity." But hear the travail of our nation's wealth of forest, fields and mines! Praying for deliverance from such corrupt service, that it may serve to honor God and bless man. Religious zeal, moral reforms, legislation and commercial wealth cannot "preserve the Union" except there be in them the strength of the gospel.

Brethren, these forces—this wonderful land, people, age and government—must be taken for Christ and his church, by the power of the gospel over the souls of our fellow citizens! For America for Christ means the world for Christ. We are a commissioned missionary nation. In this grand crisis of history God unveiled this continent, made it the center of convergence of all people of all faiths, and has called upon us to weld into strength these heterogeneous elements by the power of the gospel in our plea for Christian union, thus subduing all forces and wealth, making this the field of supply for the wants of a dying world. Without the gospel the destruction of our government is assured. Without ardent missionary zeal the very waters of our spiritual life, instead of being a flowing fountain of living waters, will become a stagnant or frozen pool.

"Be just and fear not;
Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's,
Thy God's and Truth's; then, if thou fallest,
O, Cromwell,
Thou fallest a blessed martyr."

GREATER GIFTS.

GEORGE DARSIE.

One of the most cheering auguries of the Jubilee Year for Home Missions is the fact that it starts with a number of the largest gifts the Home Society has ever received.

General Drake at the Chattanooga Convention, with characteristic generosity, started the ball a-rolling by handing over his check for $5,000. A week or two later another "Friend" of the work promptly matched his offering with another of equal amount. We had hardly ceased our rejoicing over these evidences of enlarged liberabity when two $500 offerings were announced, one from Mrs. A. S. Hale and the other from a good sister in Kentucky, and these in turn were supplemented by the gift of a deed to three hundred and twenty acres of land in Nebraska.

As proofs of a deepening interest in our home field, and of a determination that the $100,000 mark shall this year be reached without fail, these contributions are peculiarly gratifying. They are big straws which show which way the wind is blowing.

But above all, they are an example for others to imitate. It is hoped that they are the presage of a shower of such gifts from all parts of the land. Giving stimulates giving. Benevolent impulses are quickened by nothing so much as by benevolent actions in others. Paul worked up the Corinthians by holding before them the noble generosity of the Macedonians. And it would be a thing to rejoice over if the examples of large giving to which I have just referred should "provoke many" to do likewise.

In no other way can we hope to see the $100,000 raised. The churches this year will doubtless increase their offerings. We may confidently look to them for a considerable ratio of improvement. But large bodies move slowly, and all past experience goes to show that the ratio of improvement will be nothing very astonishing. The $100,000 will not and cannot be raised by the churches as such. Not just yet at least. By and by, when the giving habit is better formed in them and a larger proportion of them has fallen into line and may be counted on to make the offering and to make it regularly, our churches will have reached the point where they will of themselves give $100,000 to Home Missions, and even go far beyond that amount. But that day, though surely coming, is as yet some years ahead.

The hope, therefore, that the Jubilee Year will realize expectations is centered in our individual givers. If they come to time the sum we have fixed upon will be be raised, and if they don't it won't. That is the simple truth in the case, and it might aswellbespoken and faced. There is nothing for us but certain disappointment in a hazy and indefinite looking to the future, in the hope either that the churches will make a sudden and unparalleled spurt and raise $100,000, or that somehow our jubilee enthusiasm will take the form of startling financial effervescence. May the May offering bethe very grandest of our history, and I sincerely believe it will. May the churches have for us a huge suprise, both in the number of those that contribute and in the greatly increased average of their offerings. But the very best they can do will be sure to leave us far short of the desired sum. Realizing this now, the part of wisdom is to see and provide thus early for the inevitable deficiency by centering our expectations in our individual givers and acting accordingly.

And individual givers will not avail unless they are of the generous sort. Little gifts are all right and will be blessed of God. I do not slur or undervalue them. But greater gifts are what we now need and need sorely, if the end of our missionary year would see the realization of our dearest aims and hopes. We have among us hundreds and thousands of men and women able to make these greater gifts. Would that they might catch the contagion of making them from the large-hearted givers who have so auspiciously started our home missionary year.

Surely, it is time our people were having their ideas of giving enlarged. They have too often contented themselves with meager investments in the great work of evangelizing America. Is not a better era at the door? Will not the prosperous times that are coming on us so rapidly usher it in? Will not the "open door" which our great plea now enjoys in this favored land hasten its arrival? Was there ever a time when a generous gift to this work would bring larger or surer returns? If all that we have belongs to God, and if to him we must account for the use of every dollar we possess, it will be hard for men of large means to find excuse for doling out their fives and tens, when they are abundantly able to give their hundreds and thousands. We have thus far had two five thousand dollar offerings for our great home work. Why should we not have ten more before another month has gone by? We have had two five hundred dollar offerings. Why not twenty more by the first of May? Why not a number of one thousand dollar gifts, coming in quick succession from cheerful hearts and willing hands? The ball has begun rolling, why not keep it rolling? The custom of greater gifts has begun, why not strengthen and perpetuate it? If this is to be a Jubilee Year, let us make it a jubilee indeed.

There is no greater or needier work among us than that of general Home Missions. There is no work that appeals to us more strongly or that should press more heavily on heart and conscience. It is the essential basis of all of our other work, and the source of its supplies. We have already been culpably neglectful of it, and have jeopardized every other interest thereby. The time past should suffice for having turned it the cold shoulder. And from this day forth with a deeper sense of obligation, both as individuals and as churches, we should take up the burden afresh and support it with truer devotion, with nobler self-sacrifice and with greater giving.

MISSIONARIES TO PORTO RICO.

THE ADAPTATION OF OUR PLEA TO AMERICAN CIVILIZATION.

C. M. KREIDLER.

It is safe to say that no plea is so well adapted to American civilization as is the plea of the Disciples of Christ. It sustains a marvelous fitness to the heterogeneous classes with which our country is peopled. Here are to be found sojourners from every clime under heaven. Yet to them all our plea reaches with a strong appeal, because it is a plea for unity. They readily see that it is in perfect accord with the unifying power of our country's institutions. As citizens or as residents they are confronted with many problems which it helps them to solve. It adapts itself to every phase of their political, social and religious life. It meets them where they are and unifies and uplifts them irrespective of their nationality, cast or creed.

Further, it is adapted to the intelligence of the people of our land. By its simplicity it charms the untrained, and by its profoundness it attracts the most cultured. The intellectual cannot despise it for its emptiness, nor the untaught for its intricateness. Ours is a country of varied thinkers. Especially is this true along religious lines. By some, the average religious plea is rejected because of its obscurity; by others, because of its inconsistency with the Word of God. But our plea challenges the attention and secures the consideration of both the simple and the wise. Like the Bible, it grows in the beauty of its conception as it grows in its study. Side by side the unskilled laborer and the finished scholar delve into its as yet unexplored grandeur.

Again, it is adapted to the democratic spirit of American people and American institutions. We are a liberty-loving people, and to secure this to ourselves and our neighbors we have passed through some bloody conflicts. We are a nation "of the people, by the people and for the people." Every American child is born with a heart of liberty throbbing in his breast. To him a yoke of bondage would be intolerable. This spirit of liberty even permeates the realms of thought secular and religious. Our honored constitution guarantees to all the right to think, write, speak and worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience. Who can fail to see the marvelous adaptation of our plea to such a condition of things? Truly it is a plea for the liberty of all religious people. It advocates distinctively a people's movement. It proposes a church "of the people, by the people and for the people." It seeks, through the truth, to free all from the fetters of ecclesiasticism, "that they be no more entangled in the yoke of bondage." It aims to break down the arrogated power of priestcraft, clergy, creedism and organization. It strives to make all realize that they are kings and priests unto God, and as such are amenable, spiritually, not to man, but to God. It is democratic in the highest sense of that term. Such a plea cannot but harmonize with the very spirit of our nation. It commends itself at once to all thoughtful citizens. They reason that if liberty is right in political matters, why not in religious matters, and hence, why be tied down to the faith of parents, preachers or church, when the Bible is so infallible, so plain and so accessible? Hence we may safely predict that the day is not far distant when this movement towards religious freedom will be earnestly seized upon by all these liberty-loving people.

In closing, let me say that the adaptation of our plea to American civilization is emphasized by the religious condition of our country. This condition is one of ultra-sectarianism. Sectarianism has become so rooted and grounded in the religious life of our nation as to have become, practically, a part of our civilization. Here it has done its worst work; here it is to be cured. Our plea is to a divided Christendom. Our mission is to break the power of denominationalism and to unite those scattered forces of our Lord. It is to unite these people of God so that the world will the sooner believe that Christ was divinely sent. Then, when this may have been accomplished, will our American civilization become a potent factor in the world's evangelization. Then will the knowledge of the Lord cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. Then will our Christ reign supreme.

Troy, N. Y., March 21, 1899.

OUR WORK AMONG THE COLORED PEOPLE.

C. C. SMITH.

Soon after the war the attention of our people was called to the Christian duty of educating and Christianizing the negroes of the South. As early as 1871 a committee was appointed on "Preaching the Gospel to the Freedmen," consisting of L. L. Pinkerton, T. M. Harris and J. C. Goodrich. Two of the members of this committee were raised in the midst of slavery. The introduction of the report contains the following: "It would be difficult to exaggerate the spiritual destitution of the colored people of the Southern states. They need education in the popular meaning of the word. They need instruction in the most elementary principles of the doctrine of Christ; they need instruction in the economy of human life: in a word, they need instruction in everything," and one of the resolutions adopted was: "That all colored ministers employed by this society be required to frequently call the attention of their people to the subject of education and to urge upon their people the paramount duty of providing schools for their children." How clearly they saw the true need. The first recommendation of the committee, however, was: "That the churches be requested to take at least one colletion annually for the support of evangelical work among the freedmen and to send the money so collected to the General Christian Missionary Convention." There was a motion made to strike this from the report—ayes, 27; noes, 35.

In 1873, Thomas Munnell made extened mention of the donations for and work among the freedmen. His report also contained the report of Wm. Baily, secretary of the local board, in regard to the establishing of a school for the education of colored men for the ministry. The school was established at Louisville, Kentucky—P. H. Morse as teacher. This school was continued till 1876, when for lack of support it was discontinued. We have frequently heard this effort called a failure, yet H. J. Brayboy, of Lowndes County, Alabama, of the class of '75, has been a true leader of his people for nearly a quarter of a century, and I have found others doing good work for the salvation of their race who had received all their education there. They knew not how well they wrought. It was during the administration of Thomas Munnell that special emphasis was given to this work in his reports. Committees were appointed and special schemes set on foot to do educational and evangelistic work among the negroes. As he closed his earthly labors just the year before our jubilee, it is only fitting that we call attention to his invaluable labors for this race. I have carefully gone through the minutes during his administration and find that he gave heart and life and labor abundant to the advancement of this cause. It was during this period that the Southern Christian Institute was established, and evangelistic work was done in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi.

For some years this little was done by our General Convention. About the year 1888 a school was started at Newcastle, Kentucky, and a property was purchased, the money for which came largely from the churches in Kentucky. This school, like the one at Louisville, was not sufficiently supported, and in 1891 the property was sold and the proceeds, $2,500, given to the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization. In 1889 the convention at Louisville appointed a committee on work among the negroes. J. W. Jenkins was chosen agent to represent this work in the field and did valuable work both in raising money and in studying into the needs of the work.

At the National Convention, held at Des Moines in 1890, according to the recommendation of J. W. Jenkins the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization was appointed. The members of the board were J. T. Hawkins, president; W. J. Loos, secretary; E. L. Powell, vice-president; H. L. Stone, treasurer; J. W. McGarvey, W. S. Giltner and Joseph I. Irwin—all but one (J.I. Irwin) of Kentucky. Four members of the board then chosen remain as members until the present time. For one year this board searched for a corresponding secretary in the South, and at the convention at Allegheny, in 1891, W. J. Loos reported. This was one of the greatest reports ever made in our history considering that no progress had been made.

It was in the fall of 1891 that C. C. Smith was chosen correspoding secretary and commenced his labors January 1st, 1892. Since then a place has been given, in each convention, to the consideration of this work. During the seven years since the calling of a secretary this board has raised and expended $68,737.90, or almost a thousand dollars a year. It has, during most of the time, maintained three schools; one at Louisville, Kentucky, one at Edwards, Mississppi, and one at Lum, Alabama. It has each year maintained from three to six evangelists in the field. It has by improvements made at the Southern Christian Institute added to its value at least $10,000. It has built a school building at Lum, Alabama. It has laid aside $4,000 for the purchase of a home for the Louisville Bible School. January, 1898, this work was made one with the American Christian Missionary Society for the raising of funds, the Board of Negro Education and Evangelization to receive twenty per cent. of all funds after the expenses of raising are deducted.

THE CHINESE IN AMERICA.

JEU HAWK.

It gives me great pleasure to write a few words about our people in America. I really think that they need mentioning every once in a while, especially by Christian writers, not of work that they have done, but of their need of Christ, the gospel of the Son of God. Apparently and by early training the Chinese are very religious, only that their religious piety does not go up any higher than the ceiling; besides, their religion is nothing more than a sort of conglomeration of imaginary fancies. They are like some followers of Christ, "having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof." They continue to keep up with their forms of worship while here, especially on this coast. They have built costly temples in San Francisco and elsewhere for their idols. And it is astonishing how they should remain so blind with their foolish ideas and be so bound down with their superstitions in the light of civilization, advancement and Christianity. They are very slow to accept new ideas and give up old ones. It may be on account of an injunction laid down by Confucius in his Analects which says, "You must consider a thing thrice before doing it." Slowness, however, is the characteristic of the Chinese.

Whatever may be the cause of their slowness in embracing Christianity, one thing is certain: they are not too slow to imitate the vices and tricks of other people. This, of course, is to be deplored. Some one has asked, "Why do the Chinamen come to this country?" Well, their sole object of coming here is to see if they can not better their laboring condition. Some years ago this country offered a great enticement inducing them to come; so they used to come here by the thousands, but since the exclusion act came into force immigration from China has absolutely ceased. From a Chinese standpoint of view the exclusion act seems to be unjust and too discriminating; but what can a poor and peaceful Chinaman do? His own government would not, if she could, do anything for him; so, of course, the best thing for him to pursue is to be contented with whatever lot he is in while here. As far back as history goes they were well treated at first, but when they commenced to make their appearance by the thousands this good and kind treatment soon was superseded by hoodlumism, and the cry of "Chinese must go," soon flashed all over the country like lightning and thunderbolt. They have been butchered and shot down here and there and driven from one place to another on this coast. I presume, in the first place, the secular papers and political demagogues, are responsible for a great many of the hatreds and oppressions brought upon our people; and in the second place, we ourselves are in a great measure to blame. The Chinese have been misrepresented by the daily papers more than tongue can tell, and it is strange how intelligent and broad-minded people do get misled and swallow up both head and tail everything reported about the Chinese. Whatever may be the attitude of the people now toward them there is this much consoling truth, that God is not a respecter of persons. He loves all and "is the Father of all, in all and through all." We read in the Word of God that says, "The Son of Man came to save that which was lost." Now the Chinese are lost to Christ. They are lost to him because they seek not after the way of the Lord. There are thousands and thousands of them in your midst and right at your door, groping in darkness, and certainly there is "an open field for home missionary work among the Chinese in the United States." You who are followers of Christ cannot conscientiously treat them like politicians, corrupted officials and hoodlums of your own land do. That Chinese need the gospel of Christ no one will doubt. They cannot save themselves by keeping on doing the way they now do. It is evident that we are not justified to neglect them, that the chance for us and for them to get to heaven is far more secure if we should try to save them by sending the gospel to them. They can be brought to Christ, and they will accept Christ if some one will teach them. They are open to you for the instruction of the Word of God. Who will go to teach them? Some say God will do it in his own time and will, while others think that we ought to do it individually and not depend upon any board or society, for it is unscriptural and no "thus saith the Lord" for any such an organization in the whole economy of the New Testament religion. But the majority of Christian people believe that with unity there is strength, so if no one individual Christian or church can carry on a missionary work among any people, be they Chinese or otherwise, without help, then it is all right for us to work collectively, thus doing the will of the Lord. And for this reason let me say to our American brethren, both anti-society and otherwise, that there is no time for trifling in the work of the Master. But let us go ahead with the work that is before us, helping and supporting those whose hearts and souls are in the work. Let the rich give their thousands or millions and the poor their mites for this grand work of saving souls and God will bless you more, for the Scripture says, "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

Portland, Ore., March 4, 1899.

AN APPEAL FOR HOME MISSIONS.

B. F. MANIRE.

Within my memory no other cry has so thrilled the hearts of our great brotherhood, or met so cheerful a response as the cry of "Home Missions to the Front." It is ours now not only to keep Home Missions to the front, but also to make a grand advance all along the line. Home Missions constitute the only permanent basis for continuous and successful Foreign Missions. But for aggressive Home Missions Foreign Missions would soon languish and die. On the other hand, the success of Foreign Missions is a great stimulus to Home Missions. These two works mutually act and react each upon the other, and must be carried on simultaneously. Missions must begin at home, and then they can be established and carried on abroad. In proportion as they are pushed forward in home fields, they can be spread abroad in foreign fields. The apostles began at home, but they soon spread over all Judea and Samaria, and then they went to the uttermost parts of the earth. As it was then, so it should be now. When the church ceased to be a missionary church and began to theologize and dogmatize, it soon became a divided church, and the dark ages set in. The Reformation of the sixteenth century was the beginning of a grand missionary work, similar to that of the first century; and this reformatory work led naturally to the reinauguration of world-wide missions. The missionary work of the nineteenth century has done more to break down the walls of sectarianism and unify the body of Christ than any other providential movement since the Man of Sin was enthroned. Let the good work go on. Let every one lend a helping hand and push it onward and upward. Sustain and enlarge Home Missions and you will sustain and enlarge Foreign Missions. Neglect and starve Home Missions and you will neglect and starve Foreign Missions. They will live and grow or languish and die together. Let our rallying cry be, "America for Christ, and through America the whole world for Christ." May the Lord greatly bless the efforts of all the faithful!

Jackson, Miss., March 2, 1899.

THE A. C. M. S. HAS DISCOVERED THE EAST.

W. J. WRIGHT.

The A. C. M. S has discovered the East! Nothing greater or more praiseworthy is shown in her history. In the Middle and Western states she has been the mother of multitudes of churches in the last half century, but until recently knew nothing more of the Atlantic states than we knew of Central Africa twenty-five years ago. The states lying along the Atlantic Seaboard have a population of 26,000,000, or more than a third of the total population of the country. In this vast population we have but 634 churches and 79,223 members.

So far as missionary effort is concerned this vast field was unexplored and unknown until within a few years. The people were considered cold, critical and conservative. The plea of the Disciples, so powerful elsewhere, was considered almost impotent for this field.

The A. C. M. S has not yet dotted this field with missions, but it has discovered us. It has experimented enough to see that a mission here, as by magic becomes a church, and that the "apostles' doctrine" is quite as powerful in Maryland as in Missouri. This society has discovered that "our plea" is not openly assailed here, as in the West; that people are open-hearted and ready to receive it; that as large crowds will attend our meetings here as elsewhere, and that the results of the meetings are as great as in places where we are strong.

I cite a single instance. The writer went to Baltimore last summer and held a tent meeting for the A. C. M. S. A congregation was formed, lot purchased, house erected and a preacher called. A new church was the result of a few week's work.

The Home Society has discovered that this is the richest and ripest field in America, and has turned the eyes of the brotherhood this way; the large returns which have followed their small outlay have given abiding confidence of success in the future.

Two years ago our man was employed in this district to do mission work; now six are at work as the result of co-operation between our local mission board and the A. C. M. S. The people here believe that this society will help them; hence their willingness to help this society. May God bless her for what she has done; may he bless and help her and multiply her resources because of what she is doing and proposes to do.

NEEDS AND PROSPECTS OF MISSION WORK.

R. H. BOLTON.

With respect to the mission work at Eqerett, Mass., the following may be said:

As to its needs:

1. We need the completion and occupancy of our house of worship. This is necessary to draw the people to us, and afford an opportunity for us to present the heaven-born and God-given plea to the people. This will greatly help to give permanence to our work here. But, to complete this house for the Lord, aid from the brotherhood, either through individuals or boards, is necessary.

2. We need the work carried forward by a strong and wide-awake gospel minister. One possessing good executive ability will succeed best.

3. We need appropriations from boards yet a while longer to make the work a permanent success.

4. We need great self-consecration and enjoyment of the power of the Holy Spirit. Without possessing this heavenly power and influence the success will be meager and of short duration.

But 5. If the church house is once completed, church led by a strong pastor, helped in its support by boards and pastor, and church filled with the Holy Spirit, the spirit of consecration and work, the outlook is favorable.

(1) For if God is for us and with us, his people, success will be the result.

(2) The plea we possess and present is clear, simple and scriptural—easy to be presented and understood — hence, when people get an intelligent understanding thereof, they readily fall into line with us.

(3) The employment of a good, strong and efficient gospel workman for season to do special evangelistic work doubtless would accomplish a great work.

The gospel seed sown during these years past and our acquaintance with the people here would give assurance of success to an evangelistic laborer.

And, as regards the work in New England, considered upon the whole, the outlook is favorable. It is true, the people as a rule are conservative and do not move so rapidly as in some lands, but they move slowly and surely.

The faith and practice, and the basis of union of God's people on the Scripture and common-ground platform occupied by the Disciples, takes with the people when properly understood. There is no trouble to make Disciples when faithful and intelligent effort is made in presenting the gospel and its claims.

More gospel workers, who can be sustained while in the field, are needed; if these are had most glorious will be the results.

The work in the Northeast upon the whole is doing fairly well. Many precious reformations are being enjoyed; new church houses erected; others repaired, and an organ, the New England Messenger, is spreading the messages of good news to the brotherhood.

In places missions are carried forward with good interest. Openings prevail at other points to begin work; yea, upon the whole a wide and ripe open field prevails for work for our blessed Master. More men and means are needed. These secured, and God's blessings resting upon the workmen and work, blessed results can be secured in our Eastern land as well as in the West. The harvest truly is great, but the active workers in the field are too few.

We pray that the work that God has sacredly committed to our trust, as a people, may ever be sacredly preserved, and be carried forward with great vigor, earnestness, and with the blessing of God resting upon us and our labors, may we be a great power in his hands to evangelize the world. So mote it be!

Our Budget.

—"Home Missions to the front!"

—We have done it on our first page.

—Country, Cross and Flag—what a trinity!

—Each of these symbols represents a great thought and emphasizes the value of Home Missions.

—The map stands for our vast territorial domain made up of free commonwealths; the flag represents liberty, law and national sovereignty; the cross symbolizes the gospel, without which neither territorial greatness nor constitutional rights would avail us anything.

—The three combined mean that we must have one hundred thousand dollars for Home Missions this Jubilee Year in order that the religion of Christ may exert a deeper and wider influence over individual, social and national life.

—The Bulletin for the present quarter of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses not only outlines the work for the present quarter, but contains other excellent things. In fact it reads like a first-class Christian magazine rather a bulletin. The editorial notes upon reading courses and other things are to the point and practical. The strong missionary atmosphere of this number of the Bulletin is in happy unison with the present urgent plea for Home Missions. But, of course, our missionary enterprises have no better friends than our Endeavor Societies and their leaders. The special missions of this Bulletin, however, is to give information about the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses, and for this reason especially should you have it in your own hands.

—The Texas letter this week gives an account of the dedication of the new and elegant church edifice at Austin. We had hoped to have a cut of this beautiful structure to accompany the letter, but the photograph came too late to get the cut. It will, however, appear in our next issue.

—F. O. Fannon, chairman of the entertainment committee, is still asking those expecting to attend the Congress to be held in this city, April 25-27, to send their names to him, if they have not already done so, that entertainment may be provided for them. Address 3126 Locust Street, St. Louis, Mo.

—Christian College Chronicle for March was late in reaching us, but none the less bright in its appearance and pleasing in its contents.

—In a table recently prepared and published by Governor Larrabee it is shown conclusively that crime is rapidly increasing in the state of Iowa under the Mulct law, whereas, under prohibition there was a constant decrease year by year from 1886 to 1890. And yet, scientific as we are, we the people of the United States under the rule of the majority, will still shut our eyes to the facts and continue to hold the rumseller in good stsnding and full fellowship as a citizen of the United States. If science is to be thus ignored, where then is our boast of being a scientific people. Shame on such wilfull, persistent ignoring of fundamental facts.

—In an editorial in the Michigan Christian Advocate, recently, written to urge Methodist parents to baptize their children, are some singular statements. For instance, he says that "infant baptism as well as circumcision was nndoubtedly practiced in the Jewish Church." No history is cited in proof of the assertion; but, if true, what becomes of the old argument of baptism taking the room or place of circumcision? Again, the M. C. Advocate says: "If Christ had not designed that infants should be baptized he would have forbidden the practice." Ditto circumcision, drinking wine at weddings and many other things. But as a matter of fact no such custom as that of baptizing infants was known in the days of Christ. Such happenings were about as infrequent as the mention of the same in the Bible. But possibly the Lord, foreknowing the zeal of the Methodist and other churches not then born for their personal safety and welfare, thought it useless to leave anything in his written Word upon the subject.

—Elsewhere in this paper mention will be found of a conference of the Disciples of Christ on the Atlantic Coast, to be held at Philadelphia, May9-11. This is certainly a wise step toward a forward movement for our brethren in the East, and it is to be hoped that their interest taken in this conference will insure a large attendance. Representative meetings for council cannot be held too frequent in this progressive age of the world.

—That we might the more abound in Home Mission literature in this, our special Home Mission number, in the interest of the Home Mission offering on the first Sunday in May, the omission of much editorial matter, some of our departments and the curtailment of space in others this week became a necessity. On this account our two serial articles on "The Evolution of a Disciple" and "Vital Relationship with Christ" had to go over, also many important communications and interesting articles. Writers of letters which appear only in abbreviated form in this paper will, we hope, also kindly attribute the unavoidable contraction of their letters to the paramount interest and importance of Home Missions. The Home Mission ball is rolling, and now that it is so near the time for the general offering let us give it all the additional momentum possible.

—The Christian Leader seems to take pleasure in the fact that not half of our churches are enlisted in an organized effort to extend the kingdom of Christ in the world; at least that they have not joined a missionary society. Last week it devoted two columns to the task of indicating the number of churches not yet enlisted in this work in a way that would leave an impression upon the mind of the unlearned that it took particular delight in the weakness and failures of misssionary societies and other organized efforts in the Lord's work. There is not a hint of any better method for doing this work nor an apology for this selfish inactivity on the part of these non-participating churches. It is certainly an unenviable position for any so-called Christian journal to occupy. Instead of being a "Christian Leader" it is rather a Christian Blockader. How any man believing Christ to be the Son of God, the world's Savior, can rejoice at the weakness of the effort to carry Christ to the ends of the earth, is simply incomprehensible.

—Dr. Collins, of Shelbyville, Ill., has sent us an autograph letter from Alexander Campbell, dated Bethany, Va., April 18th, 1841. The letter is addressed to Bro. Ewing. On the back of the letter is the following endorsement: "Bloomington, Ill., July 19th, 1882. This is a genuine autograph letter of the Rev. Alexander Campbell, obtained by myself from a relative of the Campbell family. (Signed) Geo. R. Wendling." The letter subsequently came into possession of Dr. Collins. In the beginning of his letter to "Beloved Bro. Ewing," he says: "I am just returned in health from Nashville. I had a fatiguing time of it, having in 75 days spoken 66 discourses and traveled by land and water about 2000 miles." Referring to certain persons with whom he had come in contact, who were known to Bro. Ewing, he spoke of their good qualities and added: "Nevertheless, they are greatly under the influence of the commercial spirit of the age. They are rising in their profession and will, no doubt, be both honorable and rich in this world as far as law and politics can pave the way. Unless soon changhed in the bent of their views and feelings I shall fear for them very much. They took the greatest interest in me and my preaching and were as deeply solicitous as any in the place for my success." The letter closes with the writer's hope that he will meet his friend and brother "at the May meeting of the board of trustees." The letter is interesting as indicating the onerous character of his labors, and also as indicating his recognition of the danger to Christian faith and life of "the commercial spirit of the age," then as now antagonistic to the Spirit of Christ.

—The receipts of the Foreign Missionary Society for the week ending April 13 were $7,227.36. For the same week last year, $4,779.02. Gain, $2,448.34.

—The Christian Endeavorer, a sixteen-page paper, published monthly by the Christian Endeavorers of the West Side Christian Church, Chicago, Ill., Miss Emma J. Maris, editor, is a journal of excellent qualities. It is published in the interest of the West Side Christian Church, of which Bruce Brown is the active and highly appreciated pastor.

—Dr. Willett's article on the Sunday-school lesson for this paper has not yet arrived and we are compelled to go to press again without it.

—One who has written acceptably for our columns, and not infrequently, says: "The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is tip-top. Better when I don't write for it than when I do." Not every one who writes for a religious journal is possessed of such a spirit. Such freedom from bias is highly commendable.

—The Alkahest Magazine, of Atlanta, Ga., is trying to revive the old-time American oratory by giving annually a gold medal for the best oratorical production from a college young man. John Temple Graves started this work of encouragement by giving a medal to the Georgia colleges for the best oratory. This has proven a great success. The Alkahest extends the offer to all colleges. To give an equal chance to young women, it also offers a similar medal for the best literary production on any subject from a young lady in college. Word limit 3000—2000 preferred. Contests close June 20, each year. Pictures and sketches of the successful ones will be published in that journal. This is a worthy move on the part of this Southern magazine to encourage oratory and literature in colleges and the coming contest is expected to be a great success.

—In deciding that the recently passed anti-canteen law does not prevent liquor selling in the army, the attorney-general must know that he is annulling the expressed will of the people, which in fact is the law in the case. We have before remarked how difficult it is to get an anti-saloon and an anti-liquor law that is constitutional or that will be effective. Such care is not observed in the making of laws on the other side of the question. Furthermore, the liquor men and the saloon men do not seem to try to keep within the pale of the words of the law framed for their benefit, much less its spirit. Sometimes it looks as if some friend of the liquor traffic had found some way in which to assist in framing the so-called anti-liquor laws and had juggled with words as we intimated in this department last week, but we have since been informed by the Reform Bureau at Washington that in this case in order to get the anti-canteen law into a "personnel" bill it had to take a personal form; and second, in order to pass in a House that had just repealed prohibition in Alaska, the most offensive aspect of the law, the detailing of soldiers as bartenders, had to be put to the front; but following this came the requirement in the bill that no other person should be required or allowed to sell liquor to soldiers and the President should see that the law is enforced as its scope and spirit implies. It was clearly intended by this law to abolish liquor selling to soldiers, and it should be so ordered by the proper authorities without further legislation.

—Bro. A. R. Moore, of Memphis, Tenn., has certainly put St. Louis under obligations to him for his very kind letter in the Guide of last week. Bro. M. seems to have mastered well the art of comprehending much in a few words, as is shown by this excellently written letter. We hope Bro. M. will visit St. Louis soon again. In the meantime we shall try to take good care of his brother and see that he is kept busy. We have not forgotten the effort that was made not long ago to locate the writer of the Guide letter in this city also.

—The program of the first annual meeting of the preachers of the Christian Church of South Kentucky came too late to appear in this paper. The date and place of the meeting are May 2-4, Princeton. The program is a good one because of the class of topics selected for discussion and the men to discuss them. "A cordial invitation is extended to the brotherhood to attend this meeting," and all who expect to attend are requested to send their names at once to W. S. Payne, Princeton, Ky. We hope the brethren will have a royal feast.

—On last Friday Samuel Colcord delivered his famous lecture, "Reply to Col. Ingersoll," to a large, popular, representative and appreciative audience in the Central Y. M. C. A. Auditorium, this city. As an interesting, instructive, popular lecture, the address fully met the high compliments it had won in other cities. Col. Ingersoll is by no means the most dangerous enemy of the Christian religion, but it is well enough to let the people see how illogical his conclusions, how unreasonable his premises, how unsound his philosophy, how deceptive his glittering generalities and how dangerous his method of dealing with history.

—The pictorial edition of the Christian Guide last week, in the interest of Louisville, was somewhat of a departure from the former habits of this journal, but attractive nevertheless. The pictorial history of the church in Louisville was especially interesting because of its broad personal acquaintance with the brotherhood and its pioneer as well as present preachers.

—A note from Mrs. Kate A. S. Judy, of Tallula, Ill., speaks very highly of the lecture on "Higher Education," by J. G. Waggoner, of Eureka, Ill., as representing the interests of Eureka College. She says of the lecture: "It was scholarly and logical, brimming over with pith and point. We have heard nothing better in Tallula."

—It was reported in one of the dailies of this city last week that R. Lynn Cave had resigned the presidency of the University at Lexington, Ky., that his resignation had been accepted by the board of trustees and that the office had been abolished. The reason assigned was that the University had sustained financial losses and would not be able to maintain the office. A dean will be elected by the trustees instead of a successor to R. Lynn Cave.

—J. Z. Tyler, of Cleveland, O., has compiled and published a complete directory of all the churches of Christ among the Disciples of Christ in Cuyahoga county, Ohio. Of these eighteen churches eleven are in Cleveland. This directory is a book of 300 pages, well printed on good paper and in paper cover, and was compiled in the interest of all our churches in Cuyahoga county and on a plan that will give it permanent value. By the aid of the advertisements contained Bro. Tyler will be able to distribute 5,000 copies of this book throughout the county gratuitously. The business part of issuing this book was done by the C. A. Hackett Co., Massillon, O., a firm that Bro. Tyler recommends to any of our churches doing a similar work. In preparing this directory much of the early history of the churches named has been put in shape for preservation. Another valuable feature of the work is an account of the Disciples of Christ by B. B. Tyler, covering seven pages of the book. There is also a five-page account of the "Disciples' Union," a sketch of the "21st Ohio Missionary District," and a record of the "Union" in church building. As this is the first church directory we have seen constructed on so large a scale and on such a useful basis, we think the author worthy of praise for his originality as well as his philanthropy in behalf of the cause of Christ in and about Cleveland. Both the enterprising spirit of the compiler and the plan of the book are eminently worthy of emulation. Let other counties and cities do likewise.

—The poem on "Home Missions" in our Family Circle, this week, was written by the daughter of one of our most earnest, consecrated preachers, a man who is giving his life for the spread of the gospel in destitute regions.

—Arthur T. Pierson, in Missionary Review of the World, says:

W. H. Waggoner, of Eureka, Ill., is still engaged in his Mrssionary Institute work. He has since 1895 devoted his time exclusively to this form of service. Last year he lectured thirty-five weeks in Illinois and Indiana, besides attending numerous conventions. The work is, of course, an interdenominational one, and the maps and illustrations greatly aid in impression. Pastors and others who desire to stimulate missionary zeal, which is founded on knowledge of the world-field, would do well to correspond with Mr. Waggoner.

Bro. Waggoner has made a specialty of this field, and his work has been highly commended by our own and other churches.

—What is called "magnetic bealing" is generally a fraudulent practice upon the ignorant. There may be some persons who possess some magnetic power in soothing mere nervous ailments. But there is no such thing as a magnetic healing science. People who lend themselves to it are simply abetting a humbug.

From what we have heard of cures said to have come from touching dry bones, pieces of wood, garments, etc., held by the Catholic Church we do not think that the above accusation from the Church Progress of this city is in very good taste.

—The recent resolution of the New York Assembly called out the following terse criticism from Dr. Parkhurst, which is quite prophetic of the feeling that is rapidly obtaining in the larger cities. Evidently they mean if possible to have a government of their own quite as independent of the state as is state government independent of the Federal government. In other words, the larger cities of these United States are rapidly declaring in favor of home rule. Here is Dr. Parkhurst's declaration on the underlying principle in the case:

ROYAL
IS THE BEST.

A pure, cream of tartar powder.
Greatest in Leavening Strength.
It makes lightest, sweetest, most wholesome food.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

I am opposed to this commission of investigation. Ostensibly it will not come down here for political purposes. In reality, however, it will without doubt work for political ends. The Lexow committee had no intention when it came down from Albany except to secure poltiical results. It, however, worked on broader lines, for the reason that it was obliged to. I have no confidence that New York will ever be better governed than at present until Albany lets it alone—until Albany leaves it to work out its own salvation.

—Having seen notice in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST sometime ago, of the 20th Century New Testament, I sent the publishers, Mowbray House, Temple W. C., London, the United States equivalent of 2s 6d each, for the medium binding, and to-day received three copies of part 1st. It indeed is a treat to read this work. Though open to some criticism, it is a great step in the right direction. J. E. SEYSTER.

—Those who are inclined to complain of the price of a first-class church paper would do well to meditate for a few moments upon the following from the Standard, Chicago:

It is admitted than there are readers whose interest is not wide enough to take in so large a field. But surely, a hungry man should be glad to sit down to a table d'hote dinner, even though he cannot possibly consume everything on the bill of fare. He gets all that he wants, and sometimes more than he pays for. If he feels that he is offered too much for his appetite, he is at liberty to dine a la carte—and run up a larger bill. Let somebody try the experiment of supplying from other sources all those features of the Standard that he does not find use for; let him subscribe to several state papers and a dozen local church papers, and three or four city dailies, and two or three religious periodicals; then let him supply the deficiencies by corresponding with his friends in various parts of the country, who can inform him how the world is going with them; and if the cost of all this, including postage and time wasted in hunting for what he wants does not equal ten years' subscription to the Standard, we will agree to send him the paper free for that period.

PERSONAL MENTION.

The editor of this paper spent Tuesday of this week in Chicago.

S. S. Jones, of Danville, Ill., asks for the address of P. J. Martin.

H. A. Northcutt will continue his meeting at Beulah Church, this city, another week.

B. W. Hand, of Plainfield, N. J., will attend the conference of Disciples of Christ to be held at Philadelphia, May 9-11.

F. R. Stutzman has been recalled to his old field at Brookfield, Mo. This is a fine comment on his former work there.

John J. Higgs, formerly of Bloomfield, Neb., has accepted the call to Corunna, Ind., and is already in the field.

C. F. Morgan's address is Ashland, Ill., instead of Douglas. The church at Ashland is reported as growing in all good works.

Evangelist A. B. Moore spent last Sunday in this city and attended the preachers' meeting on Monday.

F. G. Tyrrell has announced his intention of accepting the call to the pulpit of the First Christian Church, Chicago, Ill.

B. B. Burlott, pastor First Christian Church, San Jose, Cal., addressed the Knights Templar, who attended in a body Easter morning.

J. E. Denton, who has been located temporarily at Clarion, Iowa, since his return from Sacramento, Cal., could be secured for a permanent neld.

John D. Miller, who recentiy spent a Sunday with Dr. Collins, of Palmyra, Ill., speaks well of the church, its pastor, its surroundings and the outlook, in the Shelby Daily News.

The church at Whshington Court House, Ohio has recalled A. A. Honeywell to its pulpit. He was their pastor four years ago. Not every church that lets a good man go can thus get him back again.

M. L. Anthony, assistant evangelist in the state of Illinois, preached at the Fourth Christian Church, this city, on last Sunday and was present at the preachers' meeting in this office on Monday.

Geo. Fowler, ex-pastor of the Elizabeth Street Christian Church, London, Canada, has accepted a call to the pulpit of the First Christian Church, Lisbon, O., and will enter upon his work there about May 1.

Alfred Brunk, Newman's, Va., seems to be in frequent demand for lectures, popular addresses, etc. He recently delivered an address at a W. C. T. U. convention on the "Life and Work of Frances E. Willard," and has other engagements.

W. E. M. Hackleman, of Indianapolis, will conduct the music for the Congress of Disciples, to be held in this city April 25-27. He will use his latest song book, "Silver and Gold," of which over 40,000 copies have been sold in the last ten months.

The State Board of Charities of Kansas has appointed Bro. W. S. Priest, of Atchison, chaplain of the State Orphans' Home, which is located at Atchison. The appointment is for two years and there is a comfortable salary attached to the position.

S. A. Strawn has closed his work at Lowell, Ind. He preached at Rochester, Ind., April 9, and lectured on the Monday following. A large number of friends unexpectedly appeared at his home in Lowell on the occasion of their seventh marriage anniversary

Samuel Gregg, pastor of the Christian Church at Ashland, Neb., and his wife was recently tendered a very delightful reception. The occasion was a most auspicious opening of his pastorate at Ashland. Bro. Gregg has recently closed a successful meeting at Waco, Neb.

J. V. Combs' meeting at Kokomo, Ind., with 83 additions, and his meeting at Flora, Ill., with 71 additions in one week, are meetings of unusual interest. It seems that an era of evangelism is opening up in the United States which promises great strength to the churches.

Claris Yeuell, who has been engaged in Home Mission work in the Southern Mountains since '95 is anxious to return North. In '97 he supplied in Geo. F. Hall's place in Decatur, Ill., for three months, and can be had for similar work this summer or for regular work. Address him at Chavies, Ala.

J. L. McDonald, Hiram, O., for the year ending April 1, 1899, among other things reports 114 baptisms; otherwise added, 54. Short meetings were held with the churches at Martin's Ferry, O., Mansfield, O., Mentua, O., Marion, O., and Greenfield, O. During the last week in Mansfield J. H. Parr, of Buffalo, N. Y., assisted.

Joel Brown, field agent for the Orphan's Home, called at this office on last Thursday. He is on program to address the district convention at Bondurant, Iowa, April 17-20, and at Keosauqua, Iowa, May 1-4, in the interest of the Home. Bro. Brown's interest in the work increases with his experience, his knowledge of the field, and especially with his increased acquaintance with orphan children and their lot in this partly Christianized world.

J. J. Morgan, pastor of the church in Warrensburg, Mo., will go to his new field in Woodland, Cal., early in May. His resignation, presented sometime ago, was formally accepted by the church April 9, and is to take effect May 1. Bro. Morgan's pastorate at Warrensburg began in September, 1896, and he is held in high esteem by the church for his work's sake. The church at Warrensburg and the state of Missouri loses an able man in Bro. Morgan's removal to California.

Z. T. Sweeney preached at Maryville, Mo., last Sunday, and called at this office on his way back to Columbus, Ind. Next week he is to assist his brother, John S., in a protracted meeting at Paris, Ky. This will be the fifth protracted meeting held for his brother at Paris. Since Bro. Z. T. Sweeney closed his work at Richmond, Va., he has had several unanimous calls to locate as a pastor, but he has refused them all. He prefers the general field for general work, and will not locate with another church for awhile at least.

Geo. C. Christian was elected mayor of Eureka Springs, Ark., "as exclusively foreshadowed in these columns," a short time since, and has entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office.

S. W. Crutcher, of Pine Bluff, Ark., writes us that his wife is not able to stand the climate in Arkansas, and on this account he would like to find a field of work in another state. His own health is good and he could remain another year, but if so his wife would have to remain out of the state at least until late in the fall. Bro. Crutcher's present engagement with the church at Pine Bluff expires in July. Any church in Missouri or other state in need of a pastor would do well to write to Bro. Crutcher at Pine Bluff.

CHANGES.

Geo. B. Mathews, Dresden to Goodland, Kan.
W. H. Hook, Kirksville to Bethany, Mo.
J. G. Encell, Des Moines to Marion, Ia.
F. R. Stutzman, Palmyra to Brookfield, Mo.
S. S. McGill, Smithville, Mo., to Kingman, Kan.
F. A. Mayhare, Canton to Vandalia, Mo.
J. A. Seaton, Rock Rapids to Spencer, Ia.
J. C. Irvin, Eskridge to Cay Center, Kan.
H. G. Waggoner, Fulton to Thompson, Ill.
A. Martin, Muncie, Ind., to Ashland, O.
F. W. Hancock, McCune, Kan., to Blackburn, Mo.

In Old Age when the natural strength begins to fail a mild invigorating remedy becomes an actual necessity. Read what the Rev. J. M. Winkler says about it: Pattonville, Mo. Dear Dr. Fahrney, Chicago, Ill. May God's richest blessing attend you and you business. I had intended to write to you long ago, but I will do so now. About a year ago I sent for a box of your Blood Vitalizer. I have used it with very gratifying results. When one gets out in years, the inner organs seem to refuse to work. The body becomes defective like an old house. That was my experience. The house must be repaired, that it may be able to do good service a while longer.

I have fortunately completed the repairs on my bodily house, by the aid of your valuable medicine. I cannot begin to specify the various ailments with which I was afflicted, but will mention a few, such as general weakness, heartburn, palpitation of the heart, constipation and lack of appetite. After I had taken about three bottles of the Blood Vitalizer, I said, "Thank God, I am nearing recovery."

Although I am now 70 years old, I feel about twenty-five years younger. I am an old and feeble Pastor who has served the church for forty-five years. I firmly believe that if it had not been for Blood Vitalizer, I would not have been able to do any more work. I am anxious to recommend your valuable remedy far and wide, thereby assisting suffering humanity as far as lies within my power.

Very gratefully yours,
REV. J. M. WINKLER.

Three Great Meetings.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

We have just closed one of the largest meetings ever held in the city of Washington. The meeting was conducted in the Ninth Street Christian Church, and began March 5th and ended April 6th. The audiences were good during the entire session, and some evenings many were turned away. The services were conducted by Bros. E. B. Bagby, our able pastor, and C. E. Millard, the noted singing evangelist. The deep, earnest appeals seemed to reach the people, and they came to the Lord gladly. There were 107 confessions, and in all 122; thirteen the most on one evening, and seven the last evening. T. R. P.

DECATUR, ILL.

We have just closed another great meeting at the Tabernacle, with a grand total of 128 accessions, mostly by confession and baptism. The preacher was S. M. Martin, well called "the orator of the Golden Gate," whose successful work on the Pacific Slope the past few years has attracted national attention.

The meetings began Feb. 12 and continued eight solid weeks, seven nights in the week. The Tabernacle congregation now has an enrollment of over 800. We recently purchased the splendid lot on which the big building stands, paying therefor $2,500 cash. We are now very nearly out of debt, and our prospects were never brighter. We have had a struggle here for three years past, but the work now seems thoroughly established. During the five years I have been pastor here we have held seven meetings, aside from almost constant additions at regular services. Altogether about 1,000 have been received, 500 in the old First Church before the division and 500 in the Tabernacle Church since. We hope from this time forward to give more attention to missionary and educational work.

GEO. F. HALL.

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.

Our meeting closed with 245 accessions to the church. Of this number 175 were by confession. The meeting began March 5th and continued thirty days. The interest from the beginning was intense. There were confessions at almost every service. People came from the gallery and from the side rooms in response to the earnest appeals. Our building was inadequate to accommodate the crowds that came. With a larger audience room the results would undoubtedly have been greater. Charles Reign Scoville did all the preaching, cordially supported in every detail by our pastor, J. E. Lynn. Frank C. Huston had charge of the singing, and Miss Nora McCormick assisted with solos. It was a great meeting and among the best ever held in this church. Some may want to know how this was accomplished. We want our friends scattered abroad to rejoice with us over this victory. B. R. HIERONYMUS.

Correspondence.

New York Letter.

The Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, pastor of the Brick Presbyterian Church, this city, has accepted a call to the new Chair of English Literature in Princeton University, with the understanding that he shall assume the work at Princeton at the time and according to methods of his own choosing. The Sun, of New York, recently published an editorial tirade against ministers of the gospel accepting secular work, and giving up their high and holy work of preaching Christ. Dr. Van Dyke's call to Princeton was the text of the newspaper homily, which pointed out some important truths, but failed to state, as it should, that notwithstanding the fact that English literature as such is not distinctively Christian in tone and temper always, yet it is of value to students to be directed in this study by a discerning and critical Christian man. Those who know Dr. Van Dyke and the subject he will teach are satisfied that he will make the spirit and power of true Christianity supreme over all else—it would be impossible for him to do otherwise. The more strong, genuine Christian men can be put into the secular chairs of our institutions the better it will be for the students of our country.

The question of adequate support for down-town churches, like Banquo's ghost, will not down. The Presbyterians especially have had no end of trouble with it. Now it is prominently before church circles again, in relation to three congregations. The "Old First" Presbyterian Church, occupying a block on Fifth Ave., between 11th and 12th Streets, is rapidly creating an endowment fund to assure its retention of the present site and the perpetuity of its work in Lower New York. More than $75,000 is already in this fund, and another $80,000, it is thought, is in sight. The other two congregations in question are the 13th Street and the Fourth Ave. Presbyterian Churches. The former has just voted to sell its property and unite with the latter, though a strong minority is bitterly fighting the movement. The cause of this amalgamation of forces is a continuously growing financial weakness in both congregations. Many of these down-town churches need to learn how to work on small incomes, ond how to sacrifice for Christ. Many of them pay their sextons as much or more than is paid to many of the up-town pastors. If all should refuse to toil and sacrifice, as many of the down-town churches have done and are doing, many parts of New York would be spiritually destitute.

Dr. Hillis, the new pastor of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, has just begun a series of Sunday evening sermons on "Great Books as Interpreters of the Christian Life, and Great Authors as Prophets of the New Era." His first in the series was George Eliot's yito in "Romola," a study of the peril of tampering with conscience, and the gradual deterioration of character. Other sermons will be Victor Hugo's battle of the angels and demons for man's soul in "Les Miserables;" How Jean Valjian passed from passion and sin unto Christian service and sacrifice; Hawthorne's "The Scarlet Letter," a study of the retributive working of conscience, an outlook upon the nature, necessity and nobility of repentance; Browning's "Saul" and the wrecking of great souls, a study of the tragedy of ten talent men; the seven scars on Dante's forehead, a study of the poet's seven deadly sins; John Ruskin's "seven Lamps of Architecture," as interpreting the seven laws of life and happiness, a study of the principles of character building; the Poet as a Prophet of Christianity; how Tennyson passed from doubt to faith in Jesus Christ, an outlook upon the memoirs of Lord Tennyson; the Biographies of Drummond and Romanes, an outlook upon the new friendship between science and religion; Henry Thoreau's "Walden," and the ministry of the external world.

These all are suggestive themes, but how much richer and truer God's Word treats them all. The Bible should be our rule of faith and life; not George Eliot, or Victor Hugo, or Browning, or Dante, or Hawthorne, or Ruskin, or Tennyson, or Drummond. Lecturing on literature in the pulpit is not preaching the gospel of the Son of God. Let us be loyal to him who sent us to declare the way of salvation.

S. T. WILLIS.

English Topics.

We are looking for some American preacher to come to England and take up the work at Southampton. He will be a very welcome addition to our little band. The American brethren are in great favor amongst our churches, and I allude with pleasure to the fact because somehow the idea seems to have spread in America that our churches were slightly prejudiced against American evangelists. This is an entire mistake, for which it is difficult to account, seeing that it has not the slightest foundation. It may have happened that a particular church might be reluctant to pledge itself to accept a stranger from America or Australia before, at least, making his acquaintance, but I can assure our American friends everywhere that American preachers are received with joy and delight, for it is felt that while we Englishmen have had to learn the truth as you know it, your preachers have for the most part been enjoying a lifelong training in the principles of our great plea. Southampton is one of our most promising churches, and whoever takes it will have a delightful field. H. L. Gow, who is leaving the ministry at Southampton, is about to devote his energies, which are excellent, to business. He formerly proved himself to be a splendid business man. I feel confident that his manly voice will often be heard in our churches. He will be faithful to us, though not in the stated pastorate. This brother leaves things at Southampton in good order as I can testify from a visit recently paid to our faithful church there. Bro. Romig is still doing a splendid evangelistic work among our churches in the northern section. He is with Bro. Brearley, one of our most go-ahead preachers, at Birkenhead, after a fine campaign with Bro. Bickell and the Liverpool church. This followed the work done by Romig and Hanna at Chester and Saltney, where Bro. Collins is so successfully laboring as successor to M. D. Todd, whose preaching at West London Tabernacle is producing abundent results. Thus we have, or shall have, when the new American arrives, a contingent of four American pastors, together with the two evangelists at present amongst us, who are expected in a few days to begin a campaign here in London. It seems probable that the material increase in conversions reported last year will be equaled this year, although it is too early yet to form a definite idea. The spiritual condition of all the English churches appears to be excellent. Those indefatigable missionaries home from China on furlough, Mr. and Mrs. Remfrey Hunt, spent last Sunday with us at Hornsey Tabernacle, where they powerfully moved the souls of the people. Bro. Hunt is having a missionary's holiday of the usual kind. He told me that he had during these few months represented the Foreign Mission work at sixty meetings! I have often noticed before what is the sort of rest a holiday-making missionary is indulged with. I suppose Sister Hunt is like all our wives, a "weaker vessel," but she does not seem, like many others of our much better halves, at all conscious of it, for she goes nearly everywhere with her husband and speaks and sings delightfully, always making audiences covet and clamor for more.

A wreck at sea is not the only place where a life line is of importance.

There is a life line for the sick, as well as for the drowning man. It is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is not a cure-all, but it is a scientific medicine that goes to the fountain head of a number of serious and fatal diseases. When a man gets seriously sick, he can generally be cured by the right course of treatment. The treatment that cures many obstinate chronic diseases consists of pure air, good food, rational exercise, and the use of a remedy that will strengthen the weak stomach, correct the impaired digestion, invigorate the liver and promote the assimilation of the live-giving elements of the food. The "Golden Medical Discovery" accomplishes all these things.

"A young man lay pale and motionless upon (what neighbors called) his dying bed. Disease of the lungs, liver complaint, kidney trouble, and pleurisy were fast hastening him to the grave. The doctors had given him up to die. The neighbors said, 'he cannot live.' 'Oh, I would not care to die,' he said, 'were it not for leaving my dear wife and little child, but I know that I must die.' A brother had presented him with three bottles of medicine, but he had no faith in 'patent medicines'; but, after the doctors had given him up to die and he had banished every hope of recovery, he said to his wife, 'dear wife, I am going to die, there can be no harm now in taking that medicine. I will begin its use at once.' He did begin to use it and at first he grew worse, but soon there came a change. Slowly but surely he got better. To-day that man is strong and healthy and he owes his life to that medicine. What was the medicine? It was Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and I, Luther Martin, am the cured man. Dr. Pierce, I thank you from the very depth of my heart, for rescuing me from the grave." The foregoing is from Luther Martin, Esq., a prominent citizen of Lubec, Wood Co., W. Va.

Hot Springs, Ark.

Our own people who come here during the year need the assistance and influence of the church while in the city. If we were unable to sustain a church here many no doubt would backslide while here. We must sustain this work to assist our own people in sickness and trouble. Heretofore the church has been unable to do much in this line of work for want of means. The importance of this field cannot be overdrawn when we consider the number of visitors who come here, and the 16,000 home population. With this population we have no Y. M. C. A., no reading rooms; there is no place in the city where a young man can go to "read a paper" but the offices of the hotels and the saloons. A few brethren of means could spend a little missionary money here to great advantage. There is no place in the South to compare with Hot Springs for church work, not only for our people, but the other churches of the city.

To meet the demands upon this field we only have a little congregation of some sixty members, limited in means, but rich in faith. It has been decided that we must "expand" this, our Jubilee Year, and we have engaged Bro. H. A. Northcutt to hold us a meeting. We ask our friends to help us overcome our only hindrance, "lack of means." This little church cannot bear the expense of such a meeting, and we solicit aid from friends and lovers of "Home Missions" to our "evangelistic fund."

Texas Letter.

Texas does many things on a large scale, and the people do not complain since she is so immense herself. Some years ago she wanted a new capitol building and the legislature set apart a vast tract of land for that purpose. ex-Senator John B. Farwell and his brother accepted the offer and erected one of the finest structures in the United States, for which they became possessors of this land which is now know as the X. I. T. Ranch, the largest in the world, containing almost 5,000 square miles. It is larger than the whole state of Connecticut, and both Rhode Island and Delaware could be swallowed up by it, with a nice margin to spare. It is 25 miles wide from east to west and 200 miles long. It is located in the Panhandle region in the extreme northwestern part of the state. It has a healthy, dry climate, is 4,000 feet above the sea, with a fertile soil which produces the native grasses in abundance, which cure on the ground and thus furnish pasture for both winter and summer. It has 1,500 miles of barbed wire fence, 300 wells, with an average depth of 125 feet, with windmills attached, and many damns across the gulches to hold the rain water. It has neither telegraph nor telephone, and communications in the main are transferred through the mails, with an occasional rush message by horseback. The Ft. Worth and Denver road passes through one corner. It has only two towns, Channing and Texline, with local headquarters at the former and general headquarters in Chicago. It has seven division headquarters with houses and barnes, also many line camps with small buildings. It has now on it 120,000 cattle and 1,500 horses. (They raise no sheep.) The calf crop in 1897 was more than 31,000. And yet, strange to say, only about 125 men are employed on the ranch. The property is valued at $10,000,000. For a more detailed description of this big ranch, see Ladies' Home Journal for February.

J. B. Boen is like a certain man spoken of in the Bible, who said he would, but he didn't. Boen promised to return from Oklahoma territory and resume work in Texas the first of March; but our last information is that the people will not permit it, and he is now located at Oklahoma City and, as usual, is doing a fine work.

T. F. Weaver, of Illinois, takes up the work at Texarkana. This is a very important place, and it is hoped that great good will come of this new union. Bro. Weaver is a peculiar preacher, not in doctrine, so far as I know, but in the fact that he is able to invest in 1,600 acres of our rich Texas land. He must be a man of good judgment.

Texas is not content to raise cotton, corn, cattle, sheep, hogs, wheat, oats, rye, hay, fruit, melons, etc., but wants to be known as a tobacco country also. An enterprising firm in Kansas City has bought 1,000 acres of land near Oline, for a tobacco farm, which it is thought is peculiarly fitted for producing fine cigar tobacco. Well, if the filthy weed must be had, we wish our new neighbors success.

J. H. Banton, of New York, late of Waco, and one of the most popular and useful men Texas ever had, is to attend the state Endeavor Convention at his old home in June, and take part on the program. No one will be more cordially welcomed than our "Bob."

The Trans-Mississippi Presbyterian has removed from Houston to Dallas and has changed its name to the Presbyterian Record. Our city is rapidly becoming a great newspaper center.

Miss Bessie Oram, in her department of the Courier, keeps things decidedly lively. Here is a specimen of the way she talkes. Speaking of our first parents and describing Adam as taking care of the garden, she says: "Eve, moving around with nothing on earth to do but eat, like a great many of her degenerate daughters who infest boarding houses or do 'light housekeeping,' soon got into mischief, and was obliged to go to work whether she liked it or not."

Philip King, our pastor at Hillsboro, has held a good meeting for his people. Bro. Howard did fine service as his singer. There were nine additions.

Tom Smith has aroused Itasca as it has not been for a long time. The house is crowded every night, and there have been eleven additions.

Dr. William Hale, a good preacher and successful evangelist, has located in Dallas, and is ready for work in the regions round about. Such a man should be kept busy. D. H. Fallen has also located in our beautiful suburb, Oak Cliff, and the churches near by should use him.

AUSTIN DEDICATION.

The dedication of the new church at Austin, the capital of Texas, on April 9, was an event of much importance to the cause of Christ. A better day could not have been desired. It was bright and bracing, neither too hot nor too cold, but just right. An audience of fine-looking people, numbering 1,000, with many turned away for want of room, greeted us. The decorations were beautiful, and the music was good. Judge Brown presided at the Supper, after which I preached on "Our Plea," with Josh. 4:6 for a text: "What mean ye by these stones?" At the close of the sermon came the "tug of war." The house had cost $12,000, and we needed $6,000 more to pay the bill. Pledges at first came distressingly slow and for a while things looked gloomy. But we held on and appeared cheerful and a change soon came, so that at the close we had more than $4,500.

At 3:30 there was a pleasant congratulatory service, in which the pastors of the city took part.

At night another fine audience was on hand and I preached again. Another appeal resulted in swelling the total amount to just $5,000. We had not got all we asked for, but more than we expected. Then came a brief and simple dedicatory exercise, followed by the doxology and benediction, and a hard day's work was done, and a happy people went to their homes rejoicing.

The building is one of the most beautiful I ever saw. It is of light-gray granite, almost as white as marble. In style it is sixteenth century Gothic, with parapet walls and battlement effect. The roof is Bangor slate, in geometric design. The extreme dimensions are 111x46 feet. The gables are 43 feet high, and the two towers are respectively 40 and 56 feet high. The main entrance through the main tower is 12 feet square. And there are two side entrances, one in the rear of the auditorium and one to the Sunday-schools room.

The auditorium is 43x65 feet, with inclined floor, and ceiling 28 feet high. The Sunday-school in the rear is 28x43 feet. Above this are the parlors, dining room and kitchen. These parlors and Sunday-school room can be connected with the auditorium, making a seating capacity of 1,000. The pulpit, baptistery and choir occupy an elliptical area of 16x23 feet at the center of the south front. The windows, containing 1,600 square feet of Florentine cathedral glass, are Gothic, and add much to the architectural effect. The vaulted ceiling is of steel in panels and painted a neutral gray. The walls are finished in white plaster, and the wood finish is native pine in hard oil. It is lighted by electricity. The architect, W. G. Eyres, who designed and superintended the construction of the building, is a member of the congregation, and our people ought to keep him busy in this work.

After examining the church I asked J. W. Lowber, the pastor, how much stealing had been done, for it seemed impossible to erect such a structure for $12,000; but he vowed that not a single cent had been stolen. I then asked him how he had induced a small congregation of 300 members, and not a rich one either, to do such a work as this. He said it was a question of life and death with them. The old house was out of harmony with the spirit of the age, and it did not meet the demands of the capital of this great state, hence they had either to have a new one, or give up the fight. And he launched them into the fight and led them to victory. His example in giving inspired liberality in others, and his hopeful spirit made despondency an impossibility. On one occasion he heard a little croaking, when he promptly announced from the pulpit that the officers had been instructed to pitch every grumbler out through the window. There was no more grumbling. But in all this heavy work he has had some noble lieutenants, chief of whom is the faithful pastor-ess, Mrs. Maggie Lowber.

Dr. J. W. Lowber is a man of remarkable scholarship. He has studied seventeen different languages, and five universities have conferred on him postgraduate degrees. Since his graduation he has given twelve hours a week to postgraduate work. His titles, not one of which is honorary, but all the result of hard work, are A. B., A. M., Ph. D., LL. D. He is a member of "The Royal Geographical Society of London," "The Philosopnical Society of Great Britain," "The Educational Institute of Scotland," and a "Fellow of the Society of Science, Letters and Art." His books are as follows: "Struggles and Triumphs of the Truth," "The Devil in Modern Society," "The Who and What of the Disciples of Christ," "The Bible vs. Adventism" and "Cultura." And he believes his best books are yet to come. Strange to say, in spite of all this, he is not "bookish," but one of the best pastors in the church.

Austin is splendid city of 30,000 people. Like Zion of old, it is beautiful for situation. Not flat and monotonous like most Texas towns, but rugged and romantic. The hills, ravines, walls of rock, the river and the mountains near by, give to it a picturesque grandeur. A million dollar damn of granite across the Colorado River furnishes the city with the best water and power for lighting the city and vast manufacturing interests. The lake above the damn is 20 miles long and has two large boats to accommodate the people who throng there for rest and pleasure.

The capitol building cost $6,000,000, and excepting New York, it is the finest in any of the states. The State University, located here, is rapidly becoming one of the leading schools of the land. An additional wing just completed makes it one of the largest single school buildings in our country. It has 800 students. Our people are prominent in its work. Lowber delivers one lecture a month in its interest and two series of chapel talks during the year. W. T. Moore is to deliver the baccalaureate sermon in June.

The asylums for the deaf and dumb, the blind and insane, all large and full, are here also. Such a city needs just such a church as ours, with a strong and cultured preacher. The outlook was never so bright there as now.

Milwaukee Letter.

In my last I showed the dark side of Milwaukee life. I would not have your readers believe that it is all thus. We have a beautiful city. Its wide avenues, boulevards and many parks make it a charming place to visit, especially in the summer. I am told that a large per cent. of the people here own their own homes. Real estate is very firm, and it is the first place I ever lived where it is hard to persuade people to sell. I have had some experience during the last week looking for a suitable place to build our new church.

A stranger is impressed at once, in every part of our city, with the magnificent school buildings, nearly all built of cream brick. Indeed, this is called "the cream city," not because of its dairy products, but because our brick buildings are nearly all of cream color. Churches are many and elegant. We have some churches that are rivals to many in the Old World. One that has cost already over a million dollars and is not yet completed. Another that is being constructed at a cost of nearly one million dollars. Two delightful features of Milwaukee life are our magnificent public library and our educational advantages. Our public library building, just completed at a cost of several hundred thousand dollars, would be a credit to any city. One unique feature about it is the children's department where the children are put on their honor and allowed to go in and select their own books. I am told that it works well. I spoke of one class of women in my last. I am happy to turn to a very different class. I know of no city where the women are making more heroic efforts in behalf of their city than a great host of noble women here.

One thing especially noticeable about almost everything they touch is its practical turn. They are succeeding in combining pleasure, instruction and general usefulness in a way that is most delightful and profitable. That comparatively new institution, "the Women's Club," is very popular here. And it is certainly an improvement over the majority of "Men's Clubs." Instead of having a place to spend time away from home, where they smoke, drink and game, these women come together with some practical object in view and transact business for the betterment of their city. Among many other practical things that have engaged their attention during the past winter the following clipping from one of our dailies will tell of their latest:

The Woman's Club of Wisconsin has voted $500 from its treasury and received $500 by individual contributions toward establishing and conducting a vacation school in Milwaukee for six weeks this summer. Vacation schools for poor children have been most successfully carried on in the East and the experiment in Milwaukee will be warmly supported. The object of the schools is not to teach common school branches, no text-books being used; but nature study, manual training and special work to interest children is carried on. The plan is not so much to teach facts as to influence character. The age at which children will be received will be 14 years and under. The movement is one of the strongest and most superior undertaken by any woman's club in the state.

We have another club of women known as "the Milwaukee College Endowment Association," which has about six hundred members. Its members are from among the very brightest and best ladies of the city. In addition to furnishing the city with a continued intellectual feast from the first of January to the first of April of each year, they are laboring to endow a chair in the "Milwaukee Downer College"—a Milwaukee institution which some of them hope to make a rival to Vassar. Their courses of instruction during the past term have included classes and lectures in "Parliamentary Practice," "American Literature," "Musical Literature," "Economics," "Current Topics" and "Biblical Literature."

Among their instructors they have had, this year, Miss Shrieves, Mrs. Sheldon, of Madison; Mrs. Ellen Crosby and Professors Zeublin, Sparks and Shaler Mathews, of Chicago University. They had our Prof. Willett last year, and I have heard that they will try to get him again next year. Through the kindness of Sister George I. Lindsay, who is one of their most active members, I was furnished a ticket admitting me to all of the classes and lectures. It is a treat to be able to turn away from one's desk and run up to the Atheneum and sit for an hour under the instruction of these specialists.

These women are making an impresssion for good on the whole city, and I believe that such earnestness of purpose, connected with such systematic efforts, will yet do much to change the social conditions mentioned in my last letter.

Our church is on the upward grade. We have had an increase of about 33 per cent. in our Sunday-school during the last quarter.

We held our quarterly Sunday-school sociable last Tuesday evening at the church, at which time badges of honor were given to all who had been present every Sunday during the quarter. It was encouraging to see the large number who were entitled to badges. After a short program the children and their friends were invited to the basement where they were served with apples, popcorn and icewater. About 100 children and their friends were present, and they all went away enthusiastic over their Sunday-school. Mrs. E. W. Tucker is our efficient superintendent, and as the negroes down South would say, "She do sho love her Sunday-school." At a joint meeting of the church and the "committee of 15," on last Wednesday evening, it was decided unanimously to proceed to build a new church. This positive decision was largely the result of the enthusiasm generated by a letter from Dr. Sherman, a prominent physician of this city, who is not a member with us, pledging one thousand dollars toward our house. He had before this given us all of his interest in our present property, which will be appreciated by those familiar with the situation. Dr. Sherman's father was one of the founders of our work in this city, and through his generosity we have the present property. He has two daughters who are at present in the State Normal at Madison, who are very active members with us when at home. While the Doctor is not a member with us, yet he loves to thus honor the memory of his father by helping the cause that his father loved.

We have one member with us, whose name will appear before we are through, who makes our enterprise a possibility. He has kindly and generously offered to give one dollar for every two we can raise from any other source. Such devotion as this is what has held this work here during these years against so many odds. Special committees are appointed and our work will soon begin in severe earnest.

The church has extended to me a unanimous call to remain here indefinitely. I have accepted and have begun to unpack my bandboxes and bird cages.

Our state evangelist, Bro. G. C. MacNeil, is playing the role of an Ezekiel, and is stirring up the dry bones in different parts of the state. He is working hard to make a showing at our next convention of the best year's work ever done in Wisconsin. "So mote it be."

California.

The churches in California have had their share of the burdens resulting from the hard times. The preachers have stood nobly by the work, many of them sacrificing even to the limit. But there is a better day dawning, both for the churches and preachers. The most of our pulpits are filled. Some of our churches are without pastors, but they are mostly those that suffered from the drouth the past year. But with the flattering prospects for the future it is likely that all of our churches will have regular preaching in the near future. The collection for Foreign Missions was taken in most of our churches the first Sunday in March, and we are now getting ready for the offering for Home Missions the first Lord's day in May. If the work in foreign lands is to be maintained on a basis commensurate with our grand plea, then we must look well to our home work. California is the ripest mission field on the American field to-day. This is a great state. One forms no correct conception of the size of this state by reading the statement that it is seven hundred miles in length and two hundred in breadth. But if the readers of this article will turn to the map of the United States and to the state of Kansas and imagine a state as wide as Kansas and extending clear across Kansas, Colorado and one-third of the distance across Utah, they can then form some conception of the immense area covered by this state. Now, I believe there are two churches in all this great state that are receiving assistance from our Home Board. Is it possible that our brethren east of the Rockies don't consider this great state worth evangelizing? There is no field in America that will yield larger returns than California. We have all heard pitiful stories about the poor heathen who have never had an opportunity of hearing the gospel. Our hearts have been touched by such appeals. But it may be that "distance lends enchantment to the view." At least it does not seem to impress us so very much to be told that there are those in our own land who have never heard the gospel. I have myself baptized people in this state who had never heard a sermon nor attended a Sunday-school until they were grown. They had no opportunity to hear the gospel nor to attend a Sunday-school. But this does not impress us very forcibly. It is too near home.

Let us be careful lest we get our mission ship top-heavy. A ship that goes to sea with light material in the bottom and heavy material, such as iron and steel, on top will be unsafe. The iron and steel must be in the bottom to serve as ballast. Then it will ride all right. Home Missions must serve as the ballast to our ship. We ought to give five times as much to Home Missions as to Foreign Missions. We don't give a tithe of what we should give to Foreign Missions, but for every dollar given to Foreign Missions we ought to give five for Home Missions. J. A. BROWN, State Evangelist.

Some Things in the Reading Courses.

It is not the purpose of this paper to oppose the Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Courses. Admirable little books have been written under the management, and much useful knowledge has been disseminated among the young people in the Churches of Christ. It affords the present writer pleasure to recognize very much that is good in the Christian Endeavor Reading Courses. He is in full accord with the projectors of the Reading Courses with respect to the importance of training young disciples in Bible knowledge and in church history. The future, yea, the present welfare of the church is wrapped up in the spiritual education of its young people who, being disciples in name, should also be disciples in fact.

But the very magnitude of the interests involved, the training of the church in the knowledge of God's Word and of its own history, calls for the utmost carefulness as to what is put forth under the approval of a reading circle committee. Woe be to him who places a stumblingblock of doubt in the way of the younger brethren, or instills in their minds lack of reverence for the integrity of God's Word. Any book put into the hands of the young people by their elders in the churches should be true and timely. The first condition goes without saying; the second is hardly less weighty. Truth, not speculation; fact, not philosophy, should constitute the bill of fare for a young people's reading course. Even if granted that the scholastic questions of critics are the strong meat of religious teaching, they should not be offered to these spiritual babes.

Measured by the foregoing considerations one of the publications of the Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Courses entitled "A Guide to Bible Study" is objectionable. It teaches for fact what, at the best, is a matter of discussion among scholars. The publicity given this volume by the managers of the Reading Courses, and the harm its general acceptance by the young will certainly work makes no apology necessary for this criticism. The distinguished character of the reverened author of "A Guide to Bible Study" makes the book doubly dangerous. A characteristic and misleading quality of the book appears in the following paragraph:

"The Song of Songs. The title which this short poem assigns itself is, 'The Song of Songs,' which is Solomon's (1:1). If there is any book in the Bible which found a place in it by a mistake or a misjudgment of those who put the inspired book together, it must be this; for it is so totally unlike all the rest that it is difficult to see what connection it can have with the general design of the whole. Many interpreters have affected to find in it a parabolic meaning, and even a foreshadowing of the love of the church for Christ; while others have regarded it as nothing more than a love song with a very obscure connection of thought. According to either view it has offered little edification to the great majority of Bible readers; and unless some significance can be found in it hereafter which has not been pointed out, it will continue to be but little read, and of but little practical value."

Is this profitable reading to place in the hands of our young people? The mildest remark that can be made concerning the teaching of the above quotation from "A Guide to Bible Study" is that it is calculated to unsettle the faith of those who follow the Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Courses in the books of the Bible as supernatural in their origin and character. The implication is clear that "those who put the inspired book together" may have been guilty of "a mistake or misjudgment" in placing "The Song of Songs, which is Solomon's," in their collection. If mistaken in this case why not also in the selection of other books in the Bible? It is nothing short of cruelty to disturb the serene and beautiful faith of our young people in this manner. The influence of the foregoing paragraph must be deleterious on the minds and hearts of our Christian Endeavor young people. It behooves us to guard diligently against this character of teaching. Its outcome must be at least a disturbance of faith in the Bible as an inspired book.

A footnote from the pen of Prof H. S. Willett furnishes an antidote. It is as follows:

"It is a dramatic poem. The earlier interpretation made it an epithalamium, or marriage song, recording the love and marriage of Solomon and his queen. The latter and now generally accepted interpretation makes the heroine a maiden of Shulem or Shunem, whom King Solomon takes into his court and attempts by flattery and magnificent promises to separate from her lover, to whom, however, she remains faithful and is at last restored. The book is a beautiful tribute to true and constant love, which no wealth can dazzle and no power can overcome. It is also a refreshing picture of the virtues to be found among the common people in an age of the greatest splendor and of growing corruption in the court of Solomon. The spiritual lessons of the book are not to be found in the mystical allusions to Christ and the church, but in the purity and constancy of love, lessons needed in no age more than our own."

Thanks to Prof. Willett for these words, but how many will read and be affected by the infidelity of the teaching contained in the text and fail to see the footnote printed in comparatively obscure type. "A Guide to Bible Study" is a dangerous book to put into the hands of our young people.

In this same book the author says: "We have now given a brief introduction to every one of the thirty-nine books of the Old Testament."

It will puzzle the young Bible student to find even the names of some prominent books in the Old Testament. Some important books are barely mentioned. To a number there is not even "a brief introduction." The statement of the author of "A Guide to Bible Study" that "we have now given a brief introduction to every one of the thirty-nine books of the Old Testament" is misleading.

Other objectionable features of this dangerous book may be presented hereafter. Let us beware of the poison that may enter the minds of our confiding young people when we place in their hand with an apparent endorsement this treacherous "Guide to Bible Study."

The Reading Course Committee will probably be more cautious in the future in the selection of writers and in the examination and acceptance of their work. A CRITIC.

Grateful Recognition.

If our complainings against the dealings of God with us, and our daily expressions of gratitude for his countless blessings, are to determine the extent and character of our faith in Christ, and if by numerical computation our merits are to be recognized and our fitness for heaven is to be decided, it would, I think, be an easy matter for us to decide how the account would stand before God. I have tried for one day to number my complainings and the times I had thanked God gratefully for his tenderness to me and mine, and I was so impressed and ashamed and saddened at heart that I felt unworthy to be called a child of the kingdom. If a child should complain against an earthly parent as we so often do against our Father in heaven, it would be esteemed by us as ungrateful and unworthy a parent's love and protection. If we are right in our judgment with respect to temporal or human relations, of how much greater importance is it that we gratefully recognize our relation to our spiritual Father. I feel an inexpressable gratitude to God for the rain that is now falling upon California. It has changed many gloomy faces and sad hearts into joy and gladness, but do we really appreciate such needed blessings? If our Eastern preachers knew how small are nearly all our salaries and how deep are our anxieties and struggles, they would appreciate more deeply the blessings and privileges that are theirs to enjoy. Every dollar sent out of the churches in California to our great missionary work should be counted as five in comparison with our Eastern churches. There are a very few churches on the coast to whom this would not apply. Among the many blessings for which I feel deeply grateful is the Christian faith that has characterized the church for which I am laboring during the dark year just closing. Truer hearts never bowed before the altar of God, either in prosperity or adversity. My pen would not rest easy after being laid aside, nor would I be true to the most sincere convictions of my heart and conscience, did I not most gratefully acknowledge my gratitude to God for the existence of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and for the world-wide influence it is exerting in the creation and support of that spiritual influence so imperatively demanded at the present period in our history as a people. No reformation can long live and grow upon past achievements or that progress which must be commensurate with its original claims for its existence. It is characteristic, I believe, with all reforms, that success begets very often very strong inclinations to personal honor and temporal possessions. I have been a reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during all its changes and removals, and I have never been more impressed that its mission is from God than when I finished reading the last issue. The editorials are a true index to the real and spiritual life and tendency of any religious paper. Contributed articles may or may not reflect the convictions and heart-teaching and feeling of the editor, but we know full well how he feels and what are his real convictions through his editorials. They become the mirror through which the public read the life and aims of the editor and the real object for which the paper is published. Accepting this standard of measurement, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and its ablo editor need wear no veils, but can stand in full view of the most searching light of truth without fear or trembling, and a greater compliment than this no editor or paper is capable of receiving. I wish before closing to say that the editorial in the last issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, entitled "Oscillations in Religious Reform," is most able and timely, and bears the characteristics, of not only intellectual conception, historic knowledge, but consecrated devotion to the great aims and purposes for which the Current Reformation was inaugurated. The editorial entitled "Dogmatic Preaching" is a most happy and appropriate companion for the one named. And not less important is the reply to the artice, "The Personality of the Holy Spirit." Our Pacific Christian is fast taking rank among our best papers. Two more able and devoted men cannot be found than our faithful brethren, Kirkham and Berry. You cannot realize the value of your work respecting Christian Endeavor, and talented, devoted and beloved Bro. Tyler.

JOSEPH LOWE.

Hiram College Jubilee Endowment Movement.

MISSIONARY CATECHISM.

1st Ques. What is the fundamental missionary work?

Ans. The endowment of our colleges.

2nd Ques. Why is this so?

Ans. Because the most important matter is the question of men. Well-prepared men are the first essential, and the college is the only agency we have upon which we can rely for regular, adequate supply. The prepared men always find ways of accomplishing the desired results.

3rd Ques. Does not the commission of Jesus make the sending of men the first thing?

Ans. Yes; but before Jesus gave the commission he prepared his men. With Jesus the first work was educational work. He spent three years in training men before he said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

4th Ques. Have not the Disciples an adequate supply of colleges?

Ans. In number, yes; but there is not a college among the Disciples that is adequately endowed. In fact, all the endowments put together would only be sufficient for one or two institutions.

5th Ques. Why cannot colleges run without endowment?

Ans. Because tuition would be so high that only the sons and daughters of wealthy people could have the advantage of a college training. It has been shown by one of the leading college presidents of the country that the average cost of college education, exclusive of the interest on college plants, is five times the amount received from tuition. No college that is up to the standard of the day can run without endowment.

6th Ques. Do you consider our colleges in jeopardy?

Ans. I do. We have already lost several, and unless there is a great awakening among the brotherhood on this subject we will lose more. Not a single college among us can run ten years on the basis of the first-class institutions of the country without going into bankruptcy. The only way to avoid disaster is to cut down salaries, cut down teaching force and thus impair the breadth and strength of our college courses, and after all has been done that is possible in this direction, appeal to churches and individuals for special contributions for current expenses.

7th Ques. Why have not the Disciples paid more attention to their colleges?

Ans. Because the college question has been crowded out of view. We have talked about everything else but education. It should be the first question in our papers, a great question in our missionary conventions—foreign, district and state—and it should be a theme in every pulpit, and until this is the case our colleges will suffer.

8th Ques. Do you consider money put into colleges as well invested from a benevolent standpoint as if put into missionary or other evangelistic work directly?

Ans. Owing to the existing condition of the colleges among the Disciples, money put into colleges now will yield ten times as much in good done as if put into any other channel of benevolent work.

9th Ques. What do you consider the most important question before the Disciples at the present time?

Ans. By all means the endowment of their colleges. Within the next ten years the Disciples ought to put from five to ten million dollars into college endowment. This would mean more for our missions—home and foreign—for our churches, for the work of God, than anything we can possibly do.

10th Ques. How many Disciples have we, and how much have they done for colleges?

Ans. We have about a million Disciples. It is safe to say that half a million Disciples have died since the beginning of our movement. We have had, all told, a million and half Disciples. We have put, in round numbers, about a million dollars into college endowment in seventy-five years. This amounts to about three-fourths of a cent for each Disciple per year. If we include the money invested in plants we may perhaps nearly double this amount and say that the Disciples have been giving about a cent and a half per year for education, which our Savior made the fundamental thing.

DEAR BROTHER:—Read the above questions and answers, and ponder them carefully; then will you not sit down at once and send us your name as one of the army on whom we may rely in our effort to endow Hiram College? Surely, no Disciple can withhold his help in this great emergency. Ask your brethren to join with you. Will not every brother and sister who is deeply interested in this great movement strive to send us a list of five names at least?

We again print our form of enlistment card:

HIRAM COLLEGE ENLISTMENT CARD.

Whereas, the friends of Hiram College are uniting in a movement to add $250,000 to the endowment of the institution on the occasion of its fiftieth anniversary in June of the year 1900, and whereas, an effort is now being made to secure the names of 60,000 persons, more or less, who will make a donation of from one dollar to one thousand dollars each for that purpose, I hereby agree to join in this movement by promising to pay one dollar or more and will name the definite amount of my donation and the time of payment when called upon to do so.

Pain Vanquished

No remedy on earth can ever abolish pain as a whole, for pain is the common lot of all living creatures. We can, however, vanquish pain as a tormentor of the individual, either of man or beast, for this has been done triumphantly for many years by

DR. J. H. McLEAN'S VOLCANIC OIL LINIMENT

This is truly a wonderful remedy wherever any pain, inflammation, sore or irritation exists on the body. It is no new experiment or haphazard combination. It has been used for many years and is known as a quick and perfect healer of Cuts, Burns, Blotches, Ulcers, Eruptions and all forms of Skin Trouble, including even Neuralgia, Frost Bite, Chilblains and the like. It is also a sure cure for Lumbago, Rheumatism and and Diseases of the Joints, and will heal the domestic animals as it will the human system. Millions of bottles of this Liniment are sold yearly. All druggists keep it.

25c., 50c. and $1.00 a bottle. Try it.

Apt Quotations.

Proverbs, axioms and wise sayings have been uttered by Confucius and other wise men from time immemorial, but few people realize how many there are of them. C. I. Hood & Co., of Sarsaparilla fame, have over two thousand and they have originated the ingenious plan of serving them up in delectable shape in thousands of newspapers, with each one neatly turning a point as to the merit of their well-known medicine. The extensive use of these proverbs is original and creditable to Hood & Co.

Notes and News.

Denver News.

The work in Denver, Col., is moving along finely. We have five able and faithful pastors, Dr. B. O. Aylesworth, at the Central; Dr. S. B. Moore, at South Broadway; Grant K. Lewis, at Highlands; Bro. Pettis, at Berkley, and Flournoy Payne, at the East Side Church. The harmony which prevails among our churches makes it a great delight to be engaged with them in the general work in the city.

Trustees' Meeting.

The board of trustees of Christian College will meet Tuesday, April 18, at 3 o'clock P. M. in library of college. A proposition will be made at that time of importance to the future of the college, and we will be expected to act at once. A full meeting of the board is earnestly desired. F. D. HUBBELL, Sec.

The St. Louis auxiliaries held their twenty-third quarterly union meeting on the afternoon and evening of March 24th, at Central Church. A splendid program was provided. We were fortunate in having with us our state president, Mrs. Alice Williams, of Cameron, whose splendid address aroused much enthusiasm, and should bear fruit in greater consecration to our loved work. The attendance was large. Over a hundred took supper at the church. MRS. L. G. BANTZ.

Northwest Missouri.

The work at Craig is prospering under the care of H. W. Cries, pastor. The Holt County convention was held at Craig, April 5, 6. The work at Westboro, where Prof. McKinzie preaches one-half time, is prospering. Christian College is diligently pressing forward toward a higher mark and deserves the assistance of the brotherhood. A. R. Hunt, who came to us from the Baptists nine months ago, is preaching acceptably at Tarkio, with 50 additions to the church under his ministry. He is now in a good meeting with 25 additions to date. Several additions at Rockport, recently, and the work progressing.

The Benevolent Association.

While I was in St. Louis in February I attended the board meeting of the Christian Orphans' Home, and was deeply interested in their work. There were some twenty-five women present. All the reports were brought in writing, and I never saw a more business-like meeting conducted by women upon any occasion. I was shown through the Home and found it cared for in the very best way. I learned that last year they sent out, mostly to country homes, eighty-seven children, and that this year the number is likely to reach at least one hundred. They had ninety-five children in the Home at that time, and it would seem that mothers could hardly have cared for them better. Certainly any money sent to this institution will be wisely used.

But I was more deeply interested in what is known as the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, which is also an organization of St. Louis Christian women, and, although it has never been approved by vote of any of our conventions, is certainly becoming a necessity among us and should receive our approval. The Disciples of Christ in the past have done far too little in looking after the widow and the orphan, building of hospitals and the like. Such an Association would interest the brotherhood in building Homes where needed throughout the United States, discuss the wisest plans of work and encourage the practice of pure and undefiled religion among us. I, for one, will vote to help these women. A. M. HARVOUT.

OUR OFFER FULLY EXPLAINED IN CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, MARCH 30TH.

Convention of the Disciples of Christ of the North Atlantic States.

PHILADELPHIA, MAY 9-11, 1899.

The Trunk Line Association covering all the railroads in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland and District of Columbia has granted a rate of two cents per mile on card orders; tickets to be sold and good going May 8 to 11, returning to May 13, inclusive. Application has been made to the railroads in Virginia for like concessions.

Those who wish to avail themselves of this reduced rate will write to the undersigned for as many card orders as they need, and upon the presentation of these the local agent will sell tickets to Philadelphia and return at the two-thirds rate.

The First Church extends a cordial invitation to all members of the Christian Churches in the territory named above to be its guests during the convention. Free entertainment will be provided for all. Address

Oregon Notes.

Portland is the center of one of the best mission fields on the coast. Within a few hours' ride on boat or rail are 120,000 people, and so far fewer than a dozen churches, and some of them with no adequate church buildings. So far this year the state board has made no appropriations for this field, but we are glad to know that soon the General Board will lend assistance to the most important point—the First Church.

I am trying what virtue there is in tracts and booklets and other useful information regarding this union movement and the teaching of Christ and his disciples unhampered by schism and sectism. It is working well—this kind of leaven. I go Thursday to finish up a little of that kind of work where Sabbatarianism has taken hold and denominationalism cannot meet the error.

Scores of people not identified with our work are ready to consider and act upon Christ's prayer, "that they all may be one," did they know more of this movement, what wonderful success is attending the preaching of Christin unity.

If any one has tracts or books suitable for this kind of work, send them and they will be used wisely and helpfully.

For instance, I could use 50 of those little books, "The Disciples of Christ," by B. B. Tyler; several hundred "True Basis of Christian Union," by Errett; "Right Division of the Scriptures;" "Why I am a Christian," etc., etc., and could keep the booklets "rotating" among this people till a great light should spring up. These and any other literature will be acknowledged, sent to Indiana State Conventions.

The Indiana State Missionary Society and the Indiana Ministerial Association will hold their annual conventions at Irvington, Ind., May 9-12 inclusive.

An excellent program has been arranged. J. J. Haley, of Cynthiana, Ky.; Ben L. Smith and A. McLean, of Cincinnati, and W. F. Cowden, of Tacoma, Wash., will be present and deliver addresses. There will also be addresses by some of our best Indiana preachers on up-to-date subjects.

The Irvington Christian Church chorus choir will render a cantata, entitled "The King in Zion," on Wednesday evening after the address.

Entertainment will be provided by the Irvington church assisted by the churches of the city. Send your name to Dr. S. H. Creighton, Irvington, Ind., as soon as possible if you intend to be present at the convention.

Reduced rates on the railroads have been secured for all points between 25 and 100 miles on the certificate plan, by which the holder is entitled to one-third rate on the return trip. Tickets must be bought to Irvington and not to Indianapolis. See your railroad agent and get full instructions. Please announce these conventions, and do all you can to secure a large attendance, for these conventions promise to be the best in our history in Indiana.

The First Answer.

If it be true that a generous deed quickly done is more appreciated, I certainly appreciate the readiness of the first answer that has come to my appeal published in the columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for help to support the evangelist in the very needy field in Southern Missouri. Almost the first mail after the appearance of the appeal brought a note from Robt. D. Patterson, of St. Louis, inclosing his check for $10, enrolling himself as one of the five called for. Surely God will bless the heart that thus responds in generous quickness to the call for help for this purpose. The matter now stands thus: $60 needed, $20 subscribed as follows:

T. A. Abbott, ... $10.00
Robt. D. Patterson, ... 10.00

Four more tens are needed. We ought to have them by the next issue. Who will be the next? Yours in His Name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

Assistance Needed.

Sometime ago R. L. Lotz, of Mapleton, Ohio, while on a lecture tour passed through Coshocton, Ohio, and reports a great field there ready for the harvest. We have a small congregation there with preaching Sunday afternoons by Bro. Bates, of Newark. After stating something of the size and importance of the city, Bro. Lotz concluded his letter with the following appeal for help. It is just such fields as this that our Home Board ought to assist and would if it had the means. But here is what Bro. Lotz says:

They have an opportunity to purchase a good lot, well located, for $800. There was, at one time, a fair-sized congregation there, but for reasons unknown to the writer it went down. The denominations have built fine churches there and we are now in the background. Coshocton is not the only town in Ohio where similar conditions exist. Many of the churches in Eastern Ohio are sleeping and are growling because others are reaping the harvest which they should have reaped. Some one ought to do something for Coshocton. To me it looks like it is now or never; it seems like the last effort of divine Providence in behalf of the cause in this old, yet now new city. The powers of evil are strong there. Some one ought to come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Who will do it?

St. Paul News.

We have not been sleeping these few silent weeks. We are busy. Local church work requires much time as well as regular business. The First Church in St. Paul is in splendid shape. The ladies have secured over $100 this this month. God bless these silent, effectual partners in the churches. Our finance committee has reached nearly the end of our lot indebtedness. Our Bible-school leaps forward. The church grows in every good work. Bro. Harmon is back from Nebraska, where he was called by the serious illness of his father. He left him with good hopes of recovery, although his leg was amputated just below the kneee for senal gangrene.

The Minneapolis church continues its rapid growth. The exchange meeting between Bro. Morgan and Bro. Richardson, of Kansas City, has proven a great blessing to both fields.

State work moves well. Bro. C. M. McCurdy was compelled to lay off after the Main Prairie meeting on account of throat trouble.

He can be had for Sunday work or occasional meetings. Evangelists Atwood and Sweetman will take his place in the field. They have just finished at Dundee; organized a good little church and a splendid Bible-school.

They begin to plant another church tomorrow, Lord's day, at Worthington.

The state board meets Monday evening. These meetings are full of interest and work. Money comes quite well from the $500 fund, but where are the churches? The bright Easter makes us think of a coming resurrection. How glorious to think of a future life! How precious the anticipated reunions and greetings. Oh, brethren, how earnest we should be to spread the good newe we possess. Let Minnesota work hard for 100,000 souls for Christ this Jubilee Year.

Are you preparing churces for Home Mission day? Remember now Home Missions embrace the islands of the sea. Let the Master's work keep pace with the national policy of expansion. Soon America will stand for the world, and may the world stand for Christ! Work, pray, give; and may the Father bless us! E. T. GADD, Cor. Sec.

Gethsemane Gleanings.

All the Eastern workers will be rejoiced to know that a meeting has been called for consultation concerning the interests of the work in the Atlantic States. Philadelphia is the place, May 9-11 is the time. The Richmond district W. C. T. U. met in convention at Shady Grove M. E. Church, seven miles from this place, March 13. The district embraces six counties, all of which were represented by delegates. The meeting was large and enthusiastic. Bro. J. A. Dearborn, of Richmond, was present and spoke for them.

Bro. Dearborn recently preached two excellent sermons at Gethsemane. As be was pastor of this church for more than five years, he is well known and beloved here.

Friday night, March 31, I heard four young men, students of Richmond College, discuss in the assembly hall of that institution the question, "Should the United States adopt the Policy of Territorial Expansion?" My youngest brother, Hugh W., was one of the speakers, appearing for the first time in the arena. I am glad to say that he acquitted himself honorably, as did all the other speakers.

Z. T. Sweeney has resigned the work at Seventh St. Church, Richmond. We consider this a heavy blow to the work, not in Richmond only, but throughout the East. No other man has attracted such multitudes in Richmond Sunday after Sunday as Bro. Sweeney did.

W. J. Wright, of Washington, preached for the Seventh St. Church the first Sunday in April.

J. A. Spencer, of Manchester, began a meeting April 5 with Geo. F. DeVol, of Iowa, assisting.

Recently an entire household, five in all, united with Gethsemane by letter.

Our Strength.

Numerically we have succeeded in making almost the best record alongside of our denominational neighbors. Out of 1,085,615 members, 34,678 were added during the past year. It is evident that this growth is due to evangelistic efforts and the hearty co-operation of the churches who believe that optimistic revival work knows no defeat. Occasionally we find a few pessimistic preachers and congregations, but as a whole we are aggressive enough to understand the words of our divine Master, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." If we believe this, we ought to act accordingly. Every church should have a revival and a preacher who possesses push-ability enough to carry on the Lord's work. The preacher and evangelist should also realize the fact that religious papers have a powerful influence on the people. The success of the Catholics, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Lutherans, Latter-Day Saints and the Christian Scientists depends on reading their own religious weeklies. We need to give more "attention to the reading of our own literature." I know of churches with a membership from fifty to one hundred and ten, with only five subscribers in the congregation. If we wish to impress others of our growth and standing as a people we must read more about our "current" movements. If we desire to know more than others we are obliged, not only to read, but to read "a little more than our religious neighbors."

The Mormons, or Later-Day Saints, had an increase of 43,269 members, while the Christian Scientists had a numerical growth of 30,000 during the past year; all of which is largely due to their united efforts. With their preaching and teaching they carried their denominational literature which did the work and prepared the field for the establishment of their cause in many localities. Since we believe it to be "right," we need more journalistic faith to watch what others are doing, and compare our growth and strength with other religious bodies. Such papers as the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, the Christian Oracle, the Christian Standard, the Christian Courier, the Register-Review and others give us the most intelligent food for the mind that has ever been produced. What would become of some of our preachers and congregations if these weekly messengers should fail to perform their mission? What would be the result if 325,000 Disciples out of the 1,085,615 would read and get some one else to read our literature? State, Home and Foreign Missions, who are suffering for the want of proper understanding, would find a way to the heart of men and women whose assistance we need in order to carry on the work of the Lord. $100,000 for Home Missions in this the Jubilee Year, and 100,000 souls for Christ mean a united effort. It means a revival in every congregation with willing workers in order to meet the expected results. JOHN G. M. LUTTENBERGER.

Dorchester, Ill., April 1, 1899.

P. S.—We have made arrangements to build a tabernacle at Gillespie, Ill. The ground cost us $450.

In a Prosperous State.

April 2nd was a great day in the First Christian Church in Sedalia. We had been doing some work preparing for an Easter offering. We had a splendid Sunday-school—nearly 400 present; 120 in the primary class, with an offering from this class of little tots alone of $3.85. Our church was packed both morning and evening. Bro. Putman is doing us a splendid work. The offering amounted to over three thousand dollars.

Bro. McLean was here a week or two ago and we gave him for missions $120.

Our church is doing a good work. Bro. Putman is drawing full houses. Everything is going along satisfactorily.

A REMARKABLE INVENTION

BY AN OHIOAN.

A genius of Cincinnati has patented and placed on the market a remarkable Bath Cabinet, whereby any one resting on a chair within, enjoys the famous Turkish, hot vapor or medicated baths at home for 3 cents each, heretofore enjoyed only by the rich at public bathrooms, health resorts, hot springs and sanitariums. These baths are celebrated for their marvelous cleansing, purifying and invigorating effects upon the human system, and this invention brings them within the reach of the poorest person in the country.

CABINET OPEN—Step in or out

FOLDED

Clouds of hot vapor or medicated vapor surround the entire body, opening the millions of sweat pores, causing profuse perspiration, drawing out of the system all impure salts, acids and poisonous matter, which, if retained, overwork the heart, kidneys, lungs and skin, causing disease, fevers, debility and sluggishness.

Astonishing is the improvement in health, feelings and complexion by the use of this Cabinet, and it seems to us that the long sought-for natural method of curing and preventing disease without medicine has certainly been found.

The makers inform the writer that 82,386 of these Quaker folding thermal Cabinets have been sold since January 1, and showed letters from thousands of users who speak of this Cabinet as giving entire satifaction.

Since this invention bathtubs have been discarded, for it gives a better bath for all cleansing purposes than soap and water, and, as there are millions of homes without bathing facilities, it seems this would be a good article for our readers to take the agency for.

Thousands of remarkble letters have been written the inventors. and to our knowledge persons who were full of drugs and nostrums, and have been given up to die, have been restored to perfect, robust health, to the astonishment of their friends and physicians.

E. L. Eaton, M. D., of Topeka, Kan., gave up his practice, because, he said, he could do more good for humanity with this Cabinet than his medicines, and has already sold more than 600 of them. Congressman John J. Lentz, Mrs. Senator Douglas, Rev. R. E. Peale, Una, S. C., Rev. Samuel Cooper, John T. Brown, editor of the Christian Guide, and a host of our most eminent people recommend it.

J. A. Hagan, Richfield, Mo., afflicted 15 years with rheumatism in the worst form, was cured in 6 days. L. B. Westbrook, Newton, Ia., afflicted 45 years, was cured in 3 weeks of catarrh, asthma, heart and kidney trouble. O. P. Freeman, Sparta, O., afflicted 17 years, unable to walk, was cured of kidney troubles, piles and rheumatism. A prominent citizen of Elwood, Ind., E. Veher, was cured of a serious case of obesity. A lady in Maysville, Mo., Mrs. L. Coen, was cured of woman's troubles, and recommends it to all suffering ladies.

We find this is a genuine Cabinet, with a door, handsomely and durably made of the best materials, rubberlined, has a steel frame, and should certainly last a lifetime.

It is important to know that the makers guarantee results, and assert positively, as do thousands of users, that this Cabinet will clear the skin, purify and enrich the blood, cure nervousness, weakness, that tired feeling and the worst forms of rheumatism. (They offer $50 reward for a case not relieved.) Cures woman's troubles, malaria, ague, sleeplessness, neuralgia, headaches, piles, dropsy, liver, kidney and nervous troubles. It will make you strong, energetic, full of life and vigor with the coming of spring and summer, and avoid illness later.

To please the ladies, a face and head steaming attachment is furnished, if desired, which clears the skin, beautifies the complexion, removes pimples, blackheads, eruptions, and is a sure cure for skin diseases, catarrh and asthma.

All our readers should have one of these remarkable Cabinets. The price is wonderfully low. Cabinets complete, with Heater, furmulas and directions, only $5.00. Head steamer, $1 extra; and it is indeed difficult to imagine where one could invest that amount of money in anything else that guarantees so much genuine health, strength and vigor.

Write to-day to the World Mfg. Co., 606 World Building, Cincinnati, O., for full information; or, better still, order a Cabinet. You won't be disappointed, as the makers guarantee every Cabinet, and will refund your money after 30 days if not just as represented. We know them to be perfectly reliable. Capital $100,000.00, and they will ship promptly upon receipt of remittance.

Don't fail to send for booklet anyway.

This Cabinet is a wonderful seller for agents, and the firm offers special inducements to both men and women upon request, and to our knowledge many are making from $100 to $150 per month and expenses. It is certainly an opportunity not to be neglected.

MESSAGES FROM THE FIELD.

The Best Field I Know.

The General Board has many calls; many it cannot answer. You may know more needy fields, but Florida is the most needy and most promising field I know.

A thousand dollars from your board will keep at least four preachers at work in the state all the year—and that means much. Our cause is perishing in this state; save us ere we die. Our churches are shepherdless, and no work is being done except by a faithful few in the Bible-schools.

We do not want "winter" men, we do not want invalids. We want missionaries; without them the cause must suffer. Send us missionaries, and help us support them in this needy field. J. T. BOONE.

Jacksonville, Fla.

An Open Door.

I write to plead for an appropriation for a special work among the Mexicans in San Antonio. We are only a mission ourselves, and we have entered upon this mission work. There is a wonderful opportunity. These people came to me and asked to be received into the church. The work is forced upon us, and we cannot turn away from it. Father and I went to the newly organized Mexican Mission yesterday, and I received three men and two women into the church. To-night I will baptize five other men upon confession; later I will baptize eight women. I will organize a Spanish Christian Church at once; the first in the United States, I think. There is a hopeful outlook. God is in this work. When I hear these coppery-faced people sing their versions of our songs—"When the roll is called up yonder, I'll be there," "The fountain filled with blood" and "Blessed Jesus, my Savior," and when I hear their prayers I know their Savior Grande is my Lord and King. I know that we are one in Christ Jesus.

$100 or $120 a year is the beggarly sum we ask for this Spanish American church. With the immense possibilities of this work I am sure a liberal support in the beginning will insure a stable church. These people are ready to forsake Romanism; let us attract them to Christ. We have the most effective and the most scriptural plea; let us win them.

We must get that $100,000 for Home Missions this Jubilee Year. Tell the facts about this great home field, and they will respond. I wish I could preach in a thousand pulpits about the splendid opportunities here among the Mexicans of San Antonio.

GEORGE B. RANSHAW.

Albany, New York.

We have no congregation of our people in Albany, the capital of New York. The city has 125,000 inhabitants and, excepting Providence, is the largest city in the United States without a Church of Christ. There are a few Disciples there who are anxious for an organization. There is a prospect of a fund being given for a memorial church in Albany. If the General Board could stand behind that work for a short time, with an appropriation of $500 per year, the forces could be rallied and we could soon plant a church in the capital of the Empire State. By the help of the General Board we can plant a church there before the end of the century.

Nothing can be done in New York that will be appreciated so much as your help in establishing the cause in Albany. Please let us know soon what your board will do for Albany.

J. M. MORRIS, State Evangelist.

Help Us More.

The Oregon State Board is very grateful for the help of the General Board, but we need more help. If you will give us $200 we can keep Bro. Jenkins in the field a whole year. We feel that we must have $200 for Ashland; $100 will save the cause at Grant's Pass.

My appeal is small. Oregon is a great field and ripe for the gospel, if we will only support the missionary long enough to make the churches self supporting.

Can you not make these small additional appropriations to Oregon? Don't refuse us.

J. B. LISTER, Cor. Sec.

We Have No Church In New Hampshire.

We have no church in New Hampshire, and I think the Jubilee Year could be marked in no better way than by the organization of a church that is simply Christian, built upon the foundation of the apostles and the prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief corner stone.

If the General Home Board will vote us an additional $500, I will agree to see that a church is organized either at Nashua or Manchester during our Jubilee Year. The New England brethren will rally around that effort, and we can inspire them with enthusiasm for that work. Please let me know whether I shall undertake the work. S. M. HUNT,

Cor. Sec. New Eng.

Southern Indiana.

There are in Indiana 250 churches that are dead in anti-ism and indifference. We must go to them to arouse them out of this death-sleep. You gave us $60, and with that help we sent our state evangelist, H. C. Patterson, to Seymour, Ind., and he held a very successful meeting. Out of it came the organization of a church; the material is on the ground, and the church building is being erected.

We now ask for $40. If you will grant this we will go to Plymouth, Ind., as soon as the weather permits and hold a tent meeting, and with God's blessing we will organize a church at Plymouth. Will the General Board be our helper in this work?

T. J. LEGG, Cor. Sec.

California.

California has suffered from the drought for two consecutive years. We need help from our brethren in the East to lay the foundations of things and to support that which is now weak, but will soon become strong.

If the Home Board can give the Board of North California $400 for 1899, we can help the churches at Alemeda, at Palo Alto and at Santa Cruz. Please grant us this appropriation.

Arkansas—The Field, the Conditions, the Outlook.

Arkansas is entering upon an era of unprecedented development. Her climate, variety of farm products, her timber and mineral fields are attracting the attention of homeseekers and capitalists from every point of the compass.

Several railroads are in process of construction, and flourishing towns spring up. The farm lands can be obtained all the way from homesteading to five dollars per acre, and you have the ground facts from which to estimate the material development of our state.

This has much every way to do with the outlook for the Disciples of Christ. The people will be here. There is in almost every community a nucleus of Christians who would welcome good work. As large a per cent. of our brethren come as of others. One hundred dollars expended now in building up the cause, in new and growing towns and districts of country that will rapidly fill up, will do more than five hundred dollars would after all the other churches have the ground pre-empted, and control schools, social and business interests.

The road to success. It is not to let alone one's scattered brethren, expecting them to go to work without leaders or preachers and establish the cause unaided. It cannot be done by revivalists flitting through the country, holding a meeting, however successful it may seem to be, and leaving them without care. Neither can this care be exercised by men who themselves are novices, either on account of recent conversion or want of intellectual and spiritual training. We must have the preaching pastors. Enable a good man to stay where his work is efficient and satisfactory, and everything else will follow. He may reach several congregations or only one, according to circumstances, but he must be a leader of forces.

Two thousand dollars per year could be so utilized in the state of Arkansas as to well nigh meet all these conditions, and if we could approach near it now we ought to soon increase rapidly in financial and spiritual strength.

With only a few hundred dollars new congregations with a promising outlook have been planted, add two good houses built. This can be duplicated. Arkansas is ripe for the simple gospel of the New Testament.

When The Stomach

refuses to work it means that every digestive organ in the body is unable to perform its functions properly. Through lack of proper nourishment the entire system thus becomes impoverished and weakened. At the first symptom of digestive trouble take the old reliable

Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer

the old Swiss-German remedy. It regulates and strengthens the digestive organs while it purifies the blood and invigorates the system.

It was discovered by an old German physician and has been in use for over 100 years, though not extensively advertised. It seldom fails to cure all diseases caused by impoverished or impure blood or from disordered stomach.

No Drug-Store medicine; is sold only by regular Vitalizer agents.

Persons living where there are no agents for Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer can, by sending $2.00, obtain twelve 35-cent trial bottles direct from the proprietor. This offer can be obtained only once by the same person.

Attention, Mississippians!

DEAR BRETHREN:—As the time for the May offering for Home Missions is near by, being on the first Lord's day in May, I feel it my duty to remind you as to what our duty is in the premises. The Mississippi Christian Missionary Convention is practically the child of the American Christian Missionary Society. Whatever we have accomplished in the last fifteen years in Mississippi is largely due to the help received from the A. C. M. S., whose headquarters are at Cincinnati, Ohio.

In the last few years our work has been especially prosperous. Our state work has been felt and its results seen as never before.

The feature of permanency has especially developed in the state of Mississippi. I know of no church established even partly through the influence of the M. C. M. C. that has ever gone down. I can now think of thirteen new church buildings, to say nothing of three good parsonages, that have been completed in the last five years. Considering the number of our membership and the quality of the building we have no reason to be otherwise than happy and hopeful. But for the help of the American Board we could not carry on this work. On the first Sunday in May, or just as soon thereafter as your church meets, this offering for Home Missions should be taken. This is the "Jubilee Year" with the Home Missionary Society. This being the fiftieth year of its life, we want to raise $100,000 to be expended in destitute places.

That board has been sending money into Mississippi for fourteen years, and has received but little in return. Bro. B. L. Smith, the general secretary, says: "The Mississippi churches will not be excusable unless they make an earnest effort to attain a liberal offering in this "Jubilee Year" for the A. C. M. S. To this I say amen!

Please see that this letter is read before your church and that the offering is taken and forwarded to Benj. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio. Thy servant truly,

JOHN A. STEVENS,
State Evangelist.

Jackson, Miss.

Pledged for Home Missions.

The following amounts pledged for Home Missions will be paid through the churches in which the subscribers reside, thus giving the churches as well as the donors credit for the amounts. In this way the offering of all our churches, especially the stronger ones, might be greatly enlarged. Each of the following persons residing in Cincinnati have subscribed $100: Benj. L. Smith, C. C. Smith, S. M. Cooper, J. H. Fillmore, Standard Publishing Co., H. T. Loomis, A. McLean, John L. Shuff, W. S. Dickinson, H. M. Dalton, C. W. Neare and Frank R. Ludlow. The following persons in St. Louis, Mo., have subscribed $100 each: A. H. Duncan, J. J. Searcy, F. E. Udell and J. H. Garrison. J. H. Allen, of this city, subscribed $200. The following persons in other cities have subscribed $100 each: J. F. Davis, Portsmouth, Ohio; Dr. H. Gerould, Cleveland, Ohio; Mrs. S. S. Soule, Digby, Ohio; John R. Tolar, New York; Z. T. Sweeney, Columbus, Ind. (provided nine others in Indiana will give $100 each); T. E. Taylor, Stockport, Iowa; S. W. Martin, Oakland, Cal., and two Kentucky friends to Home Missions $100 each. The following persons have subscribed $50 each: E. P. Tingley, Cincinnati, Ohio, and W. Gross, Lawson, Mo. The following persons in Cincinnati have subscribed $25 each: H. T. Ogden, Benj. Sebastian, B. W. Wasson and S. Challen Fillmore. Also in addition, J. F. Merryman, of St. Louis, Mo., $25. This is indicative of what can and should be done at once all over this fair land, and presages large results at the May offering. This list ought to grow to large proportions before the first Lord's day in May.

HOME MISSIONS TO THE FRONT.

F. N. CALVIN.

There are two themes before which I am so completely astounded that I hardly know what to say. One is "the temperance question," and the other is "Home Missions." When I look about me and realize the facts, note the results of neglect and see the need of every energy being exerted and then know that all these facts must be apparent to every thinking person, I can't help asking, What more can be said?

The facts themselves speak in such thunderous tones that if the churches will not hear them neither will they hear though one should arise from the dead to write about it.

I am told that in the state of Wisconsin we have but about one thousand members. Many of the large cities of the state have never heard of the plea of the Disciples of Christ.

This state alone furnishes a field large enough for all of our energies for the next five years. From what I can learn there are many others in about the same condition.

Tell the churches not to think that this Jubilee Year means that your work is done, but rather that it is just beginning in earnest.

Yours for a hundred thousand souls this year, and two hundred thousand next.

Milwaukee, Wis.

Cincinnati Jubilee Convention.

Cincinnati held a public meeting in the interest of the Jubilee Convention in the Central Church, Monday night, April 3rd. The speakers were F. M. Rains, Geo. A. Miller, B. L. Smith, on regular program. They spoke on "History of our Work," "The Value of a Great Convention" and "The Honor of Cincinnati." Shorter speeches were made by James Leslie and J. H. Lockwood, who were charter members of the society in 1849. Also B. W. Wasson, W. S. Dickinson, S. M. Cooper and A. McLean. The meeting was well attended and enthusiastic.

The next will be held on May 2nd in Central. The Sunday before most of the pastors will preach on the Convention.

The meeting of the executive committee was held an hour before the public meeting. It was decided that the secretary of our committee, George A. Miller, pastor of the successful First Christian Church, Covington, Ky., should receive our correspondence. His convention address is P. O. Box 304, Cincinnati, O. He will be furnished a stenographer for his work. So now find out what you want to know.

John L. Shuff was elected chairman of the finance committee, and so money will be forthcoming.

We will, after the May meeting, be able to give more definitely the expense of a week's stay in Cincinnati.

Bro. W. H. McClain in his office at St. Louis last week was assured that if a banner was offered for the largest delegation it would be captured by the one from Missouri.

Bro. G. W. Muckley, chairman for Kansas City, writes that we may look for one hundred from that "village." Rush County, Ind., speaks out: "Expect five hundred from Rush County alone." Rush on, brethren! Never was a committee better prepared to welcome you. Four different delegations have ordered hotels for headquarters.

Bro. E. L. Powell is a chairman at Louisville and he writes us that they have long ago decided to have a boat excursion at that time. I hear them singing now—

"Cincinnati, '99, Cincinnati, '99,
All combine, and fall in line,
For Cincinnati, '99."

Yes, brethren, get off. This is the place. Just follow this gold and silver cap to the Central Church.

Yes, I forgot to tell you that the badge committee, of which Mrs. Tingley is chairman, have arranged badges, caps, etc., in gold and silver in honor of the gold and silver jubilee.

Let no convention of our brotherhood be held without a speech for the Jubilee Convention.

A. M. HARVOUT, chairman Jubilee Convention.

Suppress Alumned Food.

The doctors inform us that alum is a poison, and that alum baking powders should be avoided because they make the food unwholesome. Prominent hygienists, who have given the matter most study, regard these powders as an evil that should be suppressed by state action. In Minnesota and Wisconsin alum powders are not permitted to be sold unless they are branded to warn consumers of their true character, while in the District of Columbia the authorities have under the direction of Congress adopted regulations to prohibit the use of alum in bread altogether.

Are not the people of other atates, as well as those of Minnesota and Wisconsin, entitled to warning of a danger which is apparently menacing them at close hand, and is not the whole country entitled to absolute protection, as the people of the District of Columbia are protected, by legislation which is entirely prohibitive?

Until we can have protection in the form of a statute, how can our state boards of health, state analysts or food commissions better serve the public than by publishing in the newspapers from time to time the names of the baking powders which they find to be made from alum?

Meantime, it will aid the housewife in designating the alum powders to remember that all powders sold at 25 cents or less per pound are of this dangerous class. Pure cream of tartar powders are usually sold at from 45 to 50 cents a pound.

RUTH.

(Dedicated to the A. C. M. S.)

O, America, our home land,
Land of liberty and light!
Liberty for those who loyal stand,
Light to those in barbarous night!
O, Jesus, our Savior and King,
Author of liberty and light!
Liberty from death's lasting sting,
If loyally we stand for right.
Light to guide us on our way
That such freedom we may gain.
Of our land can we truly say
To the nation's beyond the main,
It is a light? Yes, truly,
If from the Author of these gifts
We learn the lesson duly.
The nation which His power uplifts,
To keep its name above censure,
Must train well the citizen at home;
Here, too, 's a waiting field. God will nurture
If carefully the seed is sown.
What the lives of our soldier boys,
Scattered through the nations?
Do they tell of righteous joys,
Or worldly degradations?
Great is our opportunity
Abroad, we say. Then learn this lesson well:
Great too 's the responsibility
In the land where Christians dwell.
Forward, then, let the movement be,
Every mission hand in hand
Working for God and liberty
Through Christ. For Him we'll win our land,
And it will shine as a beaconlight,
Well illumed by primitive faith,
And help dispel the darkness of night,
To the world giving rays of truth.
Then, America, our home land,
Land of liberty and light!
Liberty for those who loyal stand,
Light to those in heathen night!

A Cure for Loneliness.

EFFIE BARTLEY HOWARD.

There is no excuse for loneliness in this world. Busy people are never lonely, and every one can find plenty to do to keep their minds employed, with no time for the oft-repeated cry, "I am so very lonely." Too many of us complain from day to day, wishing some one would come, or the weather was favorable for our going out. The world is full of friends; some we find among neighbors, and more among books and other inanimate objects. What is more elevating than the companionship of a good book? Then by reading volume after volume we store our minds with the thoughts of the best authors and remembering them grow mentally and our memory is strengthened. Thus, when we are alone we can live with the characters we meet, and spend many pleasant hours with the thoughts suggested by volumes read long before. Our minds must be constantly cared for and kept in proper training, whatever our age, for only by taking proper care of our health, both mentally and physically, will we have done our part towards planning a bright and happy future.

Our happiness in life or lack of it, has much to do with our growing lonesome. If we give up to the blues and are continually worrying we will always be sad and lonely. We must create a cheerful, happy disposition if we would conquer all forms of loneliness. If we visit the sick and avoid strict seclusion we will always be happy. After all the main thing to do is to keep busy, and we can always manage if we half try, to keep our hands and minds busily engaged, however few accomplishments we possess. We can add to our possessions in accomplishments by constantly persevering and grasping for knowledge, which is always within reach. We need more energy, then we can ever keep in motion. Too much wasteful time is dangerous, for if our time is occupied we cannot plead loneliness. God has given us abundant opportunities if we will only use them aright. There are so many beautiful things in nature to attract our attention. Let us use our eyes and view the beautiful landscapes and see and listen to the music from the birds which ought to cheer the loneliest heart and make one thankful for life. God never intended that we should be lonely. How can one who is his child plead loneliness? If we give our hearts to God in early life we will grow up under his watchful care and he will constantly be our nearest companion, to whom we can go for help and guidance toward our eternal home. Life is too short to be spent in idleness, and if we become true Christians and try to possess pure hearts we shall be too busy to be lonesome. A Christian life is the secret of all happiness and cure for all despondent, lonely moments in life.

Oh, my lonely one, cease thinking of yourself; begin to think of God. Think only of him and do not dwell upon your own fancied trials. Lose yourself in the thought of him and you will find there all the comfort you need, for he will ever be your helper. If you are ever thinking of the sorrows and troubles of others, and try to lighten the loads of those about you, you will grow happier yourself and find life too short to dwell on its fancied dark side. Cheer up, dear one, revive your energy. God did not intend you should see through a blue glass, so be what he wishes you to be, a live, wholehearted Christian. Doing his will daily and living up to the very highest that is within you then all will be well. Do not let people find you cheerless or lonely. See the best in others and get the best in them by giving them your best. Do not expect others to be sweet, polite and thoughtful, so long as you adhere to the selfish principle that people must "take you as they find you." When your friends begin to grow careless stop and ask yourself whether you are not getting back a reflection of yourself in your own morbid loneliness.

Growth of Christianity.

Look at the growth of evangelical Christianity in the United States. In 1800 one evangelical church member to every fourteen and one-half of population; now one in every five. In 1800 one evangelical church in every 1,700 of population; now one in every 700.

But this is no adequate measure for the growth of the Christian forces. Look at the more important actual development in spirit and life. Never did Jesus Christ as a living person exert such a wide dominion as he does to-day.

The United States has wiped away the curse of human slavery. In welcoming the immigration of the nations, we have established the reality of human brotherhood. We are now consecrated to the task of achieving social emancipation. This is the crowning glory of the century, the uplifting of the workingman and finding for ourselves a way through the difficulties that beset the relations of labor and capital in the tremendous development that is now unfolding in the industrial and commercial world. Great as are those difficulties, they were never so sure of being settled and settled right as they are to-day.

American Song-Birds.

The great interest now being shown in the study and protection of our domestic birds is very gratifying, because it indicates a healthy sentiment, the cultivation of which cannot be too highly commended.

This interest has manifested itself in the formation of Audubon societies and in the unusual number of books recently published relating to bird life and presenting ornithology in a popular form. There are, however, but few of the latter that contain illustrations which are true representations of the birds for which they stand. To accomplish this successfully requires the nicest use of color as well as correct drawing, and most processes for color-printing have failed in absolute fidelity to the original.

Thus most pictures of birds are misleading, even those found in many scientific works claiming technical accuracy. It is, therefore, a pleasure to find that The Singer Manufacturing Company has begun the publication of a series of beautifully lithographed cards, reproductions of water-color drawings by the celebrated bird delineator, Mr. J. L. Ridway, of Washington, D. C.

These are notable for accuracy of drawing and of color, credible alike to artist and to printer, useful to the student, ornamental to the home and a prize for the collector. As fast as published, they can be obtained, without cost, upon application to any of the Singer Company's offices, which are to be found everywhere.

"The Man with the Hoe."

Bowed by the weight of centuries he leans
Upon his hoe and gazes on the ground,
The emptiness of ages in his face,
And on his back the burden of the world.
Who made him dead to rapture and despair,
A thing that grieves not and never hopes,
Stolid and stunned, a brother to the ox?
Who loosened and let down this brutal jaw?
Whose was the hand that slanted back this brow?
Whose breath blew out the light within this brain?

Is this the thing the Lord God made and gave
To have dominion over sea and land;
To trace the stars and search the heavens for power;
To feel the passion of Eternity?
Time's tragedy is in that aching stoop;
Through this dread shape humanity betrayed,
Plundered, profaned and disinherited,
Cries protest to the Judges of the World,
A protest that is also prophecy.

O, masters, lords and rulers in all lands,
Is this the handiwork you give to God,
This monstrous thing, distorted and soul-quenched?
How will you ever straighten up this shape;
Give back the upward looking and the light;
Rebuild in it the music and the dream;
Touch it again with immortality;
Make right the immemorial infamies,
Perfidious wrongs, immedicable woes?

Is this the Dream he dreamed who shaped the suns
And pillared the blue firmament with light?
Down all the stretch of Hell to its last gulf,
There is no shape more terrible than this—
More tongued with censure of the world's blind greed—
More filled with signs and portents for the soul—
More fraught with menace to the universe.
What gulfs between him and the seraphim!
Slave of the wheel of labor, what to him
Are Plato and the swing of Pleiades?
What the long reaches of the peaks of song,
The rift of dawn, the reddening of the rose?
Through this dread shape the suffering ages look.

The above poem was written by Edward Markham, a school-teacher of Oakland, California, and first printed sometime ago in the Globe Democrat of this city. Owing to its popularity it was again printed in the same paper, March 26th, with a sketch of the author and how he came to write the poem. The poem was inspired by Millet's great painting, "The Man with the Hoe," which the author saw about ten years ago in San Francisco. The poem has attracted the attention of literary critics, and will in all probability prove a living piece of literature.

Phases of Child-Life.

Children pass through a great many phases. Transitions are often trying. Keep these related facts in mind. We sometimes fix a fault by taking too much notice of it. A mistake should not be treated as a wilful sin. A transient awkwardness may be due to rapid growth. A shyness of behavior, which amounts to a painful timidity, will pass if not accentuated by comment and reproof. This is especially true in regard to speech. Children sometimes use slang; sometimes pick up words and phrases which are worse than slang, but the mother need not be unduly alarmed because of this. The boy and girl will speak the language and use the dialect of home; and if the mother possess the children's entire confidence she will not find it difficult to convince the children that vulgar speech is a thing to avoid. Mothers will never in the years to come regret a union of mild measures with firm adherence to principle in the home life. But of harshness and too much government they may repent in dust and ashes.—Harper's Bazar.

What He Couldn't Sell.

A gentleman was walking with his little boy at the close of the day, and in passing the cottage of a German laborer, the boy's attention was attracted to the dog. It was not a King Charles, nor a black-and-tan, but a common cur. Still, the boy took a fancy to him, and wanted papa to buy him.

Just then the owner of the dog came home from his labors, and was met by the dog with every demonstration of joy. The gentleman said to the owner:

"My little boy has taken a fancy to your dog, and I will buy him. What do you want for him?"

"I can't sell dat dog," said the German.

"Look here," said the gentleman, "that is a poor dog, but as my boy wants him, I will give you a sovereign for him."

"Yaas," said the German, "I knows he is a very poor dog, and he ain't wort' almost nottin,' but dere is von leetle ding mit dat dog vot I can't sell—I can't sell de vag of his tail ven I comes home at night."—Christian Commonwealth.

To talk with God—no breath is lost,
Talk on, talk on!
To walk with God—no strength is lost,
Walk on, walk on!
To wait on God—no time is lost,
Wait on, wait on!
To grind the axe—no work is lost,
Grind on grind on!
The work is quicker—better done,
Not needing half the strength laid on,
Grind on, grind on!
Work without God is labor lost,
Work on, work on!
Little is much when God is in it,
Man's busiest day's not worth God's minute,
Much is little everywhere,
If God the laborer do not share.
So work with God, and nothing is lost,
Who works with Him does best and most;
Work on, work on!

My Burden.

A well-known English evangelist when engaged in a work that seemed to call on him for a more than usual exercise of faith, received what seems like a most tender answer from God.

His little daughter, who was a paralytic, was sitting in her chair as he entered the house with a package in his hands for his wife. Going up to her, and kissing her, he asked, "Where is mother?"

"Mother is upstairs."

"Well, I have a package for her."

"Let me carry the package to mother."

"Why, Minnie, dear, how can you carry the package? You cannot carry yourself."

With a smile on her face, Minnie said: "Oh, no, papa, but you give me the package, and I will carry the package, and you will carry me."

Taking her in his arms he carried her upstairs, the little Minnie and the package, too. But it came to him that this was just his position in the work in which he was engaged. He was carrying his burden, but was not God carrying him?—Ex.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Don't Know It.

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney poison in the blood is liable to attack the vital organs, or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell. Then the richness of the blood—the albumen—leaks out and the sufferer has Bright's Disease, the worst form of kidney trouble. Kidney trouble can be detected although it be slow and deceptive. First, by analysis of the urine; second, by the simple test of setting the urine aside in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, when a cloudy or brick-dust settling indicates it.

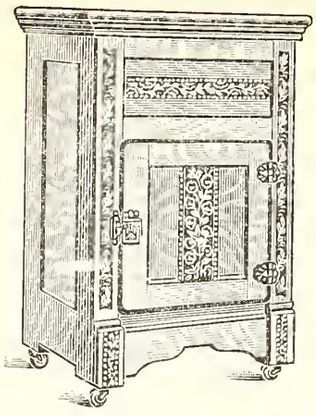
It was for just such troubles that in His infinite power and goodness the Great Physician caused Swamp-Root to grow for the benefit of suffering mankind, leaving it for Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist to discover it and make it known to the world. Its wonderful efficacy in promptly curing the most distressing cases is truly marvelous.

By sending your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., you may have a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail.

When writing be sure and mention reading this liberal offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The regular fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes are sold by most druggists. Make a note of the name, SWAMP-ROOT, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

What the President Costs.

It costs the people of the United States $114,865, a year for a chief executive. His salary is $50,000 and "found." The president's finding is rather comprehensive, covering about every possible requirement of a family. His private secretary, the clerks, doorkeepers, messengers and steward and three other servants cost $33,-865 a year, which the president may use according to his discreation.



In furniture and repairs to the white house the sum of $16,000 more, to be used by the direction of the president, is provided by the nation, and is always expended. For fuel alone $3,000 is allowed, and for necessary repairs to the greenhouse there is $4,000.

Altogether, the presidential "finding" annually amounts to the snug sum of $64,-865, nearly $15,000 a year more than his salary. The two aggregate $114,865. This is an imposing aggregate, but it is small compared with other presidents. The president of the French republic receives a salary of $120,000 a year, $32,480 for contingent purposes, and a handsome house, rent free. So we get our president rather cheaply after all.—St Louis Post-Dispatch.

With The Children.

CONDUCTED BY

J. BRECKENRIDGE ELLIS, PLATTSBURG, MO.

Here is letter from Vetura Blanche Collings, Raytown, Mo., that will please all Advent Society members: "Last night ten children met at Mr. Slaughter's, six of them being members, most having been on the Honor List (Homer and Wm. Slaughter, Roy Green, Mary Pierson, Laurabelle Campbell and myself). The ones that joined last night were Frank Campbell, Frank Collings, Rosa Tarr, Beauford Collings. We elected a president, vice-president, secretary, treasurer, a lookout committee and program committee. We will meet every week for awhile. Term of office, six weeks—to give all a chance. One will read the history he read during the week, another a chapter of the Bible, one his week's poetry, commenting on it, another a chapter of Little Men; all will repeat their quotations. We mean to read the New Testament through, and also Little Men. We will have the badges. I am corresponding secretary."——Two weeks later Vetura writes: "Our Advent Society is getting along fine. Three new members: Hattie Hall, Jim Stayton, Fields Wilson." From Fleming, Col., come the names of the Marrises, thus: Bertha (18), Katie (16), Ethel (13). Is that all? No. Belle Marris (11). Any more? Certainly, Georgie (8). There is a band for you—and it is all in the family!

Eugene W. Rice, Answorth, Ia.: "We have moved from Virginia, Ill., here; we had carloades of goods and I rode with papa on the freight cars. It was quite an interesting trip. A year ago we had a large shepherd, Bruno. He was my little bother's pet. It was a case of Mary's little lamb. Sometimes Egbert would run off, and we always found him by seeing Bruno playing about. One morning Bruno was missing and a day or two later he came back, sullen and lazy. Sunday morning we found him dead. We buried him in the orchard." I am glad Eugene had that ride on the freight car. It is much slower than a passenger train; the joy lasts longer, the coal smoke smells stronger, and you get more jolts and stops, you see more green and red lights for your money.

Harry L. Cash, Pennville, Ind.: "Fido comes to church and sits on a chair and runs all about and makes the people laugh. One night it was running all over the church and Rev. H. C. Patterson kicked him and Fido never came back again." Fido is right; I wouldn't come either. But I think Rev. Patterson made a good move in this case, although I am not acquainted with Fido. Churches were not built for dogs; they cannot tell a long sermon from a short one, and they cannot join (with much intelligence) in the choir. Luella Evans, Brook, Ia.: "One day my sister made a room out of chairs and my brother was the wolf, and he came mighty near catching my sister!" That was certainly a narrow escape. I wonder if the brother said, "wwbuh! wwbuhgh!" when he was the wolf?

The favorites of Homer H. Slaughter are Little Men, Jo's Boys, Uncle Tom's Cabin, Pilgrim's Progress, History of England (Dickens), His own Master, by Trowbridge and four books by Henty.

W. P. Keeler writes from Chicago: "For a year or two I have read aloud to my children and their young companions a number of good books, in what we term our 'Reading Class.' A few days ago Bishop Jno. H. Vincent wrote me what he considered superior books for youthful readers; and it occurs to me a sentence or two will prove helpful to readers of 'With the Children.' He writes: 'I think children are likely to be interested in the best. I know of no books I would more readily put in the hands of boys than Tom Brown at Rugby and Tom Brown at Oxford, and I think Stepping Heavenward, by Mrs. Elizabeth Prentice, would interest boys and girls alike.'"

New HONOR LIST: Leland Cash, Myrtle Blanchard, Florence Leavitt, Glen Garfield Leavitt, Oline Leavitt, Anna Conklin, Elsie Conklin, Lewis Conklin, Anna Black, Alma Williams, Delta, Col. They tell me that instead of writing Leavitt, I have written Seavitt. "You always write 'S' instead of 'L,'" says the owner of this name. Well, if it isn't "L" this time, it will be the type-setter's fault; if he gets it wrong, I will get after him; and I will not leave it until it is printed Leavitt.

Children, I can't use the typewriter today. I will tell you a secret: My handwriting is not exactly up to date. In fact, it has been considerably neglected since this Spanish war. My own mother can never tell my "b's" from my "l's." This being the case, do you think it fair to the printers to make this any longer? I don't. I feel that they will have enough to do in telling my "n's" from "v's." So I must omit many interesting letters I had planned for this week.

Are you tired of going to school? It looks to me like vacation will never come. Oh, how I grab my hat and run out and yell when it is four o'clock! Will summer never come, when I can go fishing instead of being bored to death over my fifth reader? I wish all would write to me about the best time they had last vacation. Tell me how you had the most fun. It will cheer me up and reconcile me to a few more weeks of school. I will print your letters as hitherto. Did any of you camp out? Any go swimming? Let's here about it!

Never tell all you know; for he who tells everything he knows often tells more than he knows.

Never attempt all you can do; for he who attempts everything he can do often attempts more than he can do.

Never believe all you hear; for he who believes all that he hears often believes more than he hears.

Never lay out all you can afford; for he who lays out everything he can afford lays out more than he can afford.

Never decide upon all you may see; for he who decides upon all that he sees often decides on more than he sees.—The Sunny South.

A Remarkable Memory.

It is well known that Henry Clay was remarkable for his recollection of faces. The following curious illustration of this wonderful power occurred at Clinton, while he was on his way to Jackson, Miss.

The cars stopped for a few minutes, when an eccentric, but strong-minded, man made his way up to him, exclaiming as he did so, "Don't introduce me, for I want to see if Mr. Clay will know me."

"Where did I know you?" asked Mr. Clay.

"In Kentucky," answered the old man.

Mr. Clay struck his long bony finger upon his forehead, as if in deep thought. Then, noticing that the man had but one eye, he asked, "Have you lost that eye since I saw you, or had you lost it before?"

"Since," was the reply.

"Then turn the sound side of your face to me that I may get your profile."

Mr. Clay paused a moment, his thoughts running back many years. "I have it!" he cried. "Did you not give me a verdict as juror, at Frankfort, Ky., in the great case of the United States versus Innis, twenty-one years ago?"

"I did! I did!" exclaimod the overjoyed man.

"And is not your name Hardwicke?"

"It is, it is," cried Dr. Hardwicke, bursting into tears. "Didn't I tell you," he said to his friends, "that he would know me, though I have never once seen him during all these years? Great men never forget faces." — Christian Endeavor World.

"THE greater the strain, the more terrible the recoil;" the higher the tide, the lower the ebb; the higher the wave, the deeper the depression. Almost every worker for God has at some time been with Bunyan's Christian in Doubting Castle of Giant Despair. The Valley of the Shadow of Death is often but a short journey from the mountains of Beulah. Viewing the Divine dealings with us through the medium of nervous exhaustion is like looking at nature through blue glass. Even the sunshine seems dreary. It takes more religion to make a dyspeptic smile than a perfectly healthy person to rejoice in Pisgah glories.—Peloubet.

Now believe me, God hides some ideal in every human soul. At some time in our life we feel a trembling, fearful longing to do some good thing. Life finds its noblest spring of excellence in this hidden impulse to do our best. There is a time when we are not content to be such merchants or doctors or lawyers as we see on the dead level or below it. The woman longs to glorify her womanhood as sister, wife or mother. . . . Here is God,—God standing silently at the door all day long,—God whispering to the soul that to be pure and true is to succeed in life, and whatever we get short of that will burn up like stubble, though the whole world try to save it.—Robert Collyer.

TOPIC FOR APRIL 30.

HOW SHALL WE DIVIDE OUR TIME?

(Eccl. 3:1-15.)

A place for everything and everything in its place. Yes, and a time for everything and everything in its time.

Thrice happy is the man who knows not only what to do, but when to do it. If there is anything almost as deplorable as doing the wrong thing, it is doing the right thing at the wrong time. Many a one means well, but is forever opening his mouth when it ought to be shut, and shutting it when it ought to be open. O for a sense of the eternal fitness of things!

Some one has defined an educated man as one who is able to do the thing that he knows he ought to do at the time it ought to be done whether he feels like doing it or not. This comes very nearly a comprehensive definition.

Some people never succeed in accomplishing what they ought to do, because they do not do things systematically, each in its proper time. There is no lack of time. God gives every one time enough to get his work done. But if one does the thing to-day that ought to be done to-morrow, or to-morrow what ought to be done to-day, work is spoiled and time is lost.

The old saw, "Never put off till to-morrow what ought to be done to-day," is no wiser than, "Never do to-day what you can put off till to-morrow," if the latter is wisely interpreted and industriously applied. By getting impatient and doing a task too quickly, we sometimes make ourselves double labor, for the task might be avoided if we waited; or it may be spoiled by our haste and need a second doing. However, only a very industrious person ought to use this rule.

If you want a thing well done, go to the busiest person you know. Not the one that seems busiest and makes the most fuss; but the one who really gets the most done. He it is who will find time to attend to your affairs for you. He knows how to systematize his time; indeed, to create time.

What a fool we all take him to be who forever is laughing when he ought to be grave, dancing when he ought to be still, talking when he ought to be silent, or weeping when he ought to go and hide his tears. Such is one who does not rightly divide his time, who does not catch the spirit of an occasion. Such a one we call a bore.

One of the commonest faults with us all is that of dealing with our difficulties before the time. There is a time to worry, but that is the time when the difficulty is actually to be dealt with. Even then one should not worry, but deal. To-morrow is the time to handle to-morrow's tangle. It cannot be untied to-day. Sufficient for each day is its Gordian knot.

Bulletin, quarterly, sent to any address for one dollar. All orders should be addressed to the Bethany C. E. Company, 798 Republic St., Cleveland, O. Each course has a director: H. L. Willett is director of Bible study; W. J. Lhamon is director of studies in Missions; F. D. Power is director of studies Concerning the Disciples. This column is set apart to the use of these directors.]

Some First Things—I.

By F. D. Power, Director.

We have discussed in this column the "Genesis of the Disciples," and the call, "Back to the Beginnings;" let us consider some of the "First Things of the Kingdom."

The pioneers plead for a restoration of the ancient order as set forth in the New Testament. There is a very remarkable book in existence, by a physician of the first century, which gives the beginnings of Christianity. There are thousands who have never read it. It is a much-neglected book. Yet of all books it is probably the most important to Christians and to men who are not Christians. It tells how men were made Christians, how churches were originally established, how apostles and primitive teachers of Christianity proclaimed the gospel to all classes and conditions of men. It has been variously called "The Fifth Gospel," "The Demonstration of the Resurrection," "The Gospel of the Holy Spirit." Most readily it is recognized as "The Acts of the Apostles."

It is not all the acts of all the apostles, but some of the acts of some of the apostles. It has two general divisions: first, the general history of the church to the death of Herod; and, secondly, an account of the labors of the Apostle Paul. It starts out with a history of the origin, progress and dispersion of the church at Jerusalem.

Here, first of all, is the first gospel sermon ever preached to a lost world. Think of it! Thousands of teachers had instructed the Jewish people. Learned discourses on philosophy and religion had been heard in the groves of the academy. Orators like Cicero and Demosthenes had given their great words to the world, but here on Pentecost, in the city of Jerusalem, it is permitted a plain Galilean fisherman to declare for the first time in the history of the world, the full gospel of Jesus Christ—how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, how that he was buried, and how that he arose again the third day according to the Scriptures.

For preachers in all ages here is a model sermon. It is Peter who stands forth to make proclamation. Simon, the fisherman, a man of fiery temper, fierce zeal and fearless courage, one who had shared the intimate friendship of Jesus, denying him at one time, then restored; now no longer Simon, the fisherman, but Peter, the apostle. He is a prince of preachers, a true gospel fisherman. He is gifted for catching men, a man full of enthusiasm and aggressive force; and thousands under his instrumentality are added to the church.

So God calls men to serve in every age. Moses said, "I am slow of speech;" Isaiah declared, "I am a sinful man, O, Lord!" Yet God says to those that will do his work: "Thou shalt catch men," "Thou shalt feed men," "I have set before thee an open door," "Fear not, I will be with thee," "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature."

The preacher of this first gospel sermon is Peter and the sermon is just such a straightforward statement of truth as we might expect from such a man. Sermons are too often anything else. They are babblements, full of sound and trite sentiment. They cover all the expanse of creation and never reach the soul. They make men feel like congratulating themselves instead of driving them into the corners of the pews as if the devil were after them. God's message is to enlighten men, to comfort men, to show men the way of salvation, to guide men to a true faith, to encourage them to a holy obedience, to show aliens how they may be reconciled to God; and it is no true sermon that does not show God's Son, God's holy, innocent Son, "wounded for our transgressions and bruised for our iniquities;" that does not show men that they are sinners, lost without the cross, rebels and must surrender to our King; that does not show the way into the kingdom so plainly that the little child may enter, that the wayfaring man though a fool may not err therein.

Such is the first gospel sermon. Peter preaches Christ plainly, concisely, courageously. The Holy Spirit, through the Word preached, convinces of sin, righteousness and judgment. Thousands cry under conviction, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Peter answers, "Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and you shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. Then they that gladly received the Word were baptized; and the same day were added unto them about 3,000 souls."

Ah, if we could only preach like these men! If we were only men of such whirlwind energy, of such hot hearts to tell the world of the love of Christ! If we could only be saved from preaching "pretty sermons," "learned sermons," but instead could give men the plain Word of God, that is "quick and powerful and sharper than a two-edged sword," exhorting men, urging men, never quitting men, until they yield to our persuasion—giving men bread and not a stone!

So the pioneers sought to preach. Their theme was Christ the central truth of the Christian system; that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. Their only test was, "What think ye of Christ? Whose Son is he?" The truth made them mighty.

AKERS.

Stephen Akers was born in Tennessee, Dec. 25, 1824, died March 1, 1899, aged 74 years, two months and four days. He was married to Martha A. Barnes, at West Port, Mo., Sept. 26, 1852. Eight children born of this union, of whom five are still living, all of whom were present at the time of their father's death. He was a member of the Christian Church of Manchester, having united with the church about 30 years ago. A wife, five children and 13 grandchildren are left to mourn his loss.

LEWIS.

Sigal D. Lewis, who was a faithful member of the church at Bridgeport, Ill., and a man greatly beloved by all who knew him, departed this life January 31, 1899, aged 36 years. He was married to Elizabeth Sud Aug. 28, 1889. Their home was blessed with four children, one of which died in infancy, and another, a bright little boy three years old, was buried in the grave with his father. Bro. Lewis was a man of noble life, honest in his dealings, modest and unpretentious, and faithful to the Master, and labored earnestly for the advancement of his cause. By industry and economy he obtained a nice home. Though but a young man, and it seems soon called from his family, he leaves to them a name and character rich in influence and a blessing to all. He read much good literature, and especially admired the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, which for many years came to him in his mother's name, Mrs. Kate Lewis, who has long been a faithful member of the church, and untiring worker, especially in the C. W. B. M. The funeral services were held in the Christian Church at Bridgeport, and conducted by the writer, assisted by W. F. Black, of Chicago, under whose ministry he obeyed the gospel. W. R. CORTER.

SCHELL.

H. Y. Schell departed this life in this city March 31, 1899. Born in Summerset, Pa., he lived for a time in St. Louis, but spent the last sixteen years of his life here. He was a man of spotless character, of humble spirit and of unswerving faith. One of the most constant supporters of South St. Christian Church, he will be greatly missed. His death was the most beautiful I ever witnessed. His triumphant faith sustained him to the end. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

CHRISTIAN PUBLISHING CO., St. Louis, Mo.

France (Boulogne-Sur-mer).

Within the last half century so great improvement has been made in the means of transportation that the amount of travel has greatly increased. Modern ideas have thus been infused where for centuries before the people had kept the same customes and traditions. Thus, the quaint old costoms are fast disappearing to be replaced by modern dress.

But occasionally a corner is found where the people yet cling to their old habits. Such a corner exists in the forfeited seaport or Boulogne-sur-mer on the English Channel.

The historical old town on the hill is fast falling into decay as the new town on its slope becomes more thickly populated with English-speaking people. In the midst of this newness, but unchanged by it, lives a colony of French fisher-folk whose fathers and grandfathers before them brought herring and mackerel from the North Sea. Each boy, when large enough, sails with a fleet; each girl becomes a "fish-wife" to wait at home, patient and industrious, watching for the returning vessels. Then, with strong arms, the girls help unload and sort the fish, prepare them for exporting, or sell them in the town.

The photograph shown in the current issue of the Singer National Costume series represents a typical "fish-wife" of Boulogne in holiday attire. She wears the usual short skirt, ample apron and large, round, flaring cap of fluted white muslin.

Although one of the earliest sewing-machines was produced in France by Thimonnier, about 70 years ago, the Singer is now the recognized standard there, more being used in Paris than of all others in spite of many cheaply made imitations. At the last Paris Exposition the genuine Singers received highest awards for superior excellence of designs and construction.

Publishers' Notes.

"MEN OF YESTERDAY"

is now ready for the reading public. This is the late work of Thos. W. Grafton, and gives biographical sketches of prominent men among the Disciples of Christ, whose works for the cause of Christianity in the past are a blessing to the present generation. The young of to-day, as well as the old, who are not acquainted with the history of the lives of Scott, Stone, Smith, Errett, Johnson and Burgess, now have an opportunity to gain a knowledge of the lives of these men. An understanding of the lives of these men will be an inspiration to any who will read their history as presented by Grafton in "Men of Yesterday." It is a book of 281 pages, elegant cloth binding, and the price is $1.00, postage paid.

Moses E. Lard's work ranks high among scholars as a commentary on Romans. In every instance the author has earnestly endeavored to give the exact meaning to the language used by the apostle. As a valuable book of reference Lard's Commentary on Romans should be in the hands of all Bible students. Formerly this book was sold for $2.50, but the Christian Publishing Co. has bought out an edition, bound in cloth, printed on good book paper, and now offers this book, postpaid, for $2.00. Lard on Romans is a book of 485 pages and its contents should be known by every preacher who desires to understand the meaning of Paul in his letter to the Romans.

This is a good se son of the year for the agent to get around among the people and place good literature in the hands of many readers. We want active agents to sell some of our publications. A little time each day spent in selling some one or two of our good books will pay the agent financially and be a benefit to the buyer. You can select one or two of our publications, learn their contents and then be prepared to talk of their merits to those who need wholesome literature. We can offer you liberal terms as agent for our publications. Write for our catalogue and select some good book or books to sell and get our agents' terms.

BOOKS FOR THE CHILDREN.

"Aunt Maria's Saturday Talk Series," by Laura Gerold Craig, are nearly ready. These books contain biographical sketches and short stories so to d that the children will understand them. They are complete in six volumes, and each volume has a number of illustrations made especially for these books. The titles are "Little Presidents," "Little Kings," "Little Queens," "Little Orators," "Little Generals" and "Little Statesmen." The author has met a long-felt want in supplying the demand of childhood for stories that are both true and attractive to the young mind. She dedicates her books to "all the little sons and daughter that are ever asking for stories that are true." Children will read these books with interest and great profit. The stories are true and adapted to the understanding of childhood. The books are now in the hands of the binder and will be out in a short time in beautiful cloth binding.

CHRISTIAN - EVANGELIST

J. H. GARRISON, EDITOR.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

THE EXILED PROPHET

Or, WHAT JOHN SAW ON PATMOS

By J. G. ENCELL

Illustrated with thirty-five half-tone engravings. 245 pages. 12 mo. Cloth...$1.25

This work is prefaced by an essay on the Phophecy of Daniel by Dr. D. R. Dungan, covering a space of seventy pages.

In the remainder of the book will be found the author's understanding of the Book of Revelation reached after many years of careful study and investigation of this subject.

Many are of the opinion that Revelation is a sealed book, but such as hold that opinion will be convinced by a careful reading of this work by J. G. Encell that Revelation is something revealed.

SOME OPINIONS OF THIS BOOK.

"At the beginning of the book is an interesting Essay on Daniel, by D. R. Dungan. This essay is intended to prepare the reader for the explanation of things seen by John on Patmos. The author of the work proper takes the position that the things contained in Revelation are to be understood by some one at some time. If it were not so it would not be called the 'Revelation of Jesus Christ.' This book is one that will be read with profit by many."—Gospel Messenger, Mt. Morris, Ill.

"The 'Essay on the Book of Daniel,' which forms a most fitting introduction to this volume, has all the clear and careful thought which is characteristic of D. R. Dungan's style. The body of the book is given to a brief exposition of the most striking features of John's vision of the future church. For a number of years the author has been giving the substance of this book in a series of illustrated lectures. The marvel is that he has succeeded in condensing the work to its present form. It is suggestive and stimulating."—Christian Oracle, Chicago, Ill.

On The Rock

OR

Truth Stranger Than Fiction

A STORY OF A STRUGGLE AFTER THE TRUTH AS IT IS FOUND IN CHRIST.

By D. R. DUNGAN.

Many editions of this book have been sold, and the demand increases. It is the most popular book on FIRST PRINCIPLES ever published by our people.

This volume discusses no new themes, nor does it present novel ideas upon the old theme of Christianity. Its novelty is found in protesting against novelties in religion, and insisting upon the usages of the primitive Church. It adopts a method for the discussion of salvation from sin which is, it is hoped, adapted to the popular education on the religious issues of the day. It was written for the benefit of, and is dedicated to, the people, with the prayer and hope that it will be widely read, and that it will do them good.

The author has carefully avoided technical expressions and obscure phrases, in order that it might meet their wants. He has endeavored to take these questions from the exclusive hands of the theologians, and place them in the hands of the people for their own adjudication. Will they, like the Bereans, examine the Scriptures to see whether these things be so?

CURRENT EVENTS.

The trial of Matthew Stanley Quay for conspiracy to embezzle state funds has ended with his acquittal. The long and fruitless attempt of the Pennsylvania Legislature to elect a successor to Mr. Quay in the United States Senate has likewise ended by the adjournment of the legislature. The immediate consequence of these two events has been the appointment of Mr. Quay as his own successor by the governor of Pennsylvania. A proper respect for the United States courts forbids us to assert in the face of his acquittal that Mr. Quay is guilty, but no unprejudiced witness can maintain that all doubt of his guilt has been removed. We still maintain the right to hold as a private opinion that Mr. Quay is guilty on this particular charge, and we have certainly no right to doubt that he is still the type of the corrupt politician. Still, his acquittal by the court removed any legal disability to membership in the Senate. Of course, a condemned criminal cannot be seated, but a corrupt politician need not necessarily feel lonesome in that body.

But Governor Stone's right to appoint Mr. Quay or anybody else to the vacant seat in the Senate is a question quite independent of Mr. Quay's fitness for the place. The article of the constitution which the Governor cites as his authority for the appointment is as follows: "If vacancies happen by resignation or otherwise during the recess of the legislature of any state, the executive thereof may make temporary appointments until the next meeting of the legislature, which shall then fill such vacancy." This makes no provision for the case in which the legislature has an opportunity to fill the vacancy but fails to do so. The same situation has arisen several times before, and the precedents are all against the seating of the appointee in such a case. The decision of the case rests with the Senate itself, but the interesting feature in this instance is in the fact that there are three other states besides Pennsylvania which will be without senators during the next two years if this precedent is maintained. The Democratic legislature of Delaware failed to elect, and its Republican governor will certainly appoint a Republican. The Republican legislature of Utah failed to elect, and its Democratic governor will surely appoint a Democrat. The appointee in California would be a Republican. The next Senate will be an overwhelmingly Republican body, and upon that party, therefore, will rest the responsibility of the decision. We venture the opinion that the proposition to abandon congressional precedent and wrest the constitution of the United States in the interest of such a candidate as Mr. Quay is a heavy responsibility.

Our congratulation of ourselves over the inauguration of prohibition in the army came too soon. True, the army reorganization bill passed by the last Congress contained a definite prohibitory clause, but the interpretation of that bill by Attorney-General Griggs takes all the starch out of it. One point of long-standing complaint against army canteens is the practice of detailing soldiers to act as bartenders. The first part of the prohibitory clause of the army bill provides that no soldier shall be detailed for such service. The second part of it provides that "no other person be required or allowed to sell such liquors in any encampment or fort, or on any premises used for military purposes by the United States." One would suppose that this was sufficiently definite and complete, but the Attorney-General affects to believe that the emphasis is to be placed on the first part, which he says was the motive for passing the bill. Such an interpretation of law as this, based on a total disregard to its literal provisions, and on arbitrary assumption of a real meaning which does not appear in the text, cannot be too strongly condemned. The condemnation of it in the press has been, indeed, almost universal. It is not a question whether one believes in prohibition as a general policy. It is not even now a question whether one believes in prohibition for the army. The law has been passed. The question is whether one believes in enforcing the law. The law was passed as the result of long agitation against the sale of intoxicating liquors in the army. The practice of detailing soldiers to act as barkeepers is, of course, objectionable, but the main issue is not who sells the stuff, but whether it is sold or not. The Attorney-General may have motives of his own for his decision, but on the surface the motive does not appear to be an ardent desire for the enforcement of the law in the spirit in which it was passed.

Capt. Coghlan, like some other naval and military commanders, has opened his mouth and gotten his foot in it. In a speech before the Union League Club, of New York, and again before the Army and Navy Club, Capt. Coghlan gave what he calls an inside account of the relations between Admiral Dewey and the German Admiral Diederichs before Manila. The picture which he painted is one highly discreditable to to the German Admiral and calculated to give offense to the German authorities. As a private citizen, of course, Capt. Coghlan has a right to tell anything he knows about the situation at Manila, but as a captain in the navy he has no right to bring up again in an unpleasant manner the situation which has been closed. Admiral Diederichs has been removed from his command and Germany has done everything possible to maintain the friendliest relations with the American forces in the Philippines. Owing to the circumstances under which Capt. Coghlan's speeches were made, it may not be possible to give him an official reprimand, but he ought to be and will be made feel in some way the force of the Department's displeasure. Regrets have already been exchanged between the State Departments of the two countries, and the only phase of the matter which remains to be settled is that between the Captain and Secretary Long.

The retirement of Mr. Reed, of Maine, from the speakership of the House has been officially announced. The leading candidates now in the field are Mr. Sherman and Mr. Payne, of New York, and Mr. Hopkins, of Illinois. There is ample time for other names to be mentioned and other booms to be launched, and many doubtless will be. The retiring of Mr. Reed marks the passing of a great congressional leader. Even his bitterest opponents now in the hour of his voluntary retirement are disposed to admit the exceptional value of his service. He may have been a dictator, and the name "Czar Reed" may represent something of the real situation, but at any rate he has always been a strong leader with ideas of his own and a firm grasp on the situation. He has been conspicuously a man of "light and leading." His abandonment of the field of politics, in which he has won the highest prize short of the Presidency, in favor of the practice of law, indicates a not altogether healthful condition. For a man of Mr. Reed's eminent ability it would appear that politics ought to be of all employments the most attractive. True, its remuneration is less. The salary of the Speaker is $10,000 a year, and Mr. Reed is going now to an employment with a definite gurarantee of $50,000. But it will be difficult to imagine a situation in private life in which he gave as Speaker of the House of Representatives.

A situation has arisen in Arkansas similar to that which occurred in Illinois last year, when Governor Tanner prohibited the importation of negro miners to take the places vacated by the strikers at Virden. The operators have attempted to introduce negroes from Kentucky and St. Louis to take the place of the striking miners at Huntington, Ark., and Governor Dan W. Jones has instructed the sheriff of Sebastian County to prevent the negroes from landing. So far the situation is parallel with that in Illinois, but this case is complicated by the fact that Judge Rogers, of the Federal Court, has issued an injunction to be served by the United States Marshal on the sheriff. The governor reiterates his declaration that the negroes shall not be unloaded if the sheriff and his deputies can prevent it. The judge replies by sending his injunction after the sheriff. A clash between the state and Federal authorities seems inevitable. The legal right is clearly on the side of Judge Rogers. It may be highly undesirable in this case, as it was at Virden, to have the negro miners brought into the state, but the operators have a clear legal right to bring them in, and the railroad has an equally clear right to transport them. There will be trouble for the governor if he persists. Meanwhile both parties are waiting under arms.

The Mazet Investigating Committee is proceeding steadily with its work in New York, interrupted only by the occasional refusal of witnesses to answer questions. The case has not yet been decided as to whether or not witnesses will be compelled to answer questions, but steps are being taken to compel full answers to all questions. If Croker can refuse to state how much he got out of a deal involving a municipal contract, on the ground that it is his own business, it is hard to tell how any results can be arrived at. The whole point of the investigation is to find out to what extent Croker and his men have made public affairs their own business. The most interesting outcome of the investigation up to date has been a free and open statement by Mr. Croker of his views about municipal government. His statements constitute an explicit and unapologetic statement of the spoils system as he understands it. It is too early yet to predict any definite outcome of the investigation.

Operations in the Philippines have been transferred from the neighborhood of Vera Cruz, east of Manila, to the vicinity of Malolos in the north. The recall of the expedition from Vera Cruz under General Lawton was against the protest of the commander, but in accordance with the plan of General Otis. He wishes to use all the forces for the campaign in the north, and says it will be easier to recapture Vera Cruz when it is needed than to hold it. The sudden return of the Americans from Vera Cruz has given rise to suspicions that General Lawton's forces suffered in that campaign more severely than the reports have indicated. That belief is strengthenen by General Lawton's official statement that at least 100,000 men will be needed to complete the conquest of the Philippines. Two rather startling events have occurred during the week. One was the capture of fifteen Americans from the gunboat Yorktown, which was sent to Baler, on the east of Luzon, to release the Spanish garrison which was there surrounded by Filipinos. The other is the attack on the insurgent intrenchments four miles from Malolos, resulting in heavy American losses, including the death of Colonel Stotzenberg, of the First Nebraska.

Much excitement has been created in the Reichstag by the discussion of a meat inspection bill proposed by the German government. The bill proposes more strict inspection of German meat than has hitherto been demanded, but makes no change in the conditions for the importation of foreign meat. The protest against this has come chiefly from the Agrarian party, which maintains that German producers are being discriminated against. The exciting part of the debate has come from the use of the American "beef scandal" as an argument against the bill. Not content with using the actual facts that have been developed by our Investigation Commission, it has been assumed that the verdict of that commission was wholly unfavorable to American packers. "American packers have not scrupled to poison the American army, and therefore would have much less scruples in poisoning Germans." It appears probable that the bill will be passed in spite of the opposition.

Richard J. Oglesby, ex-governor of Illinois, died suddenly at his home near Lincoln, Ill., on Monday of this week, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. It can be said, with more truth than is usually contained in such a remark, that the story of his life is the history of his state during the corresponding period. He was, almost equally with Lincoln, a typical product of our Western soil. A plainsman of humble birth and poor beginnings, he participated in all the great movements with which he was contemporary. A soldier in the Mexican war, a prospector for gold during the California fever of '49, an ante-bellum abolition agitator in his native state, a major-general of volunteers in the Civil War, three times governor of Illinois and for one term United States Senator for the same state—these are the ways in which he served the commonwealth, and in all of them he endeared himself to the people as perhaps no other man in that state has ever done. His official titles were "General," "Senator" and "Governor," but the genuine and universal affection which was felt for him by the people of Illinois was expressed better by his unofficial title, "Uncle Dick."

WHY WE SHOULD STUDY THE BIBLE.

Whatever else may be said of the Bible, it is safe to say that no other book is so universally read as it is. Many and various are the motives which prompt men to read it. Some read it in order to find fault with it and to get arguments against it in order to overthrow the faith of believers. These men select the difficult and obscure passages and generally misconstrue them and parade them as characteristic of the literature of the Bible. Others read it on account of its antiquity and because it treats of certain subjects not treated in any other book. They read it as part of universal history. Others read it because of the high character of its literature, and they desire to improve their style by familiarity with Bible figures, metaphors and forms of speech. It is often read by men who search its pages for passages to prove their theories or doctrines. Because the Bible is a book that is held in very general veneration every wild theorist or partisan appeals to it for support of his theory. How familiar a certain class of passages is to the average religious partisan, and how unfamiliar all the rest of the Bible is! Even a preacher is in danger of looking upon the Bible simply as a collection of texts or homiletic material for use in his sermons.

We do not say that all these motives are illegitmate. The Bible is worthy of being studied because of its antiquity, because of its history, because of the high order of its literature, and because of the lofty character of the themes it treats, which are well calculated to widen the mental horizon. But these are not the highest motives for studying the sacred writings. They are the record of God's dealings with men and of the religious experiences, aspirations and ideas of the holiest and wisest men of the past, through whom God has communicated His will to the race. It is history written from the divine point of view, which distinguishes it from ordinary history. It is poetry touched with the divine fire and purified and ennobled. It is instruction concerning human duty which has been tested in the divine crucible; and it is revelation concerning God and human destiny conveyed by the Holy Spirit through chosen vessels. It is prophecy, allegory, sermon, proverb and parable, all dominated by divine love and divine wisdom, seeking to enlighten, encourage, renew and save men.

We go to the Bible at different times for different purposes, if we are making the right use of it. Sometimes when a question of duty arises we go to it for instruction, to find out what the mind of the Spirit is concerning the matter in question. In such cases we seek to understand the principles which it inculcates and apply them to the matter in hand. Sometimes we go to the Bible for spiritual stimulation. We feel that our ideals are too low and we turn to the Bible and find such spiritual tonic in its lofty conceptions of truth and righteousness, in the characters therein portrayed, in the spirit that runs through all the sacred writings, that we close the book with the feeling that our life is not what it ought to be, and that we must tone it up to a higher standard.

There are times when we are oppressed with many burdens and depressed in spirit and we go to the old Book for comfort and consolation. We do not read long before we find that the holy men of old had the same experiences and conflicts that we now have, and when one of them cries out, "Why art thou cast down, O my soul, and why art thou disquieted within me?" we intuitively feel that this is our question which the psalmist asks; and when we read the antidote, "Hope thou in God," we instantly recognize that this alone is the remedy which will meet our case. If the shadows of bereavement have fallen upon our home, we instinctively turn to the New Testament, where the earth seems to be bathed in the light of heaven and the spiritual world seems to come so very close to the world of time and sense. Christ's view of the life hereafter and the relation of death thereto soothes our hearts and calms our fears, and we feel that, after all, death to the Christian is only going home to be with God.

There are times in our experience when we go to the Bible for its pure and lofty devotional spirit. Where else are the soul's passionate longings, its devout gratitude, its joyful praises, so truly and nobly expressed as on these inspired pages? As we read, the fire of devotion is kindled in our hearts, and sometimes we pause to let the thought sink into our hearts and make its due impression. As we read on we feel that our souls are being bathed in the atmosphere of heaven, and our thoughts and our affections are being lifted up and purified.

We plead for a daily perusal of the Bible, if it be but for a few moments. It is not the amount we read so much as the spirit in which we read and the use we make of what we read. But we are assured of this fact —that one of the needs among all Christians of to-day in order to a truer, fuller, richer spiritual life is the daily, thoughtful, prayerful perusal of God's Word. We would urge this upon all of our readers as a source of mental illumination and of spiritual power, for which there is no substitute.

Hour of Prayer.

THE WHITENED HOME FIELD.

(Jno. 4:35-38; Acts 1:7-9.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, May 3rd.)

(Concert of Prayer for Missions.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The divine law of world-wide evangelization is to begin at the center or where you are, and work out in ever-widening circles until the whole world is reached.

The first passage cited above gives the sequel to the interesting story of the conversation which Jesus held with the woman of Samaria as He sat on the well curb at noontide near the city of Sychar. The woman had been so impressed with His teachings and his insight into her life that she had left her waterpot at the well and ran back to the city to tell the people concerning the Prophet whom she had seen and heard. Her manner and her testimony were of such a character as to draw great crowds of people to the well to see and hear for themselves. As Jesus saw them coming in crowds He said to His disciples, "Say not ye there are yet four months and then cometh the harvest? Behold, I say unto you, Lift up your eyes, look on the fields, that they are white already unto harvest."

Of all missionary fields, Samaria, perhaps, would have been the last one to be selected by the disciples of Jesus. They regarded it as the most unpromising; and yet what a ready response to the teaching of the Master, and what a manifest eagerness to hear Him! This must have been a rebuke to the unbelief of the disciples, as it ought to be a rebuke to our unbelief of to-day when we hesitate to undertake certain mission fields in our own country because of the supposed obstacles in the way of success. The Samaritans were a mongrel people, being mixed in their blood and in their religion. They were the foreign population that had come into Palestine. The disciples felt concerning them, we suppose, much as we feel toward foreign populations in our own country, such as the Germans, Bohemians, Italians, Poles and others.

How little we are doing to reach these foreigners that are in our midst with the simple gospel of Jesus Christ! We regard their language, their customs, their religious views, as almost insuperable obstacles in the way. And yet they are human beings, just as we are, with the same spiritual needs and aspirations. They need the gospel, and the responsibility rests upon those who have it to teach it to them. Imperfect as their religion may be, it may have served as a preparation for something better. If the Master were here in person as of old, He would not go round these ungospeled masses, as He did not go round Samaria, but would go to them and sow the seed which should soon prepare the way for the harvest.

The passage cited from Acts indicates the divine law of expansion—Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria, and the uttermost parts of the earth. This is the natural order of procedure both from the economic and religious point of view. But there are motives, to-day, why we should evangelize the masses of people in our own country, including the foreign populations, which did not exist in the first century. We have here a government which has not been imposed upon us by kings and potentates, but one which we have made ourselves. Its perpetuity depends upon the prevalence of morality and religion. The motive of patriotism, therefore, prompts us to the work of evangelizing the people of these United States.

Besides that, we need to save America for the world's sake. Once the religious forces of this country are thoroughly enlisted in a united effort for the world's evangelization, it cannot be long until the whole world shall have heard the story of Jesus and his love. There are no whiter fields under the blue dome of heaven than may be found in our own beloved land. The soil has been prepared, much seed has already been sown, and laborers are needed to thrust the sickles into the ripened grain. Other soils are ready for the seed, and how soon the harvest may follow seed time is shown in this visit of Jesus to Samaria.

This is the Jubilee Year of our Home Missionary Society in the United States. Special efforts are being made to raise a Jubilee Fund of $100,000 to push forward the work of evangelizing our own country. Gratitude to God for past blessings upon our work, wisdom that recognizes that opportunities which now exist for aggressive work will soon be lost, patriotism which pleads with us trumpet-tongued for the salvation of our own nation, the needs of the great wide world that should be supplied through the co-operation of American churches—all these vast motives urge us to a generous offering for the cause of Home Missions.

PRAYER.

O Thou God of Nations, whose hand has been manifest in our national history, we thank Thee for this great free Republic of the West; we thank Thee that in Thy providence it was established by men of God, who believed in righteousness and truth and justice, and who laid the foundations of this government upon these immovable principles. We beseech Thee that we, their descendants, who have entered into the rich inheritance which they have left us, may seek to disseminate the gospel of Thy grace, which alone can make men free and fit them for the duties of freemen. Bless our Home Mission work and our Home Missionaries, and all the churches in this great land, and enable them to make such an outpouring of generous gifts as will evince the highest order of patriotism and the truest loyalty to Jesus Christ our only King. For His name's sake. Amen!

Did you ever hear of a man who had striven all his life faithfully and singly toward an object and in no measure obtained it? If a man constantly aspires, is he not elevated? Did ever a man try heroism, magnanimity, truth, sincerity, and find that there was no advantage in them,—that it was vain endeavor?—H. D. Thoreau.

THE PROSPECT.

"Watchman, what of the night?" The hearts of the leaders in our missionary work are full of anxiety for the larger prosperity of our Zion. Their gaze is fixed on the horizon of the Jubilee Convention, and they are asking eagerly of our great brotherhood, "What shall be the outcome of these fifty years of effort, prayer and sacrifice? Will the reports at that convention be such as to gladden or sadden our hearts? Will our gifts this year be commensurate with our opportunity and duty?" We can hardly hope that the result will be such as we would desire, for nothing short of the entire consecration of our entire membership, in service and sacrifice, would measure our debt to God. But I think there are some signs of promise which ought to be named, as encouragement for the faithful and stimulus to the listless. I believe that we may answer the question with which we began with the cheering response, "The morning cometh."

And, first, the prospect is bright because of the sure promise of God. When Judson was asked what was the prospect of success in Burman missions he answered, "As bright as the promise of God!" It is lack of faith to withhold sowing until some sign of the harvest is visible. It is in the barren field the farmer scatters the seed. Not from what we see but what we believe comes our hope of a harvest. To the faithful sower the Lord says, "He that supplieth seed to the sower and bread for food shall suppy and multiply your seed for sowing, and increase the fruits of your righteousness." We may be Paul's to plant and Apollos' to water, but we may safely leave to God the giving of the increase. His word shall not return to him void, but it shall accomplish that whereunto it was sent forth. The gospel is yet the power of God unto salvation; where it is loyally proclaimed believers will be the more added unto the Lord. We need to think less of counting the converts and more of recounting the story of Christ's love. One hundred thousand Christ-filled lives will inevitably bring another hundred thousand into the blessed host. "According to your faith be it unto you," is still the word of our Master to all who seek his blessing, and our success will be proportioned to our faith.

The prospect is bright because of the new zeal for evangelization that is burning in the heart of our people. If there has been a time when our ministry was disposed to underestimate the importance of reaching out after the unconverted, and to confine their preaching to the culture of the saints rather than the conversion of sinners, that time is not now. Thousands of pastors are awaking to a new sense of the need of teaching the simple, primary principles of our holy religion to the unconverted, and of urging upon the religious world a consideration of the fundamentals of our glorious plea. Many pastors are cultivating their evangelistic gifts, not in preparation for a change of fields, but that they may more fully and effectually preach the whole counsel of God to men. Never were true evangelists in such demand among our churches. While energetic and ignorant sensationalism has not yet wholly disappeared from among them, I believe that as a class our evangelists are men of whose ministry God richly approves, and their labors are being made fruitful in bringing many to the Lord. Our hope for future blessings from God depends upon our cultivation of this spirit of evangelization. If we shall bring one hundred thousand souls to Christ during this Jubilee Year, as we surely will, it will be a sign of the larger consecration of our ministry and membership to the work of preaching Christ and him crucified.

The prospect is bright because of the increasing tendency of our various great interests to unity of counsel and action. Nearly all of our state boards are now declaredly and actually auxiliary to our general board, an end which we have been seeking for years to attain. While the management of the mission work, in states where we are strong enough to maintain a vigorous organization, is wisely left in the hands of the state board, this is understood to mean, not a separate classification of interests, but a mere division of labor for better results. All the fruits of our Home Mission work are gathered together in the annual report of our general board, and the Disciples of every state rejoice together in a common victory for the truth. Then, too, we are coming to see that all the varied interests of the kingdom of Christ are worthy of our fostering care, as means to the great end of the world's salvation. Christian Education, Ministerial Relief, and work for our young people through the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor have taken their places beside the Evangelizing and Church Extension departments of our work, and our national conventions give ample and cheerful recognition to all these collateral interests of our organized missionary societies.

The prospect is bright because of the marvelous growth in numbers during the last few years. Tens of thousands are accepting Christ every year under the labors of our ministry. Now churches are organized almost daily, and Sunday-schools and Endeavor Societies are of necessity growing more numerous. Our colleges are educating scores of young men for the ministry, whose services are eagerly sought to lead in the work of our pastorless congregations. The base of supplies is being strongly enforced, and we are reaching a wider constituency every day. The preachers who are in the van in this work of enlisting volunteers for Christ are men whose sympathy with our missionary work is active and generous, and a large proportion of the new converts enters the church with some knowledge of the larger mission of the gospel and somewhat of real willingness to sacrifice for its propogation throughout the world.

The prospect is bright because of the indications that our people are beginning to see the responsibilities of wealth in Christian hands. Heretofore our mission treasuries have received but few gifts above a thousand dollars, while the hundereds have not been sufficiently numerous to become an entirely common experience. In the past two or three years a change has become manifest, and we are now looking for larger gifts than of yore. Such rare givers as Gov. Drake, A. M. Atkinson, T. W. Phillips and a few of their ilk will not be so lonesome as they used to be. Many other wealthy Disciples will join them in splendid offerings for the cause of world-wide evangelization, and our offerings will iucrease by multiplication rather than by mere addition. Our missionary treasuries are receiving more money every year and a decrease in receipts by any one of them would be cause for surprise. This Jubilee Year of our American Christian Missionary Society promises to reach a degree of enthusiastic giving such as will afford an impetus to all our other co-operative enterprises. Gov. Drake's generous gift of $5,000 has been recently duplicated by "A Friend," while other gifts of $300 to $500 are coming with encouraging frequency. There ought to be a large number of our brethren and sisters to make an offering of $5,000 for Home Missions. The income from this sum will keep a missionary in the home field perpetually, since he can supplement it easily by enough more raised on the ground to give him a modest support.

The prospect is bright because of the increased prayerfulness of our brotherhood. It is certain that in behalf of missions at least we will pray more this year than ever before. The monthly "Concert of Prayer for Missions," provided for in our "Uniform Topic Cards," and published so extensively in our papers, must inevitably foster the missionary spirit of our people. So long as we make this cause the burden of our prayers and Bible study one week in every month, we are sure to feel its effect upon the missionary zeal of our congregations. Our offerings will be increased in amount, more of the members will have fellowship in the work and the churches will feel in countless ways the good effect of this movement in missionary education. In my judgment we shall see next October the largest gathering by far of our brotherhood in the Jubilee Convention at Cincinnati. All our preachers seem to have it upon their hearts; many of our business men are already laying their plans to attend; while the sisters, God bless them, all seem to be counting on going. Let us pray and work for the greatest convention in our history, and especially by making our offerings this year the most general and generous that we have ever dreamed of attaining. One hundred thousand dollars for the American Christian Missionary Society by the first of next October is the least for which we ought to plan. Let the May offering be so large as to ensure this result.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

Editor's Easy Chair.

During his late visit to Chicago, Gov. Roosevelt, in a speech before the political club whose guest he was, made a strong plea for what he called the "strenuous life" in civic affairs. It is a good phrase, and one that strikes at an alarming evil in our American political life. This evil is the temptation of well-to-do, respectable people to stand aloof from the stress and struggle going on in nearly all the cities, and in the states as well, to secure honesty and efficiency in the administration of public affairs. The attempt to correct prevailing errors and abuses, to lift up the public life to a little higher level, to bring the Ten Commandments into politics and the Golden Rule into our industrial life, involves a good deal of inconvenience, of hard work, and sometimes bitter opposition. The temptation is strong, therefore, to avoid all this rather than throw one's self into the midst of the struggle on the side of truth and righteousness. To yield to this temptation is not only cowardly, but a little reflection will show that it is not even moral. How can Christian people be the salt of this world unless they come in contact with the world's life—in its business, in its politics, in its social usages—and that with a view to purification?

But we have been thinking of the "strenuous life" as applied to Christians. How many professed Christians there are who are seeking to have an easy time in the world—to avoid hardships, suffering and cross-bearing! How few there be, relatively, who understand the meaning of discipleship to Jesus Christ! What low ideals of Christian life and service prevail in our churches! "If any man would be my disciple," said Jesus, "let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me." Are we doing that? Are there many of us making any serious effort to do it? What kind of a life did Jesus live? As we all know, it was a life of unselfish, sacrificial service for human good. Does He expect His disciples to live the same kind of a life? Most certainly he does. His was indeed the "strenuous life." How full of toil, of daily ministering to human need, was the life of Him who "went about doing good," and whose meat and drink it was to do his Father's will! But alas how many of His professed followers to-day are living lives of luxurious ease and idleness, neither bearing on their heart any of the weight of the world's woe, nor seeking to enlighten the burden that is crushing the life out of the unfortunate that are all about them! O for the "strenuous life" in the church of Jesus Christ!

There is something, however, to be grateful for. We do not believe there was ever before so much discontent with our standard of Christian living as there is in the religious world to-day. Thousands are asking themselves the question, as they have never asked it before—"Am I a Christian in anything but name and profession?" "Am I following Christ as He expects me to follow Him?" "Am I living an unselfish life and seeking to make the lives about me brighter and purer?" Many of them are coming to the conclusion that their lives have been in great part a libel on their profession, and that they have been only nominal Christians. This is a "divine discontent;" it is the Spirit of God working in the hearts of the people and giving them a clearer vision of Christ and of the Christ-life. Out of this will come a more earnest and strenuous Christian life. "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness, for they shall be filled." This yearning after a truer and more genuine Christian life is a sure prophecy of better things to come.

The encouraging feature about this modern hunger for a deeper spiritual life is that it does not, as of old, tend to monasticism or separating one's self from the affairs of men and living in solitude. That was, perhaps, a right feeling, but wrongly directed. The present desire for righteousness finds its ideal in Christ, who mingled with men and sought to purify and sweeten all the channels of life. It seeks to find in social service, in addition to individual holiness of life, its legitimate fulfillment. It is manifesting itself in "Social Settlements," where the cultivated and well-to-do take up their abode among the poor and the outcasts of society, in our great cities, and seek to help them to better modes of living; in large benefactions on the part of the rich which, without injuring self-respect or cultivating pauperism, have for their object the helping of the poor to help themselves; in mission work at home and abroad; in caring for the fatherless and the widow, and in a thousand ways seeking to minister to the manifold needs of men. This is the Christ-idea, and it is sure to prevail.

If this leaven of a purer and more vital Christianity shall continue to work in our churches until the mass of our church membership has accepted the higher ideal of Christian life, and has actually entered upon the experiment of seeking to reproduce the life of Christ in their lives, we may anticipate, as the result of this reformation in the church, such a tide of spiritual power as the church has not felt since the apostolic age, and in the presence of which infidelity and agnosticism will alike be dumb. Nothing is so needed to-day to convert the world to the religion of Christ as the sincere and strenuous effort on the part of Christians to live that life every day in the week and carry it into all the departments of human activity. Before this sort of a revival sectarian lines will grow dim and the church will begin to experience something of that unity for which the Master prayed so fervently. Is not the closing decade of the 19th century preparing the way for such a revival?

Questions and Answers.

In our ministerial meeting a short time since this question was propounded by an Episcopal minister and backed up by Presbyterian and Baptist ministers: "If baptism be one of the acts by which we are brought into Christ's kingdom, and also into his church, how is it that when a man backslides so that the church puts him out of their fellowship, according to the Scriptures, thereby declaring that he is a sinner, that when such an one is brought to repentance and restored we do not demand of him that he be rebaptized?" C. H. Trout.

Piqua, Ohio.

The short answer to this question would be that no church can vote a person into membership in Christ's church, nor can it vote him out. The steps by which one becomes a constitutional member of the church of the Lord Jesus were not devised by the church, but by the Head of the church. These terms involve the putting away of sin and the acceptance of Jesus Christ as Savior and Lord, through faith confessed with the mouth and in obedience to him in the initiatory ordinance of baptism. These are spiritual steps, and when taken in the right spirit and motive bring one into covenant relation with God. But it often happens that, through the weakness of the flesh, persons who have been sincere in their motives in taking these steps stumble and fall. This does not mean that they cease to be Christians, but that they are erring Christians and need to seek forgiveness for their sins. Sometimes it happens that one becomes so ensnared in the meshes of sin that he refuses, for the time, to be brought to repentance. In such cases, when all other means have been exhausted with a view to saving the man, the act of withdrawal or suspension of fellowship is resorted to as a final effort to bring the offending one to repentance. If this succeed, and the erring member confesses his fault and otherwise manifests his repentance, then the church renews its fellowship, as the member renews his allegiance to Christ and to his church. Baptism in such case would have no significance, unless it were first determined that the person had never been converted, and hence had never been baptized in the scriptural import of that word. There are such cases where the parties feel that they have never yielded proper obedience to this command of Christ, and ask the privilege of doing so. The propriety of yielding to this request does not rest upon the fact that the person has sinned since his baptism, but upon the belief that he had never in sincerity of purpose obeyed the Lord in that command. The confusion in the question of these ministers arises, we think, from not discriminating between a real and formal membership in the church. The former grows out of faith in and obedience to Christ, and exists in spite of the action of any ecclesiastical authority. It is membership in the body of Christ without respect to denominational or sectarian lines. The latter is the acknowledgment of the fitness of such person for membership in some formal way by some congregation or ecclesiastical body. It is not in the power of any church or any ecclesiastical body to exclude any member from vital relationship with Christ which makes him a member of his body. The most that a congregation can do is, when the conduct of a member gives evidence that he has himself broken his relation with Christ and forsaken his Lord, to recognize that fact by the public withdrawal. This distinction seems to us to clear up the confusion which seems to have existed in the minds of the ministers referred to.

Does John 5:18 teach the possibility of our reaching a sinless state in this world or the doctrine of entire sanctification? R. A. S.

The passage referred to is in the apostle John's characteristic style, in which he draws the distinction without shading between those who have been begotten of God and those who have not. It is a strong assertion of the fundamental distinction between the true believer in Christ and the unbeliever as relates to conduct and character. The passage may be pressed too far in making it teach the impossibility of sinning at all, but it certainly does teach that a sinful life is utterly inconsistent with the fact of having been begotten of God.

I have met a person who argues that the Lord's Supper is for the remission of sins of the Christian, comitted after his baptism. Is this correct? Bert Wilson.

Minden, Neb.

The teaching of the New Testament does not justify this view. Sins committed by Christians must be repented of and God's forgiveness must be sought by the sinning one. In so far as the Lord's Supper may serve to remind us of our shortcomings and lead us to a truer and deeper repentance it helps us to obtain remission of sins, but in no other way. "If we walk in the light as He is in the light we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin."

Current Religious Thought

The following summary of the very interesting address on "Democracy" delivered by Dr. Van Dyke in connection with the convocation exercises of the University of Chicago, April 1st, appeared in one of the Chicago papers:

By democracy we mean, not a fixed theory of the state, nor a particular form of government. We mean a tendency, a spirit, a current of ideas and aspirations. It is a sense, not of equality of all men as a fact, but of their potential equality as a hope. It is this endeavor to realize this hope, not by the concentration of power in the hands of a few, but by the diffusion of power in the hands of the many. These, it seems to me, are some of the notes of the true democracy as we see it working out its salvation with fear and trembling in our own country. Now as regards this fear and trembling, let us acknowledge frankly that they are not without reason, while at the same time we maintain that they are perfectly consistent with the most firm and loyal faith. We believe that democracy is right, that it will triumph in the end, that the magnificent experiment which is now in progress in our country will result in a splendid success. But we are not unconscious of certain inconveniences which attend the experimental stages, nor ought we to be careful of certain dangers which threatened to delay our national advance, and possibly to divert it from its true course so widely that we may be forced into one of those periods of reaction by which a nation that has too hastily followed a false lead returns upon its course in order to get a fresh start.

But in our material prosperity, our rapid advance in mechanical inventions and arts of life, the wide diffusion of what the old divines called "creature comforts," and in the consequent good humor and self-complacency which prevails among the different classes of society lies one of our greatest perils. We are in danger of making too much of these things, and imagining that there is something permanent and stable about them. We are inclined to introduce "I believe in machinery" as an article of our creed, and to suppose that an American has only to present himself before the Judge of the universe with a new kind of sewing machine, or an improved telephone, or a rapid-fire gun, to be crowned at once with glory and received into the kingdom of heaven. We are tempted to rely upon our physical prosperity, our wealth, our industrial advance as a pledge of security, and to adopt a policy of letting the more important things take care of themselves.

Thus it comes to pass that a tone of airy carelessness pervades our political life. Large powers are suffered to fall into the hands of small and incompetent men. Our city governments speak with various brogues. We receive without discrimination, and almost without thought, the miscellaneous hordes of immigrants who are poured upon our shores. Our national digestion is powerful, but there is a point at which it may break down, and it is a serious question whether the signs of political and social dyspepsia are not already apparent. A democracy falling into the hands of those who do not understand what it means, nor at heart believe in it, swiftly transforms itself into a tyranny or into an anarchy. A republic must have moral and intellectual foundations.

The corner-stone of democracy is culture. Culture must begin and continue with a fine disregard of pecuniary returns. It must be catholic, genial, disinterested. Its object is to make the shoemaker go beyond his last, and the clerk beyond his desk, and the surveyor beyond his chain, and the lawyer beyond his brief, and the doctor beyond his prescription, and the preacher beyond his sermon.

What we need at present is not new colleges, with a power of conferring degrees, but more power in the existing colleges to make men. To this end let them have a richer endowment, a fuller equipment, but above all a revival of the creative ideal. And let everything be done to bring together the high school, the normal school, the grammar school, the primary school and the little red schoolhouse school in the harmony of this ideal. The university shall still stand in the place of honor, if you will, but only because it bears the clearest and most steadfast witness that the end of culture is to create men who can see clearly, imagine nobly and think steadily.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

SECOND DECADE.

OUR FIRST MISSIONARY AND HIS WORK.

B. B. TYLER.

Mr. Burnet explained his letter to Dr. Barclay as follows:

"Bro. Barclay has been successful beyond precedent in the Holy City. This is undeniable. The point, also, which he occupies is the most fruitfnl in associations and soul-stirring recollections, and is the most pregnant of hopes of any spot on our planet. There is consequently more desire among our brethren for the triumph of the Barclaian heroism than for the favorable solution of any other providential problem now in our horizon. This enthusiasm always augurs well for any cause; none can succeed without it. I was deeply penetrated with this sentiment when Dr. Barclay proposed a field hitherto so barren of evangelical results. It was evident that more interest would be taken in this mission than in any other. This reconciled me to the effort, though all history had taught us the impracticability of the field. Good has been done, and the probabilities are in favor of still greater good, after the present difficulties between the Turk and the Bear of the North have been composed.

"After Bro. Barclay had been two years in Jerusalem, with consent of the board I addressed him a letter containing, among other matters, the questions which he has answered in his communication last published. It was due to him that the wants of his family should be respected. They were isolated from society and were cut off from the world at the time of its most rapid strides in the paths of material and intellectual progress. This is an immense sacrifice to be made by the father and mother and three children just entering upon manhood and womanhood. It was proper and pertinent to offer an honorable retreat to such faithful soldiers from a position attended with so many hardships. This was certainly due to them, when it was known that the modesty and faithfulness of the missionaries would have impelled them to perhaps unjustifiable sacrifice rather than complain or murmur. These questions, therefore, indicate no change of view or feeling in our minds. They were asked as an act of justice to the mission family. The mission will continue unless a threatening state of war should, for a time, require its removal to an adjoining country."

Facts on record show that Dr. Barclay, as Mr. Burnet says, was "successful beyond precedent in the Holy City." "Hitherto," Jerusalem as a mission field had been "barren of evangelical results." It was the "threatening state of war" that in 1854 caused Dr. Barclay with his family to temporarily abandon this most interesting field.

Under the preaching and teaching of Dr. Barclay, men turned to the Lord. Some with whom he in came contact saw the way of the divine requirements more clearly. Men of distinction, sojourning in Jerusalem, were baptized by our representative. Dr. Zimpel, who was spoken of in the literature of the time as "a distinguished homœpathic physician," was baptized. In a letter to the corresponding secretary the missionary said: "A few weeks ago I had the pleasure of introducing into the fold of the Redeemer four of the lost sheep of the house of Israel. These first fruits of the mission, consisting of a mother and three grown children, were buried with their Savior in in baptism near the Damascus gate, in one of the pools so abundant within and without the city, and give the strongest evidence that they have risen to walk in newness of life. There were present at this baptism spectators from each quarter of the globe, who gazed in mute astonishment at this strange sight, behaving with the utmost propriety. But no sooner was it noised abroad through the city than it excited the greatest disturbance; not so much among bigoted Jews as among Protestants—Christians!" He said that "were it merely my object to get members into the church I could soon have quite a number of respectable persons." In a short time a church was organized on Mount Zion. This church the missionary was especially anxious to keep pure. He gave the following account of "two valuable accessions to our little flock" under date of May 14, 1852: "Mr. Lazarus Murad, the brother of our consul at Jaffa, has been employed by me as teacher and dragoman ever since our arrival here. . . . . He speaks the Armenian, Turkish, Arabic and English languages fluently, and Italian, German and French less perfectly." This man was anxious to preach, and Dr. Barclay had such confidence in his integrity and ability that he desired the board in Cincinnati to employ him as an assistant in the mission. Mr. Murad was born in Bethlehem and brought up in Jerusalem. D. S. Burnet assured Dr. Barclay of the great pleasure the reports from the field gave and said: "Be so kind as to present me to Bro. Lazarus Murad, your future coadjutor. May the Lord give you confort in his aid, and to you both great success."

The Holy Scriptures were in demand. They were circulated in many languages. Men sought to understand their teaching. Inquirers were met every day. The practice of the healing art gave the missionary constant access to the people under favorable conditions. The beginning of the work was more successful than had been expected. The future was radiant. Hope was buoyant. But disease came to the missionary's family. Sarah and John were "sick nigh unto death." Their illness was protracted. Such was the report of the devoted father. During this season of anxious suspense evangelical work was almost entirely suspended. The Lord, however, was gracious. The loved son and daughter were restored to health. In the midst of this bitter experience Dr. Barclay reported the baptism of two Greeks. Two other persons were believed to be near the kingdom. The serious illness here spoken of came from a determination to remain in Jerusalem through the entire year. This was unwise. The effort was not made again. The fact is noted in the reports of the missionary to the board that a German lady, after listening to his luminous expositions of the gospel, "cast in her lot with us." Much was expected from this accession. Again there was disappointment. Death soon claimed the German woman. Mr. Murad suffered from a protracted and almost fatal illness, so prevalent and virulent was the fever that three-fourths of the inhabitants of some of the villages in the vicinity of Jerusalem died during this season. The midweek meeting of the little congregation in the Holy City was temporarily abandoned and only one meeting was held on the Lord's day. The most intense and determined opposition to the work of Dr. Barclay came from men who called themselves by the name of the Christ whom he preached and in whose blessed name he wrought. But everything promised well for the large and permanent success of the Jerusalem mission at the end of its first and second years. It is true that men and money were needed, but with the limited force and the still more limited financial resources, our first effort in the foreign mission field was remarkably successful. Men from the ends of the earth came to Jerusalem. Dr. Barclay met them, explained to them the way of salvation, induced them into the way and sent them on their journeys rejoicing in their new faith, and hope and love.

THE CALL TO A PERSONAL AND VITAL RELATIONSHIP WITH GOD THROUGH JESUS CHRIST.

C. C. ROWLISON.

(A SERMON.)

III. THE APOSTOLIC VIEW. — As his disciples went into the world preaching the gospel, which he had commissioned them to proclaim, this was the central point of their teaching. There was, at one time, a very determined effort by the Jews, who had accepted Jesus as the Messiah, to compel the circumcision of Gentile Christians and to drive them to the observance of the law of Moses. Had this succeeded, "Christian" would have become the name of a petty Jewish sect, and perhaps Jesus would not to-day be known; his name would have only reached us as one of the fanatical claimants to the Jewish Messiahship. But his life had been too deeply planted in his immediate followers to permit this. To the apostle Paul, perhaps more than to all others, is due this rescue of Christianity from Judaism. The inexplicable power of the Christ-life had so permeated and transformed the character and doctrine of the great apostle that he was able to exclaim: "I have been crucified with Christ; yet I live; and yet no longer I, but Christ liveth in me: and that life which I now live in the flesh I live in faith, the faith which is in the Son of God, who loved me and gave himself up for me." And this thought of Christ dwelling and living in him is the central thought in all his writings. What the law was unable to accomplish, that was effected by the crucified Christ. Through the Lord Jesus Christ Paul was delivered from that bondage which the law only riveted the more firmly, because it intensified the sense of sin without being able to set men free from sin. "For freedom did Christ set you free," he declares to his Galatian converts. And, as though summing up the whole of the gospel in one single phrase, he exclaims, "Christ in you, the hope of glory!" His whole conception of the church is in accordance with this. We are as intimately joined to Christ, as the Head, as are the members of the body in the physical constitution. With him the church is to Christ as the bride to the husband, which in personal unity is ideally unsurpassed. The difference in the new life and relationship of the Christian is as though he had died and risen again, which, indeed, he ideally has done in the inductive ordinance of baptism. "Are ye ignorant," he says, "that all we who were baptized into Christ were baptized into his death?" We were buried, therefore, with him through baptism into death: that like as Christ was raised from the dead through the glory of the Father, so also we might walk in newness of life." "If ye, then, were raised together with Christ, seek the things that are above, where Christ is, seated at the right hand of God. For ye died, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall be manifested, then shall we also be manifested with him in glory." Thus he often affirms that "as many of you as were baptized into Christ did put on Christ."

And if the ordinance of baptism is the symbolic death of the old man, and the resurrection of the new to the life in Christ, so also the ordinance of the Lord's Supper has a similar significance. Men may, in its observance, eat and drink condemnation to their own souls, because they do not discern the Lord's body. It is the continual feast upon his life, "the bread that came down from heaven," which this ordinance would help us to attain; so that with Christ our meat and our drink shall be to do the will of the Father, and to accomplish his work.

Paul does not have a great deal to say about the doctrines of Christ; his whole theme is Christ himself. When he is beginning that marvelous career as a missionary in Europe, when he is compassing sea and land to proclaim the gospel, when he is enduring imprisonments and scourgings, when he is stoned and reviled for the name of his Master—he is not anxious to establish some theological view of the nature of Christ, or to give criteria for recognizing the true church, or to defend some partisan position. But he writes, "Yea, verily, and I count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus, my Lord: that I may know him and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, becoming conformed unto his death; if by any means I may attain unto the resurrection of the dead." When, after years of such faithful effort for the cause of his Master, he realizes that "the time of his departure is at hand," his confidence does not rest in the thought of his profound knowledge of God, or of the mysteries of the universe; he does not fold his hands in death, having attained a complacent contemplation of the mysterious change, or perhaps of annihilation, into which he is about to pass—not in stoical fashion, remarking that the gods were stronger than he, and that the noblest thing for a man to do is to meekly submit. His faith and hope are not based upon the impersonal doctrines of abstract goodness and intangible truth. All his hope, all his confidence, are wrapped up in his close personal relationship with his Master. "For I know HIM whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."

Brethren, we must never forget that Christianity is a personal relationship to a personal God, or it is nothing. The church has hever entirely lost this conception; but the darkest days of her history have been those days in which God was supposed to be so remotely removed from men by their sins that they could have no direct communion with him. When the only approach to God was through the mediating priest or interceding saint, it is no wonder that moral purity and fervent spirituality were wanting, and that men sought salvation through exact ceremonial observance, and supposed the gift of God could be bought with gold. As it was with Judaism under the influence of the Pharisees, so it was in the Middle Ages when the institution and the outward observances became everything. The individual was lost; God was lost; religion was lost.

In closing let me ask, What, after eighteen centuries of Christian thought and Christian experience, is the deepest and most real truth to which the world has attained? It is the truth of the personality of God, of our personal dependence upon God, of the vital unity of man with God. There is a tendency with some to-day to say that simple goodness is all the God there is, that immortality is no more probable than annihilation, that personality is the one most illusory of fleeting phenomena. How truly speaks the poet:

"That each who seems a separate whole
Should move his rounds, and fusing all,
The skirts of self again should fall
Remerging in the general soul.

Is faith as vague as all unsweet?
Eternal form shall still divide
The eternal soul from all beside;
And I shall know him when we meet."

To think oneself religious without being in personal relationship with a personal God would be like the hermit supposing himself a social being. The hermit has no father, no mother, no brother or sister, no wife, no children, no nation, no home. He creates his own universe; his thoughts are his only companions, and when the spark of life vanishes his little world is annihilated. This is not life; there could be no better description of death. Personality, a personal God; my personal relation to him, my dependence upon him, my responsibility to him, my hope in him—this is Christianity, or Christianity is nothing! If God is not a personal, loving Father, man is an orphan in the universe.

Yes, friends, the truest message that I can bring to you to-day is that message which God spoke through his Son two milleniums ago as he walked among the poor and the oppressed, the diseased and the sorrowful and the sinful: "Come unto me, all ye that are weary and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Are you perplexed and worried by family cares and the burden of your home life? Come unto me, and I will give you rest. Are the intricacies and the competitions of business sapping your very lifeblood? Come unto me, and I will give you rest. Are you nauseated with the insipidness of show and wearied with the bondage of society's slavery? Come, take my yoke upon you. Have sins and villainy and hypocrisy and deceit and wantonness filled your life? Then come to the sinner's Friend, the Savior of the lost. Do you feel that in any way, or that in every way, your life is useless and empty? Come to Him who will send you forth to garner grain for the eternal harvest home; to Him who is able to make your life rounded and complete and full of divine joy. Come to Christ! Flee home to-day to your Father's house!

OUR MINISTERS IN THE SOUTH.

JAMES H. BROOKS.

Our yearbook for 1899 gives Alabama, 78 white preachers; Arkansas, 132; Florida, 10; Georgia, 72; Louisiana, 7; Mississippi, 43; North Carolina, 64; South Carolina, 17; Tennessee, 146. I presume this is correct. There seems to be some discrepancy in some instances between the number given under the list of state boards and that "arranged by states." A total of 569 for nine states. The question I am asked by the editor to answer is, What is the condition and the prospects of these men of God? The question is a delicate one. It must be understood now and all the time in this article that we are not "instituting a comparison and contrast" between ourselves and our brethren in the ministry in any other part of the union. Perhaps we don't know so much about those in other sections as we do in our own great Southern land where we were born, reared and have always lived, and where we expect to live till the Father calls us hence. Our sources of information on this subject are what has already gone to print, what has come to us from year to year in fraternal correspondence, what our ears have heard from the lips of our own brethren, what our eyes have seen and what our own experience has been hitherto.

The missionary preachers in the South have always had a reputation for earnestness, consecration and self-sacrifice. A very small portion of them has ever been financially supported as they should be. This is sadly true even at this time. For this or for some other reasons, as a rule, they have maintained themselves while trying to hold forth the word of life, teaching school, farming, merchandising, practicing law or medicine or other honest toil; or in other cases they have gone from one state to another seeking to give themselves wholly to the ministry; or again, in scores of instances they have quit preaching entirely in order that they might have the necessities and comforts of life and might be able to aid in every good word and work. Some of them have simply eked out a bare subsistance; many have tried with all the energy and devotion of a loyal soldier to fight the good fight of faith, and yet a large part of the time they have been scant of the necessities of life. A few have shared a better fate. Look over any of the states named, and one will find only a few who have been regularly engaged in the work who have been in their present fields many years. Only a few of the six hundred preachers now in these states are giving themselves wholly to prayer and the ministry of the word. In one state where we have over one hundred and twenty white preachers, I am informed "only a small per cent. give their whole time to the work of the ministry"—I should think not one-third of the six hundred engaged exclusively in evangelistic and pastoral labors. The salary of our preachers is small. A brother writes me from his state, where there is over one hundred white ministers, saying: "One of these gets a salary something over twelve hundred dollars. Another one gets twelve hundred dollars. Perhaps two others get a thousand dollars. I have no idea what the others receive, but certainly their salaries are very small." The salaries promised preachers are often not paid. This makes it very embarrassing at times. Many preachers have been forced to give up their life insurance policies, or to part with property they had need of on account of such failures. The small salaries paid, and this frequent failure to pay what is volunteered, often leaves the preacher in doubt as to making arrangements to try to secure a home, and makes it uncertain whether he can meet business obligations that he might wish to assume. In places there is a prejudice against salaried preachers and many will not give to the financial support of any. As a rule, unless one subcribes to a preacher's salary he feels under no obligation to help sustain him. Again, if a minister begins work at a place without a "formal call" to the work, only a few find it in their hearts to administer to his necessities. In numerous instances the "official board" is opposed to your "progressive" ministers, and often stand in the way of efforts by the congregation to secure a "pastor," to sustain him when employed against their wishes, or even to arrange for an evangelist to come and hold a meeting. Too often our "elders" are men destitute of the scriptural qualifications, but they "hold on like grim death," and seem set to lord it over God's heritage. As a rule there seems to be no power to set them aside. In such instances it seems to be a "forlorn hope." Many of our official boards are efficient and awake to every interest of the church and the cause we plead—holy men of God, filled with his Spirit, to promote his kingdom among men. Such is the strong right arm of the local congregation. A large number of our membership have a mind to work, are full of labors and are ready to lay down their lives for the brethren and for Christ who died to redeem them with his own blood. Our "prospects are as bright as the promises of God." Says one: "We are growing in the right direction, and capable and faithful men in the main will be supported. If we were better preachers we would have better churches." One of our state evangelists writes: "We are improving the ministry. It is one hundred per cent. better [in his state] than it was ten years ago." The reports in our year-books and from brethren in the field would lead us to conclude we are advancing all along the line.

One who is in a position to know, speaking of our preachers, says: "As to their 'prospects,' they have none not vouched safe by their condition." This covers the ground. There are no soft places to be found, no large salaries to be looked for, no promotion except such as may come of honest toil, laborious striving, a life of sacrifice and payer. A man who has been in one state for over sixty years, and a faithful preacher for thirty-six years, writes me as follows: "As regards their prospect for sustenance, I am sure there is no section in which any earnest, capable man cannot be sustained, if having food and raiment he is therewith content. Nor is there within my horizon a single field in which a man having a family can educate his children and lay by anything for a 'rainy day' of old age." Again, "The great trouble is that too many churches are wanting 'big preachers' whom they cannot or will not sustain, and will not sustain young and deserving men who would in time become strong men, not only will not give them the necessary material nor moral support they should have, but actually discourage and decry their efforts to grow and work." If this condition is general, it certainly is a serious one. On the other hand, it is true many congregations and a host of brethren hold up the hands of the young preachers, some look after the aged ones, and not a few often go beyond their means in aiding every laudable enterprise of the brotherhood. One of the Old Guard says: "Let ministers endure hardness as good soldiers of Jesus Christ and teach the churches that the laborer is worthy of his hire, not to muzzle the ox and thunder it into their ears that niggardly stinginess is idolatory of the most damnable conquences." This he calls "the remedy."

In another article I hope to present different views treated of by brethren whose opinions are of real value.

THE EVOLUTION OF A DISCIPLE.—III; Or. My Conversation to and from Methodism.

T. R. HODKINSON.

SECOND CIRCUIT.

In my next field I was very pleasantly associated with the Wesleyan, Congregational and Baptist denominations and became somewhat familiar with their weekly literature. This meant, inevitably, a great extension of horizon. (Is it not lamentable that many amongst us should know next to nothing—properly—of our religious neighbors, though we are supposed to exist for the purpose of reuniting them? But what can be expected of those who do not even read our own papers?) I had to admit that there was considerable good in other denominations; nay more, I had my first doubts about the all-round superiority of Primitive Methodism. For the circuit was hampered with incompetent officials, some of whom were also lacking in piety. My colleague and I were nearly the whole time "toiling in rowing, for the wind was contrary." I began to long for the better "law and order" of the Wesleyans.

MARRIAGE.

Meantime, I had made the acquaintance of a most interesting young Baptist; we saw each other very often, but whenever she memtioned immersion I replied with pleasantries. (A secret for you, dear Methodist friend: If your supreme care is to prevent defeat, you must avoid argument—laughter is easier, and so much safer; but if your conscience is sufficiently awake to care only for the truth, at all costs, you will thank the opponent who sincerely attempts an exchange of views. I stumbled in the twilight for sixteen years through knowing only the first half of this secret.)

After awhile I had an attack of a very prevalent ailment, which affected me near the region of the heart, and for which there seemed to be only one doctor—the young Baptist. But what a complication was here, my masters! I did not love Bapt-ism, but I did love the Bapt-ist. She cared nothing for Method-ism, but she cared much for the Method-ist. So she prophesied. Her mind-reading powers told her the day would come when I would be willing to investigate; "and then," she said, "you will surely see the right, and seeing it you will straightway do it." So we married.

I returned to my old town, and to my old work of silk manufacturing under my former employer, preaching as previously on Sundays.

INFANT DEDICATION.

When our first child was three months old I said, "He must be baptized." My wife very significantly asked, "What for?" but we did not wrangle over it. Again my my Baptist harmonized the position without sacrificing principle. "We will take baby to church," she said; "to you it will be a baptism to me a dedication." The same with our only other child. (Wait just a moment, good and faithful censor, till I relate a personal reminiscence on the other side. A fine young man in Ohio—a Presbyterian—married a charming young lady—a Disciple. They seemed very happy, and when baby came their happiness was increased. But as soon as the young husband felt it to be his duty to have the little one baptized, the young wife—an earnest contender for the faith, etc.—felt it to be her duty to oppose. They quarreled, "and the contention was so sharp between them that they [almost] departed asunder, one from the other." Look on that picture and on this and say, my brother, which one of these thinkest thou was the more truly "Christian" course?)

"SOCIETY STEWARD."

During thirteen years I was chief manager in large concerns, an experience of permanent value. I now preached for the Wesleyans, but only in places near home; as a large Bible-class was in my hands besides the "stewardship" of a congregation numbering a thousand persons. My wife and I worked, and prayed, and paid (inseparable in Methodism), and were happy.

In two respects I saw room for improvement, but did not expect to see it realized. My first objection was to the government of the denomination, which to my mind was not sufficiently representative, the ministers (there are no bishops) having a preponderance of authority, and being touched with the caste spirit. But since leaving the Methodists I have known of exaggerated congregationalism where the fancied rights of one or two sheep cost the real wrongs of the shepherd; and there are very capable pastors who have been made to sigh for some fold where the elders cease from troubling and the deacons are at rest. In avoiding the Scylla of priestism let us not fall into the Charybdis of parsonphobia.

The other objection was to the annual testing of ministerial orthodoxy, which hurt my growing desire for liberty of religious opinion. However, anything like the annual sermon sampling which obtains in certain "apostolic" churches, or the unholy competition in the preacher market, was totally unknown and unfeared amongst them.

AT A BAPTIZING (FIRST WITNESSED).

In 1884 my health was seriously threatened by the constant strain of a great factory, together with church work and preaching, so I resigned my position. We removed to Southampton—population 70,000—where my wife ran a business, and after awhile I became secretary of the Y. M. C. A.

Soon after our arrival a noted Baptist preacher visited the town, and we attended the evening service. After the sermon preparation was made for the immersion of several candidates for church membership. My wife wished to stay, from deep spiritual sympathy (she had been debarred from such scenes by circumstances for fourteen years); and I (who had never witnessed an immersion) decided to tolerate it, partly from regard for her and my Baptist friends, and partly from curiosity. There was an atmosphere of reverence in the place, and when the pastor stepped into the water, followed by the first candidate there was a silence that could be felt. I was keenly alive. These persons, unlike the many I had "baptized," understood what they were doing; they were not brought by others, but came of their own free will; and instead of receiving a few sprinkled drops they were buried. The fire came to my heart, and the water to my eyes: not because my Pedobaptist "arguments were assailed by what I had seen, but because—looking beyond the mere externals—I saw the grandeur of such an impressive confessing of the Christ. I also realized the value of the participant of such a blessed recollection in hours of coming temptation and sorrow. My wife made no exultant remarks (although she had seen my wet eyes), but I frankly acknowledged how deeply I had been moved. My jestings at Baptists were over; indeed, I had the grace to feel ashamed of them.

LONGINGS FOR CHRISTIAN UNION.

The Y. M. C. A. put me into touch with the best workers in all the evangelical denominations, and I soon found myself longing earnestly for the closer union of all Christ's followers. I preached and gave addresses for the Wesleyans, Primitives, Baptists, Congregationals, Presbyterians, Bible Christians, Friends, Plymouth Brethren, even the exclusive Church of England, and a strange new sect—the "Church of Christ"—imported from America by H. S. Earle (the first pastor).

My cup ran over when I was able to organize an open-air mission, at which preachers of all the denominations promised to take a turn, from Canon Wilberforce (of national fame) to the Salvation Army Captain. I supposed that nothing nearer to reunion could be hoped for in my lifetime—not having so much as heard of the Disciples. The first to speak was the pastor of the above-mentioned anonymous foreign church, A. J. L. Gliddon. According to stipulation heavoided controverted points of doctrine, but his preaching of the common truth was not in the common platitudes and my respect was silently awarded.

CONVERSATIONS ON BAPTISM.

As our acquaintance matured the question of baptism came up. I confessed that to me it was a matter of slight importance, and the whole controversy "much ado about nothing;" though I appreciated the Baptists' loyalty to conscience. But we argued just a little, or rather, he furnished all of the facts and I recited all of the inferences. Now, however delightful fighting may be in the abstract, it grows positively monotonous to the one who is invariably defeated. I could fire all of the anti-Baptist guns with ease; they had hitherto been "good enough for me," and for my eminently intelligent tutors before me; but the slight skirmishes with Mr. Gliddon made me dubious whether in a pitched battle my traditional weapons would be able to deliver me. I discovered that he had been a Wesleyan minister and could therefore steal my thunder with a smiling face; so being determined to "live to fight another day," I acted according to the rhymed suggestion.

Meantime the open-air union prospered and my friend put me under obligation by preaching and by helping in the Y. M. C. A. In an unguarded moment of unsuspecting gratitude I offered to repay him by some service. Then I inadvertently spoke of circumcision as superseded by baptism, when—without a moment's warning—he accepted my offer of service by requiring me to forthwith read the entire New Testament on baptism, systematically, and with an open mind. I was sorry, nevertheless for my word's sake I went home to do it.

READING THE NEW TESTAMENT.

I had, of course, previously read the New Testament, large portions of it many times over; but all the references to the five points of baptism—infant, penitent believers, sprinkling, pouring and immersion. My memory tablets show up the date, in deep red letters—Monday Sept. 13th, 1886. During that never-to-be-forgotten week of unbiased Scripture reading my mind was driven rapidly through five stages. Starting point, or—Stage 1—INVESTIGATION. By Tuesday evening the last chapter of revelation was finished. I had found numerous cases of baptism (all of which I had previously read without special study), but—unless Lydia came to my relief, or one of the other "households"—there was not one baby. It looked as if the entire pyramid of "infant baptism" had been built on an apex of one word—"suppose." I had also found numerous references to what could have been nothing but immersion, but not a hint of sprinkling or pouring apart from that word "suppose." Thus was I violently dumped at—Stage 2—CONSTERNATION. There must be some mistake! the haste of getting through an unwelcome task had made me careless. I started afresh, with a dogged weariness that would unearth the passages which ought to be there if Methodist practice were scriptural. I took time and had a keen desire for the New Testament to kindly back me up. The second reading closed on Thursday morning and it was now quite clear, without the possibility of a doubt, why three out of the five points—infant baptism, sprinkling and pouring—had not been found at the first reading. They were not there! This landed me very unceremoniously at—

Stage 3—MORTIFICATION. I had been so contentedly sure that the Baptists were wrong; but their error being a harmless one, I had not troubled to correct it, even in my wife. And now it was very plain, according to Christ and his apostles—the final authority—that the majority of evangelical Christians, with their high and mighty leaders, were wrong and the Baptist minority right. My lifelong respect for hereditary theology received a deadly blow and I arrived at—

Stage 4—HESITATION—in a chaotic condition. Two voices in persistent altercation almost distracted me; the one—imperious and urgent—kept up a rapid fire of very personal questions; the other—plausible and prevaricating — tried to evade them; and this is what I heard: "What are you going to do about it?" "Oh! it is of no consequence"—"Of no consequence! yet appointed by your Lord, and loyally administered by his apostles! Dare you charge them with folly?" "Of course not, but do you suppose the mere form matters?"—"Don't quibble. With the ordinance changed by human creeds from a symbolic burial to a meaningless sprinkling, do you still 'suppose' you have been baptized?" "My parents acted in good faith; they did not understand." "And even if you had been immersed, baptism is for penitent believers, and you were an unconscious babe. Of what use is a proxy obedience?" "What would you have? Do you expect me to publicly acknowledge that I—a preacher and sprinkler of infants for twenty years—have been the blind leading the blind?" "Certainly! and if you have any Christian manliness, you will be quick about it. Can you hope for a good conscience otherwise?" "But just think of people's talk; and the feelings of my dear old associates; and however can I face my wife?" "Oh! your wife will sing for joy. Anyhow, ought you not to do just what is right, regardless of any other consideration?" By this time I had reached—

Stage 5—DETERMINATION, and these words reached me: I OUGHT to be loyal to the truth; I MUST obey my Savior, and I WILL, whatever the consequences;" and then the voices ceased.

On that Thursday afternoon a dejected-looking man walked with bowed head through the public pleasure parks, and as he walked an unmerciful conscience lashed him with the scourge of memory, until he arrived at the house of Mr. Gliddon. Arrangements were there made for his baptism on the coming Sunday.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The intellect is but the half of a man; the will is the driving wheel, the spring of motive power. A vacillating man, no matter what his abilities, is invariably pushed aside in the race of life by the man of determined will. It is he who resolves to succeed, and who at every fresh rebuff begins resolutely again, that reaches the goal.—Mathews.

Our Budget.

—Church Congress here this week.

—The day for Home Mission offerings is at hand.

—Let every church fall in line for the first Sunday in May.

—Do not fail to read W. F. Richardson's splendid article in this paper in the interest of Home Missions.

—Preachers began arriving in this city for the Congress on last Saturday. The indications as we go to press are that there will be a large attendance and great interest in the discussions.

—It now begins to look like spring had come in reality. This is the testimony of the lawns, the trees and the gardens as well as the birds, which were somewhat previous this year.

—On our arrival at our office on Tuesday morning we found it in the possession of—well, not lobbyists, but of—preachers who came to attend the Congress which assembles at the First Christian Church, this city, this afternoon. At the rate that they have been appearing at this writing there will certainly be a large attendance at the church. The morning is delightful, the preachers are full of enthusiasm and everything indicates a royal intellectual treat and season of refreshing from the Lord.

—The Home Mission number of the Christian Oracle last week shows enterprise. The cover in colors is fine, and the contents of the paper full of vigor and animation. The Christian Oracle is pushing out for greater things and doing a good work.

—J. H. VanDever, of Dresden, Kan., says that there is a good opening at that point for a druggist, but that no one but a Prohibitionist need apply for the place. A member of the Christian Church preferred. Address Charles Hopper at Dresden.

—The Christian Guide states that on account of Kentucky University having to loan money at five and six per cent., that it has been getting seven per cent. for, the institution will come out this year several thousand dollars in debt on running expenses. On this account President R. Lin Cave resigned and the Academy was abolished, and an appeal will be made to men of wealth to relieve the University from this embarrassment. An effort will also be made to enlarge the endowment fund of the University.

—The Christian Orphans' Home, in this city, has been having a severe trial. A large number of the children have the measles, and there have been some fatalities. The funds for their care are also a matter of serious concern to the board, and we hope that Sister Hansbrough's appeal in this paper will be read and responded to immediately.

—The Church of Christ at Ottawa Lake, Mich., will dedicate their new house of worship on Sunday, April 30th, and sends a cordial invitation to all. Entertainment free. Services in charge of J. J. Harris, of Marion, Ill. H. F. MacLane, of Toledo, is expected to deliver a sermon in the afternoon.

—The receipts of the treasurer of the Foreign Missionary Society for the week ending April 20th were $330 less than for the same period last year. The figures are: for 1898, $2,949.34; for 1899, $2,618.54. The receipts to date for Foreign Missions amount to $71,601.21, or a gain over the corresponding time last year of $7,252.53.

—Kentucky University has announced the publication of the Centennial Crimson,'' a book of 200 pages, embracing its history, scenes and surroundings in word and picture. It will also contain a department of literature, devoted to short stories, poems and sketches by students. Such a book ought to be very popular with the students and friends of the University. Any one desiring further information about this book should address Herbert Martin, 83 S. Upper St., Lexington, Ky.

—''A Friend of the Cause'' sends us $1.00 for ''Church Extension.'' He says, ''I think it is a good thing and have tried once in a while to send a dollar. I am not able to earn much but, bless the Lord, he will accept a small amount when offered in the right spirit.''

—The Christian Endeavor World, April 20, has a group picture of Booker T. Washington and his family on its first page, and an interesting biographical sketch of Mr. Washington by Dr. Cowan. The article reveals the traits of character to which the hero owes his success and his popularity in the world in his chosen work among his people.

—The churches of the southeast missionary district of Iowa will hold their convention at Keosauqua, May 1-4. Quite a lengthy program but one full of vital themes has been prepared for the convention and a profitable time is anticipated for the delegates. All churches in the district are requested to send representatives to the convention. A. F. Sanderson, Keokuk, is the corresponding secretary.

—We publish the program of the ''Educaton-al Conference,'' to be held at Springfield, Ill., May 15th, in this paper. Let every interested person turn and read the program at once and see the effort that is being made to strengthen Eureka College. The conference, however, is not limited to one college. It is to be held upon the broad basis of Christian education.

—The program of the semi-annual convention of the churches of Christ in the 12th missionary district, Indiana, held at Shoals, this week, came to late for notice in our issue of last week. The C. W. B. M. and the C. E. Societies are represented on the program. Also the Sunday-school work. The program is a full and strong one.

—''The Evolution of a Pastor,'' the first installment of which appears in our Family Circle this week, is a story intended to explain the cause of friction which not infrequently exists between the pastor and his official board in church work. Whether you will approve of the author's solution of the trouble or not the moral of the story is good and in some places timely.

—A line from Chaplain C. B. Carlisle, 2nd Regiment U. S. V., from Holguin, Cuba, says: ''The steamship that is to convey this regiment to America has been ordered to Gibarra, near Holguin, and within 30 days we shall have said 'Adois' to Cuba. Col. Wood sent the man, Dr. Hammond, to Havana, under military guard, where the civil authorities from the states were to meet him.'' Bro. Carlisle adds: ''After a month's rest I want to go to work in the Master's vineyard.'' Here is an excellent opportunity for some church that needs a minister of culture and ability, who can be secured at a reasonable salary. Letters addressed to him at Jordan, Onondaga Co., N. Y., will reach him by May 20th, when he expects to be there.

—The first volume of a ''Dictionary of the Bible,'' edited by Jas. Hastings, M. A., D.D., with the assistance of John A. Selbie, M. A., and other prominent scholars, has been issued from the press of Chas. Scribner's Sons, New York. The work is to consist of four volumes, the second of which will be ready in a few months. When completed, it will, no doubt, be the fullest, most scholarly and up-to-date Dictionary of the Bible in existence. A glance through the contents of the first volume is sufficient to convince one of its superior value. One need not agree with the conclusions of all the able writers who contribute to it in order to appreciate its value as a recent contribution to the language, literature and contents of the Bible, including biblical theology. With such a work as this in his library a minister will find himself pretty well equipped for the studyof the Bible. It is the kind of a book that is valuable in the library of a student of the Bible, and we most heartily commend it to that class. It is a compendium of the latest and most reliable information on biblical themes, by the ablest scholars, who have availed themselves of the results of modern researches. Higher praise than this would be difficult to give to such a work.

—If any one would have a vivid realization of what ''The White Man's Burden'' is in the redemption of Cuba, and others of our new possessions, let him read George Kennan's account of ''The Sanitary Regulations of Santiago,'' under the administration of Gov. Wood, in the Outlook of April 15th. If Mr. Kennan's reliability as a correspondent was not beyond question, his description of the filth and filthy habits of the people of that city, when Gov. Wood began his administration, would be incredible. And yet he hints that the whole truth cannot be printed. The revolution brought about by General Wood is a most remarkable one. The sanitary condition of Santiago will now compare favorably, he says, with any of our American cities. As a result, ''the death-rate of the population fell from nearly one hundred a day, in the early part of August, 1898, to thirty or forty a week in Jan., 1899, and in the middle of February there was only one death in a period of nine days.''

—An organization has been formed in Washington, D. C., for the purpose of erecting a suitable monument to the memory of Rev. S. F. Smith, author of our national hymn, America. The name of this organization is the ''National Patriotic Association,'' with Rev. B. L. Whitman, president of the Columbia University, president, and J. Fraise Richard, principal of the Modern Normal College, Washington, D. C., secretary. On the executive committee we have the pleasure of noting also the name of E. B. Bagby, pastor Ninth St. Christian Church, Washington, D. C. This movement has the endorsement of leading men in the nation and will evidently be crowned with a degree of success of which every American will be justly proud. It is a movement that appeals at once and directly to the patriotism of all under our flag whose hearts have been touched by the hymn. Judging from some correspondence to which we have had access it appears that Prof. Richard, of Washington, D. C., is one of the prime movers in this patriotic movement. At all events the movement has our heartiest endorsement and hope of success. For plans, etc., address J. Fraise Richard, secretary, Washington, D. C.

—If the rules of any well-ordered editorial office were essential to salvation, then truly would there be but few saved. No matter how plain, or important or oft-repeated any request, we do not know of any that is not repeatedly broken without the least apology. We are not mad; not even complaining. Our patience is inexhaustible—with paid subscribers. But that is no reason why we should not make this singular psychological feature the occasion of a remark. As a matter of course we expect some people who write for church papers to go on rolling their manuscript, writing on both sides of the sheet, sending in unsigned articles, signing nom-de-plume names without telling the editor the writer's name, mixing church news in business letters, and vice versa, mailing copies of local papers with church news or personals not marked, and other equally inconvenient, annoying and foolish things and then complain if things get lost, mixed, marred or missed. Editors may complain, publish rules, etc., etc., but these things will go on. As well try to stop the flowing of the Mississippi River. But we shall continue to possess our souls in patience. We simply thought the phenomenon worthy of mention as an item of news. An up-to-date, first-class journal could not do otherwise.

—The Ministerial Alliance of Nevada, Mo., because of the questions put to them in relation to a school of "magnetic healers" at work in their city have thought it best to embody their views in a set of resolutions unanimously passed at one of their meetings. It is of course needless to say that the resolutions condemned the so-called "magnetic healers," for scientific and ethical reasons.

—We have received from the Bible Institute Colportage Association, Chicago, Ill., a copy of their "Marked New Testament." It is in the authorized version with favorite texts underscored or marginally marked for emphasis. The plan of the markings are by Mr. Stephen Menzies, Liverpool, Eng., the author of "How to Mark Your Bible." This gives the Testament a unique appearance, quite suggestive of good and studious reading. The objection that we think will most commonly be made to such a book, however, will be that texts fundamental in the judgment of others are not marked. However, the markings in this Testament cover a wide scope of the texts most frequently read or quoted in the more common experiences of life. This Testament can be had of the Colportage Association for ten cents with three cents additional for postage.

—A very pleasent note has been received from Secretary B. L. Smith, acknowledging the valuable service rendered gratuitously to the cause of Home Missions by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGEIST. Similar letters were received from Secretary A. McLean, concerning the assistance we rendered to the cause of Foreign Missions. All our missionary papers have been equally generous to these societies, at least in proportion to their space and ability. We refer to the matter to say that if our religious papers had to be subsidized by the missionary societies in order to secure the space they occupy in our columns, it would make a big hole in their receipts. We all recognize the fact that while our religious journals are private property as to ownership, they are public enterprises in their uses, and are conducted with supreme reference to the interests of the kingdom of God. The editors and publishers are entitled to no special credit for this, for every business should be so conducted by those who profess to be Christians. The fact, however, that our religious papers are made the servants of the public good, the vehicles for conveying necessary information and instruction to the brotherhood, and agents for helping on every good work, does create some obligation on the part of all who are interested in the progress of the kingdom of God to assist, personally and actively, in extending the circulation of these journals. This duty of reciprocity is not always recognized.

—It may sound very common and even prosaic to some preachers, when reporting a meeting, to say in simple words that so many persons, giving the number, were baptized, but from a newspaper standpoint it would be decidedly better. The orthodoxy of our preachers is generally sufficiently known that when any one of them states that so many persons have been baptized that of course they had previously confessed Christ with the mouth. The confession is also universally conceded to be "good," "noble" or any other adjective that can be used to elevate it, and the habit which so many preachers have of taking up two or three lines to describe a few confessions and baptisms when as many words would do does not indicate very great familiarity with the law of economy. In reporting the results of a meeting it is in good order to state the number baptized, the number received by letter, the number reinstated, and the number received from other religious bodies, but, as a rule, it is not in good taste to publish the names of religious bodies from which they come, except in the case of ministers.

—The Reform Bureau, reporting as moral weather bureau, anticipates a hard fight in the movement against Brigham Roberts, the polygamist congressman from Utah. This forecast is based on reports coming to the Bureau, such as the following: In a city of New York state, unusually active in reform work, a petition to the House of Representatives to reject or expel Roberts having been introduced in the preachers' meeting, was earnestly opposed on various sophistical grounds by one of the preachers and was finally adopted by majority vote, not unanimously. In the same city the woman's presbyterial missionary society having had such a resolution brought before it laid it on the table because one of the officers had ingeniously asked the congressman of that district if the petition would influence him, and he had answered, "No." It wes amazing that he should have been asked such a question, more so that anybody, much less a whole presbytery of leading women, should have believed his answer, and still more amazing that they should not have seen that the petition would influence the whole House, and, by publication in the associated press, the whole country. Most surprising of all was the congressman's further explanation coming, as it did, from one of the foremost members of the House, namely, that his action would turn on the question of fact, whether it could be proved that Mr. Roberts is now actually living in polygamy. That is really but a secondary matter, though it should be enough that he once confessed himself a polygamist and served a jail penalty for it which puts the burden of proof as to any reform on his part upon him. But personal immorality is not alone or chiefly the ground for rejection or expulsion. He has in two published articles, quoted in the Capron House report, advocated the general practice of polygamy, despite the statehood covenant of Utah to supress it, and has been elected by an unusual majority because he was such an advocate of bigamy and repudiation, to represent Utah's rebellion against the nation and against civilization. It is not a person only, but a state—aye, the nation—that is on trial, and we shall be found guilty before the world if we do not, by earnest work while congressmen are at home, convert two-thirds of them to the belief that he should be rejected or expelled as soon as the clerk calls the House to order on the first Monday of December. Why should any congressman hesitate to say at once where he stands on the fundamental question of civilization? There are reports of evasive answers and rumors of blackmailing threats to expose the records of men who shall dare to oppose Roberts. We shall need the utmost effort of press, and pulpit, and platform, especially petitions of citizens' meetings from all parts of the land. The Bureau will furnish facts and petitions to all who apply, with stamp. This moral conflict gives no less opportunity for patriotic sacrifices, and involves issues no less important to the nation's honor than the battles about Santiago and Manila.

—The Standard and the Interior have, after twenty-nine years of close association parted company. The first issue of our paper was printed on the Standard's press. In 1873 the two offices were located on the same floor in this building and we have been close and intimate neighbors ever since—mutually helpful.

These two great denominational papers, according to the above paragraph from the Interior, have thus been closer together than the churches for which they stand knew. Could the two great religious bodies for which these two great religious organs stand, Baptists and Presbyterians, have lived so closely together so long, and come to have known each other as well, they would not now be so far apart as they are in Christian fellowship and work.

—The St. Louis and Chicago papers still keep up their good-natured sallies at each other. This from the Globe-Democrat:

Prairie fires are raging again in some of the wards of Chicago. The billows of flame sweeping over leagues of grassy solitude form a spectacle unknown in any other metropolis.

—Sophia had been praying for twelve years to become a foreign missionary. One day an aged friend said to her: "Sophia, stop! Where were you born?"

"In Germany."

"Where are you now?"

"In America."

"Well, are you not a foreign missionary already?"

Then the friend said: "Who lives on the floor above you?"

"A family of Swedes."

"And above them?"

"Why, some Switzers."

"Who in the rear?"

"Italians."

"And a block away?"

"Some Chinese."

"And you have never said a word to these people about God's Son! Do you think he will send you thousands of miles to the foreigners and heathen, when you never care enough about them at your own door to speak with them about God's love?"

Not a few need the lesson Sophia learned. "Beginning at Jerusalem." As the salt of the earth, sweeten the bit of it next to you; as the light of the world, conquer the darkness nearest you.

The moral of the above conversation, clipped from the Herald and Presbyter, needs no additional comment from us at this time. A liberal offering to Home Missions on the first Sunday in May will discharge you from its claims.

—Not a few men of responsibility are severely criticizing Attorney-General Griggs for his interpretation of the anti-canteen bill, passed by the last Congress, and are holding President McKinley responsible for its enforcement as understood by the people and as intended by its author and friends. The Chicago Lever recently concluded a lengthy article on the subject with the following words:

If Mr. McKinley permits the provisions of the law to be broken down and allows the canteen to continue, it will only confirm a widespread conviction that the whisky trust has more influence in the White House than is wielded by all the churches.

PERSONAL MENTION.

J. B. White now preaches for the church at Wakefield, Neb.

E. C. Whitaker, of Sidney, Iowa, removes to Hampton, Nebraska.

J. R. Morey, of Sheldon, takes the work at Maxwell.

F. A. Jackson, of Columbia, Kan., says that the church there is now supplied with a pastor.

A. E. Cory was honored by the churches and citizens of Oskaloosa, Iowa, with a public installation service.

B. L. Kline, pastor at Dallas, Iowa, announces that Secretary B. S. Denny will dedicate their new house on April 23d.

T. P. Haley, who was hurt by a street car in Kansas City, some days ago, expects to be able to resume his pastoral duties soon.

Prof. W. E. Garrison, Butler College, Irvington, Ind., is visiting his parents and attending the Congress, this city, this week.

A. J. Marshall, of Onawa, spent a few days in Des Moines, Ia. His daughters are in Drake University. His Iowa friends are sorry to hear of his purpose to leave for St. Louis, Mo.

H. W. Everest, Dean of Bible College, Drake University made his first public address since his prostration in November last. He will speak again April 21st.

Chancellor W. B. Craig is grappling with the greatest financial college problem among our people and will soon be ready for congratulations.

J. G. Encell lectured recently before the young men of the Bible College of Drake University. He is now moving to Marion, Linn Co., Iowa.

I. N. McCash, of University Place, Des Moines, made a call for missions one week ago, and the cash and pledges now aggregate $730.00.

Mrs. Louise Kelley, of Jeffersonville, Ind., will speak on missions in Drake University on April 18th, and then attend the central district convention at Bondurant.

W. W. Blalock, editor Christian Blade, published at Topeka, Kan., will go to Lamar, Mo., instead of Larned, Kan., as first arranged.

A. C. Eaton, evangelist for Southern, Ill., now in a meeting at Belle Prarie, is visiting all churches in Southern Illinois that he can, setting them in order.

Davis Errett, pastor of the church at Canton, Mo., preached at the Fourth Christian Church, this city, on last Monday, and remained over for the Congress.

Wm. S. Broadhurst and Campbell, of the Christian Oracle Publishing Company, Chicago, were in the city this week, and among the numerous and appreciated callers at this office on Monday.

The leaflet directory of the church at El Dorado, Kan., E. E. Cowperthwait pastor, contains much information in brief about our plea and people and makes a good tract for local distribution.

Miss Susie Threlkeld, of Mexico, Missouri, one of our sweetest singers, would like to go with one of our evangelists and assist in his work. She is a fine soloist, and also a splendid leader in congregational singing. H. A. Northcutt, Knox City, Mo., April 22, 1899.

A. M. Collins, of Shelbyville, Ill., has a meditation on the "Silent City" in the Daily Union of that city. This deeply devotional and eloquent train of thought was provoked by a Sunday afternoon visit to the "Silent City."

T. J. Dow, pastor of the church at Iowa City, Iowa, and his wife were recently surprised by the presence of about 100 guests who came to celebrate the 20th anniversary of their marriage. The occasion was greatly enjoyed by all.

Bruce Brown, pastor Westside Christian Church, Chicago, is delivering a series of Sunday evening lectures on the great reformers and their related churches, beginning with Martin Luther and closing with "Alexander Campbell and the Christian Church."

C. M. Keene, pastor of the church at Hartford City, Ind., for the year ending April 16, 1899, reports 38 additions to the church, $50 for missions, $100 for church improvements and $300 on church debt. For all purposes, $1,875. Outlook for the future encouraging.

C. E. Millard, of Mayfield, Mo., says: "After our meeting in Washington closed, I came over to Baltimore for a week to assist Bro. Ainslie. I start for Cincinnati to-night. After a few days at home I go to Denver where I will be with Grant K. Lewis in a meeting through May."

F. M. Bruner, one of the mighty men among us, though confined to his room year in and year out, has not been idle. He has written a masterly review of "The Evolution of Christianity," by Dr. Lyman Abbott. It is just now coming from the press. Address the author 1327, 26th St., Des Moines, Iowa.

W. J. Russell, pastor of the church at Rushville, Ind., writes: "I have just concluded a series of 14 lectures to young people. The church will seat 1,500, but we have turned people away. Great interest has been manifested. Next Lord's day I commence a series of sermons on great subjects: What is Our Plea; Are We Orthordox, etc.

R. M. Messick, of Kelso, Washington, sends us the following message: "I want to say to my friends and brethren in Missouri that I left California, March 30, to take work at this place and at Hockinson near by. I am now about 500 miles nearer to my home in Salem, Ore., and am much pleased with the outlook. We have good congregations, Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavors at both points and new houses of worship. Correspondents can address me either at Salem, O., or Kelso, Wash."

In the Matter of B. H. Roberts Again.

A member of Congress here at the capital is reported lately in one of our leading dailies as saying that the subject uppermost now in the minds of the people is not expansion, anti-expansion nor our war in the Philippines, but whether B. H. Roberts should be allowed a seat in the next Congress. This he inferred from the many letters he was daily receiving from parties importuning him on the subject. He concluded his interview with the reporter by saying: "All this cannot be entirely ignored." This comment sounds somewhat ambiguous, to say the least. The fact of the matter is that many are looking at this matter from the wrong standpoint. I notice some of the papers come out about this way: "O, Roberts is a very good man. He is popular with his home people. He got a good, clean majority for the office and he should have it. Why, even the women voted for him! If he has four wives he got them in days of polygamy and now he is only doing what he ought to do by supporting them. What's the use making war on Roberts," etc. What are we coming to, anyhow, when a self-confessed bigamist, a violator of one of the most sacred laws of refined civilization, is to be elevated to a seat in one of our highest legislative bodies? grant that Mr. R. may be a good citizen from a Mormon standpoint; he may fulfill all other requirements of that kind of a citizen, but just that one fact of his well known bigamy stamps him as a felon and should as effectually bar him from holding that high office as if he were any other kind of a criminal.

We should not lose sight of the main point and that is, can we afford to allow one guilty of his practice in the marriage relation to share in public office when our laws especially provide that such a one shall not do so. No other qualities of the man can extenuate this one offense, be he ever so amiable otherwise. If he is allowed to take his seat we should all look upon it as a matter of course, if he should bring his four wives here to the capitol with him, and that they with whatever numerous progeny they may happen to have are frequenters daily of the members' galary and the corridors at the capitol, then some of us might feel like exclaiming sure enough, "What are we coming to," indeed!

Now that our season for assemblages is about to be ushered in, every opportunity should be seized for an expression to be sent to each and every congressman, that no mistake be made as to the setiments of the best elements of our society on this question.

Christian Orphans' Home.

Easter has come and gone. While it has not brought the Home the help we so confidently expected, and while we feel very keenly our disappointment that so many of our churches and schools have decided this year that they cannot help this work of the Master, we also have a deepened feeling of gratitude to those who have, year after year, stood by us so nobly in our efforts for the helpless in our church. To all these friends who have remembered the needs of our poor children we wish to return, from the depths of our hearts, our thanks; we thank them individually and as schools and churches.

Among the friends of the Home in St. Louis, who are always ready in time of need to lend a helping hand, is our dear brother, R. D. Patterson, Sr. A few days ago he handed our treasurer $100 to help her pay the bills for current expenses, saying he did not know to what better use he could put it than to help feed and clothe those little ones. Oh, for more Bro. Pattersons!

Brethren, we are in greater need just now, I think, than we have ever been before. Our children have had one of the children's diseases after another in such rapid succession, until their systems are so depleted that their little frames are giving way. First, the whoopingcough, then the roseola, then the chickenpox, a few cases of pneumonia and now the measles, one right after the other. Some of the dear little things have died in spite of the efforts of some of the best medical talent in the city. Besides our regular physicians we have had many others—and all have so willingly and freely answered our calls. We are leaving nothing undone for the comfort and speedy recovery of the children. We will have the whole building thoroughly fumigated and cleansed as soon as they are all well. Plumbing will be overhauled, painting, which is so badly needed, will be done, and the roof repaired. After this is done we will enter upon a more rigid regulation in regard to receiving children and try as much as possible to keep these things out.

But now brethren everywhere, we ask you to come to our aid and help us like Bro. Patterson has, to bear this heavy burden. Pray for us, and praying, help us financially.

Before concluding I wish, in the name of our association, to thank the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for the many kind words in regard to our Easter collection and otherwise. Address

English Topics.

A REQUEST TO KIND AMERICAN CORRESPONDENTS.

It is my great privilege to receive frequent pleasant, sympathetic and welcome communications from friends in America on subjects which I treat in these English letters. I often wish I could see the kind writers face to face, and talk over some of these topics. Some at least of my correspondents I may ere long have an opportunity of meeting, if they should be at the Cincinnati Convention. I mean to be there, if God permit. But I want to take this opportunity of asking all such friends to mail their letters with the proper stamps, so that a poor Englishman is not compelled to pay excess rate on this side. It may of course easily happen that a friend sending many letters at once may accidentally post a note to England with the same stamp as he is in the habit of putting on letters sent to some part of his own country. The mistake has been made so often that I am constrained to call attention to the matter. I always weigh my letters for foreign countries and stamp them accordingly.

THE DEVIL'S CHURCHES.

A year or so ago I wrote a strong but literally true account of the moral condition of the English theater. I return to the subject now because it is not only one on which I have deep personal feeling and fixed opinion, but because here in England much attention is being attracted to stage matters through a remarkable book. Nothing seems nowadays to affect public opinion unless it is dished up in the form of fiction. The most effective attack of recent years on the Church of England is that made in Hall Caine's book, "The Christian." Charles Reade put an end to the horrible "silent system" in our prisons, which used to send criminals mad, by the wonderful effect of his exquisite story, "It is Never Too Late to Mend." You all know what was accomplished by "Uncle Tom's Cabin." So did Charles Dickens, by his impartial "Nicholas Nickleby," forever destroy the barbarous private schools described under the caricature of Dotheboys Hall. The novel with a purpose is one of the most powerful moral engines ever contrived. Zola by his "L'Assommoir" leveled a deadly blow at the absinthe curse and the wineshop system which was blighting France. The latest book of this class, and one of the very best ever sent forth by writers of fiction, is "The Vision Splendid," by two authors, Miss Florence Bright and Mr. Robert Machray. Miss Florence Bright, whose father was a Crimean officer, and at his death war correspondent to the London Times, has herself been an actress, while Mr. Machray has for years made a deep study of the whole question of theatricals. I have before me a photo of the Rev. R. Machray. He is a clergyman, and I see that the portrait is by Sarony, of New York. He was at one time living on the American Continent. His uncle is the distinguished and devoted Archbishop of Rupert Land. The book by this clergyman and this ex-actress is stirring up a hornet's nest of criticism. For it is creating terrific anger in the dramatic world.

THE VISION SPLENDID.

The inner life of the stage is terribly depicted in this most realistic book. More ghastly scoundrels, male and female, it would be impossible to conceive than some of the leading characters. These two experts tell us that there are more than 3,000 women connected with the stage in London alone. They assure us that hundreds of young girls, allured like moths to the flame by the fascinating glitter of theatrical life, eagerly seek to enter it. And yet not over one per cent. of the whole of these candidates for success can reach an even moderately satisfactory position. As a rule only the members of old theatrical families get any opportunity at all of distinguishing themselves. The outsider may be as clever as Siddons, as talented as you please, but if she is without either influence or money, she has not the smallest chance of showing what she can do as long as she remains "good!" This is the appalling truth. Miss Florence Bright and Mr. Machray have both been interviewed, and they declared in the frankest manner that what their book represents is absolutely true. It is possible for a virtuous girl to make progress on the stage, and to remain good. But it is only just barely possible. It is very nearly impossible. Jean Murray, the heroine of the book, is a woman strong enough to resist temptation, and she does resist; but it is at the expense of her ambition and of her success. She started with a "Vision Splendid" like that described by Wordsworth in one of his immortal odes; and she had to sacrifice it all, with her hopes and all her dreams, to retain her self-respect and her purity. What the authors say on page 124 of their book is worth serious study by those in England and America who are constantly apologizing for the theatre as it is, and and are incessantly sneering at those who disapprove it as being only so many canting Grundyites or morose Pharisees, or sanctimonious purists. I will quote a few words from that page: "It would be an uncharitable and extravagant generalization to say that all actors and actresses lead immoral lives. But the practical difficulties in the way of leading a good life are, in the case of girls who have no money and no influence, so tremendous as to be well-nigh insuperable. Talent, unaided, will make its way in almost every department of life far more certainly than in the dramatic profession." What is most remarkable is that the daily press has at once frankly admitted that this wonderful book is true to life. The Daily Mail, one of the greatest of London morning papers, declares that the authors have rather understated than overstated the case. This being so, it is a fair question that I now propound. We are continually hearing about the reformed theatre. But where is it to be found? I can hear of it nowhere. Or when is it going to be found? But I am thus only repeating two questions which have been asked to my own knowledge ever since my memory serves. I say, without any hesitation, that at this day the chief ingredient which the average theatrical manager puts into the purple cup of pleasure for his patrons is the pretty girl. Of the pretty girl he is ever in quest, and when he has found her he cares not a straw what becomes of her, body or soul. If people are going to reform the theatre, why do not those people who are going to do it begin to do it?

A GREAT BAPTIST GONE.

One of the leading Baptists of this country has passed away. James Archer Spurgeon is dead. I knew him very well, and entertained for his character and talents much respect. He was the only brother of the great C. H. Spurgeon. It would be absurd to pretend that independently of his providential relationship to that marvelous Puritan he would himself have been great. It is universally allowed that though the Spurgeon family are all excellent, estimable and useful, not one of them would have been conspicuous above ordinary Christian workers but for the greatness thrust upon them by the extraordinary genius of one of them. Like Napoleon, C. H. Spurgeon lifted all his family with him. All deserve whatever has accrued to them, for they have worked hard to improve the advantage. Dr. J. A. Spurgeon always seemed to me more like a clergyman in his manners and appearance than like a Nonconformist minister. But he was a most staunch and conscientious Baptist. He baptized Dr. Pierson. That occasion was a a memorable and sensational one. Dr. James Spurgeon had an almost seraphic face. His beauty of countenance was one of the great attractions of his personality, which was altogether fascinating. He was refined, scholarly and entertaining, except in the pulpit, where he was somewhat too didactic and dry to be very popular. He had no great national influence, but was locally very influential in his beautiful suburb of Croydon.

THE SORROW ON THE SEA.

We Englishmen are so passionately fond of the sea with which God has girt our tight little island, that we are all plunged into national mourning when some fresh ocean tragedy happens. Nothing so sad, even though sometimes such incidents have occurred on a larger scale, has of late years shocked the whole people as the wreck of the Stella, an excursion steamer from Southampton to Jersey. Of the happy passengers, who were crossing the English Channel to the Channel Islands for their Easter holidays, nearly 90 have found a watery grave; and many others have had an awful experience in their battle with death for fifteen hours while drifting in darkness in little boats. The Stella was running at full speed through a dense fog, through the recklessness of the captain in his determination not to lose time; she consequently struck one of the dreaded Casquet Rocks, eight miles from the Isle of Alderney, and thirty miles from Guernsey. Horrors thickened in the tragedy that ensued. The ship was ripped up as with a knife. As she sank her boilers exploded and she was shattered to atoms. Two-thirds of the passengers, the captain and nearly all of the officers and crew were lost. Two couples had been married that morning, and in each case one of the honeymoon pair was drowned. Never has there been a more vivid illustration of the Savior's prophecy, "One shall be taken and the other left." Husbands saw their wives into lifeboats and remained on board to perish. Families were split up in a way never paralleled. But it is in such cases that the traditional heroism of the Anglo-Saxon race never fails to shine out. Not a soul gave way to panic. All was perfect order and discipline. Death was faced and endured without flinching, by men, women and children alike. Duty to God and man was the instant and invincible watchword of every soul on the doomed ship in those awful moments. How utterly different from the hideous death scenes on the Burgogne a few months ago, when crew and passengers of the Latin Catholic races were stabbing even weak women with knives in the lust for life at any cost! Why do British and American people know how to meet the end with calmness that is unconquerable, in contrast with the craven fear displayed by Frenchmen and Italians? Ask that question again and again, and only one reply is possible. In the one case the Bible has inspired the national temperament; in the other the spirit of true manliness has been sapped away by infidelity and bigotry, the faith in immortality being unknown.

Church and State in Germany.

The relation between the secular and ecclesiastical powers in the empire is somewhat anomalous, and can only be understood in the light of the events which have led up to the present condition. The presence of almost a halfscore of established or state churches, where it can with difficulty be conceived how there should be more than one, gives interest to a study of the situation. Germany is the cradle of the Reformation and the scene of Luther's life work; and yet not only are Romanists and Reformed Churches on equal terms in the empire, but both are under government patronage and enjoy government support, while not only do there appear varieties of opinion and belief in the ranks of the Evangelical State Church, as is true in the Church of England, but there are as a matter of fact eight different Protestant State Churches, while several other Protestant denoninations occupy the positoin of dissenters, or nonconformists, sustaining somewhat various relations to the government.

The genesis of this condition is to be found in the relations of state and church at the period of the Reformation, when the Roman Catholic Church was the only religious body recognized by the empire as it existed at the time, and the parties that differed from the Roman Church in belief or worship were not only regarded as heretics at Rome, but were for the most part under the ban of the empire as well. The reasons for the escape of Lutheranism from this category lie in the rapidity of its growth and the disinclination of the emperor, Charles the Fifth, to displease the powerful Protestant princes, though himself an ardent Romanist and always hopeful for an opportune time for crushing the Reformation. Presently Lutheranism became the recognized religion of many of the German states, though the older church never lost its legal status of establishment, and thus historically Romanism and the reformed religion both occupy the position of established churches in Germany. As to which form of the Protestant faith should be recognized, each province, kingdon or free city was left to decide for itself. It thus came about that in some the Lutheran Church was recognized, and in some the Reformed or Calvinistic body had the supremacy. This was the situation in the reign of Frederick William III., of Prussia (1797-1840), whose family was Calvinistic. This was, therefore, the religious complexion of Prussia, though there were many ardent Lutherans in the kingdom. But the religion of the beautiful Queen Louise of Mechlenberg-Schwerin, to whom Frederick William had recently been married, was Lutheran, and this rendered it impossible for the King and his wife to receive the communion together. He determined to remedy the situation, and by a royal edict he united the Lutheran and Calvinistic Churches in Prussia into one under the name of the Evangelical Church, which is the recognized term to this day. It may be questioned by one who knows anything of religious history and the temper of denominationalism how it could be possible for a king to unite two churches with a stroke of his pen. It may be said that in an ordinary period of religious activity this would be quite impossible, but religion at that time was at a low ebb in Prussia. The deadening influence of the free thought that came in with Voltaire's residence at the court of Fredrick the Great had produced a general apathy, which only came to its close with the distresses of the Napoleonic wars, when the patriotism and religion of the nation were wakened by the words and example of the King and Queen to the point of successful resistance. So great was the indifference at the period mentioned that little difficulty was encountered, though a party in both churches refused to enter the alliance, and thus the act of the King really created three churches instead of reducing the two to one, though the dissenters were not recognized as possessing the rights of establishment. With the growth of religious feeling in the reign of Frederick William IV. (1841-1861) came many advanced steps in the regulation of religious affairs, among which perhaps the most notable was the appointment of a special Minister of Public Worship, which removed the religious interests from the merely secular Supervision of the Minister of the Interior.

With the proclamation of the empire under William I., in 1871, the federation of the different states, kingdoms and free cities into a representative unity was accomplished, but the task of uniting the different state churches recognized in these separate territories was an entirely different matter, though they were all either Lutheran or Calvanistic, and mostly representatives of the combination of the two, viz., Evangelical. Variations of creed, but especially of organization, could not be wholly overcome, and the result is that to-day there are actually eight established Protestant churches in the empire, those differing from the Prussian State Church being located in Saxony, Hannover, Schleswig-Holstein, Mecklenberg and Frankfurt-on-the-Main, in some of which there are two different established churches side by side.

The amount of control which the Minister of Public Worship exercises varies somewhat between the Roman Churches and the Evangelicals. The appointment of priests in the former, which is of course a close corporation with a hierarchy, are made by the bishops, so that the government has no voice in the matter unless public interest demands interference. But in the Protestant State Church there is no hierarchy and the appintments of pastors come about in three ways. In some cases the appointment is made directly the King (as the Emperor is called in relation to his government of Prussia, which is his hereditary kingdom). In another group of churches the appointment of a pastor is in the hands of a patron, who is usually the mayor of the city or the leading noble of the district, himself perhaps the actual owner of the entire property in the region. In a third list fall those churches whose pastors are chosen by church consistory, a body of representative members, usually a score or more in number. The result of this system does not give the important churches preachers suited to their needs, and it is a notorious fact that the leading churches in cities like Berlin are occupied by men chosen because of party obligations, political services or personal and family relations. Of course, there have been and are notable exceptions. Schliermacher's splendid ministry at the old Trinity Church in Berlin, and the notable preaching of Dreiander, the present Hofprediger, constitute important exceptions, which perhaps only prove the rule. But it is a significant fact that the congregations have but little to say in the choice of their pastors and the strongest men do not find their way into the most important pulpits. The salaries paid to the priests and preachers are supplied by the state tax for religious purposes, which is ten per cent. of the ordinary income tax, and range in amount from 1,500 to 2,400 marks to Roman Catholic priests, and 1,800 to 3,600 marks to Protestant ministers. The priests receive less than the ministers because they have no families to support, and the salary increases with the length of the term of service.

In addition to the state churches there are two denominations which possess corporate rights in the empire; these are the Bapists and the Mennonites, and their privileges include the right to acquire property, which is possessed be no other denominations, though the Methodists are making strenuous efforts to secure similar privileges, and there seems to be no reason why they should not succeed. The Church of England, which is represented in Berlin by St. George's in the Monbijou Schloss grounds, has been refused these rights by reason of its allegiance to the See of Canterbury, a foreign authority. In response to the criticism that such aliegiance is also rendered by all the Roman Churches to the Pope, the answer is made that the situation continues from a period before the rise of Protestantism and cannot be changed. There are many other churches in the empire, representing all phases of religious thought, but they occupy the same position of nonconformists, with no legal rights, but perfect religious liberty.

The rapid growth of Berlin during the past few years, rivaling that of Chicago, has rendered the church accommodations entirely insufficient for the growing population. The present Empress, who is an earnest Christian woman, has done much to remedy this evil, and even the comic papers have made capital of her propensity for occupying vacant corner lots with church buildings. But with all this improvement, the parish of each church in Berlin includes not less than thirty thousand people, and in a government where the state church exists this actually means that that number are included in the membership of the particular church, though probably a vast majority of them never enter a house of worship. But this, it is claimed, is a great improvement over the situation in former years, when the number of people to one church ran as high as eighty thousand.

The sentiment in favor of disestablishment receives small expression as yet in Germany, though Pastor Stoecker, the former court preacher, is an ardent advocate of it and has something of a following. It is his belief that the religious condition of Germany would be greatly improved by this means. It is needless to add that the social democrats are also ardent advocates of disestablishment, but from an opposite motive, viz., opposition to all organized religious institutionalism as well as to the autocratic principle in government. It is probable that men who favor disestablishment as a means of promoting the wellfare of the church are eagerly watching the development of the movement in England, which is just now at a most interesting point. It will certainly come more slowly in Germany, both because of the conservatism everywhere encountered, and because of the strength of the Roman Catholic party, which is numerically the strongest in the Reichstag or Parliament, and was only strengthened by Bismarck's attempted interference with Roman Catholic privileges in the empire.

New York Letter.

Let all our readers in the North Atlantic states keep in mind the Philadelphia Conference, May 9-11. Preachers and other Christians actively interested in the enlargement and forward movement of our work in these states will be present to discuss and perhaps plan a campaign of aggressive effort which it is hoped will result in great things in the coming year. The proper evangelization of the great cities of the East is one of the vital questions to be considered, and none more urgent could claim our attention at this time. One of our greatest needs here in the East is a strong, wise, patient, tireless general evangelist (a number of them would be better) who could go into the destitute places, inaugurate the work, say with a good series of meetings, gather a Sunday-school, arrange for a place of meeting, organize a nucleus and if possible locate a preacher. Our several state boards are weak and necessarily limited to a very few places in their several territories. The American Christian Missionary Society should be induced to supplement our efforts to sustain such an evangelist, which they would be delighted to do. New work could be opened up in many places and young preachers located to build up the cause. Brethren, let us come together with this matter in mind and if possible inaugurate such a work.

Another matter of paramount urgency is a ministerial training school for this section of the country. A few good general evangelists planting churches and a school training young men to take up this work properly to cultivate it, are the two halves of the hinge upon which the door of success will open to us in this great and needy field of the North Atlantic states. Just where, when and how such a school should be founded and supported are questions that will tax the combined wisdom and generosity of all who desire the enlargement and prosperity of the kingdom in the East. This problem, too, will claim its share of attention at the Philadelphia Conference.

The open or institutional church methods, the greater usefulness of the Christian Endeavor Society, more thorough Sunday-school work, maintaining the spirit of evangelism in our churches, religious papers for the Eastern field and the question of permanently organizing our forces in order to take these advanced steps are among the other important issues coming before the convention at Philadelphia. Are not these questions so vital that every Disciple of Christ in these states from Virginia to New York feels he should be present at the Philadelphia Conference? Let the preachers, at least, plan to be there and take part in the discussions and the formation of plans looking toward permament aggressive work.

Philadelphia is a delightful city to visit, and May is a pleasant month. J. S. Myers, pastor of the First Church, and his large-hearted people are making ample provisions in their generous hospitality for the free entertainment of all Disciples who will attend the convention. The railroads have granted a two-thirds fare for the round trip "on card orders." In order to avail one's self of this rate application must be made to Bro. J. S. Myers, 2044 Mervine St., Philadelphia, for as many card orders as may be needed. Upon presentation of these cards local agents will sell tickets to Philadelphia and return at the two-thirds rate. Bro. Vincent B. Brecht, No. 1917 N. 11th St., will assign you a place of entertainment if you drop him a card informing him that you expect to attend the convention. Let us come together praying the Lord to direct in wisdom our efforts to redeem our fellowmen.

The Lyman Beecher Lectures at Yale.

(April 6-21st.)

Prof. Geo. Adam Smith, of Glasgow, Scotland, began his course of lectures on preaching before the theological students of Yale Divinity School. The main subject under consideration is "the Preaching of the Old Testament as Affected by Modern Criticism."

Prof. Smith is well known as an Old Testament scholar, having written four volumes in the Expositor's Bible Series (two on Isaiah—two on the Twelve—the Minor Prophets).* The books from a literary standpoint are valuable and fascinating, but their chief value lies in their profound prophetic insight into religious truth. While his lectures will not be so popular as those by such men as Dr. Watson they will furnish material which will be of great significance just at this time. One is impressed by his frankness, honesty and sincerity. As a lay member expressed it to me: "I admire his easy unconventionality, his true, noble sincerity, his high thought and spirit."

The opening lecture was on the "Liberty and Duty of Criticism." I beg leave to offer in a brief way a few of his main points. This is a sacred task to deal with the Old Testament, for it is Christ's Bible—the source of his religion that we have to deal with. The Old Testament lies not under but behind the New—it is part of the same continent of truth. The rivers that rise in the Old grow to their fullness in the New. The teachings of the New find their root in the Old. The Old Testament was Christ's fatherland and is the Christian's fatherland.

He spoke of the growth and formation of the Old Testament canon, that it was not made up at one time, but like the New Testament canon gradually took its place—and further, the Old had the sanction of Christ himself.

It was the Bible of his education, his ministry, revelation of the method of God's grace. Jesus used it to justify his ministry, to illuminate his cross—he enforced its law, accepted its ideals, fed his own soul on its contents. But Christ also was its first critic. He came to a people who lived under the strict letter of the law and under traditions, etc.

He rejected traditions, some parts of the law, and was indifferent to other parts. He extracted the ideal and essential of the law as in the Golden Rule: "This is the law," "Love to God and neighbor," "On these hangeth all the law," etc., "The law and prophets till John," now a new dispensation, old revelation no longer has the same rank and significance. The apostles made use of Old Testament Scriptures and saw in them a help to complete life, and valuable for teaching, correction, etc.

He spoke of the abiding religious value of the Old Testament for light and doctrine, but Jesus set us an example of great discrimination in his use of it. He recognized, as did the apostles, that the Old Testament revelation was rudimentary, imperfect and incomplete; and this opens the question of the growth of revelation. The New Testament treatment of tho Old bequeaths to us the liberty and lays upon us the obligation of criticism.

We have forgotten the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free.

One class insists on the letter of the law of Moses. This more or less literal insistence of the Old Testament has been full of bigotry and replete with ill results.

But in another direction far more harmful has been the doctrine of verbal inspiration and equal inspiration and divinity of all Scripture, and the doctrine that finds nothing defective or immature or imperfect—that the Bible is without defect or flaw—the compulsory acceptance of records of atrocities apparently endorsed by the writers in Old Testament times, these he claims do much to paralyze the intellect and stifle the freer religious life and feeling.

The second lecture was on the History of Criticism, and was technical and in detail and will be passed over. B. W.

"To Err is Human."

People like to talk about attractive things in advertising. In a company recently the proverb above quoted, and which appeared at the head of one of a well constructed series of advertisements of Hood's Sarsaparilla, was so much discussed that we doubt if any one there will ever forget the source whence it came. Messrs. Hood & Co. are using these proverb advertisements on a very broad scale, and they are attracting discussion and favorable comment everywhere.

Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman in Englewood, Chicago.

By dint of persistent persuasion on the part of some fifteen of the orthodox pastors of Englewood—including the pastor of the Christian Church—Dr. Chapman was induced to leave his Philadelphia (''Bethany'') Church, and its famed Sunday-school, superintended by John Wanamaker, for a two weeks' siege in this suburb; the series of meetings concluding March 19th. The principal services were held in Arcade Hall, the largest auditorium here, with a seating capacity of 2,500, which was fully tested at nearly every gathering; and on Sundays the crowds could not be accommodated, all of the co-operating churches suspending their own meetings on that evening. A platform choir of 200 voices led the singing throughout. The expenses were in the neighborhood of $1,000, exclusive of the amount paid Dr. Chapman, who came without any stipulated charge, his compensation being by free-will offerings, made through envelopes which were distributed and taken up at three of the later services, the enclosures going directly into his hands, and it is said that not another person will know the amount received; but it is thought to have been several hundred dollars. The meeting is accounted a decided success in point of religious fervor engendered, unity and brotherly love developed (which Bro. C. publicly stated he had never seen excelled), and the apparent number of conversions; although the exact number uniting with the various churches cannot be determined until after ''communion'' Sunday. The services, while uniformly pervaded by a spirit of intense earnestness, were not characterized by any undue excitement. The expedients for bringing the unconverted to a decision for Christ were those commonly employed in these Union Revivals, viz., having seekers, by the uplifted hand, by rising, and by signing cards, signifying their desire to become Christians. There is a real charm about Dr. Chapman's presence before an audience, and as a silver-tongued orator I never listened to his superior among preachers. In voice, gesture and intonation he is perfect, so that it becomes a continuous delight to follow him. Rant and shouting are unknown to him—though making himself heard by all, even in so large a room as Arcade Hall—nor does he in the least lose control of himself from start to finish; and yet he frequently rises to heights of impassioned eloquence. He evidently studies condensation of discourse and brevity, and seems never to approach tediousness. The close hold he keeps upon his hearers may be attributed in no small degree to his aptly chosen illustrations—mostly from his personal experience.

Somewhat in the line of a coincidence, it fell to me just at the beginning of this series of meetings to read the recently issued (Oracle Publishing Co.) pamphlet, ''The Great Revival and the Little Tent Meeting,'' by J. S. Lamar; the latter section representing ''our'' people and the former our religiour neighbors. (That there is room, however, for the ''great'' as well as the ''little'' meeting, Bro. Charles Reign Scoville's coming Chicago campaign may furnish fresh testimony.) In the supposititious treatment of his subject, the satirization indulged in by Bro. Lamar strikes one as oversevere, applied to Dr. Chapman's ways of working, he certainly in this meeting having been used of God in causing many to apprehend and accept Christ as their Savior. Did the Doctor's dealing with convicted souls only lead him up to the giving of Peter's Pentecostal direction (Acts 2:38), doubtless Bro. L.'s contention would be almost wholly overcome. The withholding of these apostolic directions and terms of admission into the kingdom is, without question, the one serious and inexorable mistake, being over and over again repeated by many popular evangelists. ''Oh, the pity of leaving enquiring penitents—prepared for the final step—blindly to grope in the dark, when the Scriptures so plainly point out a pathway all bathed in light.'' May be Dr. Chapman is another of the great evangelists who feel as D. L. Moody expressed it, that if Peter were thus quoted it would ''break up'' any union meeting that might be started. My humble opinion, though, is that if a man of God, possessing the superlative elements of power with and before men, of J. Wilbur Chapman (and it is safe to say that few have ever lived surpassing him in the ability to touch the hearts of multitudes and move to action), would but lead the way in conforming to this primitive pattern, it would prove the beginning of a mighty movement in bringing the Protestant ministry in general to the scriptural position at this vital point. What marvelous results would we then realize in the winning of men and women to Christ! With his fortieth milestone not yet passed, with steady nerve, a heart of love and complete self-poise, and with a prodigious capacity for labor, if in the providence of God Dr. Chapman would give himself wholly to ''the work of an evangelist,'' what could he not achieve as a preacher of ''the great commission,'' in its fullness and entirety! One of his discourses he was requested by the pastors to repeat, viz., ''Amusements and the Christian's Relation to Them.'' Let me conclude this article by quoting some of his sayings on the subject. He based his remarks on the text—

And Peter said unto him: Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee; what shall we have, therefore?—Matt. 19:27.

. . . There are things we must give up, if we are going to be members of the body of our risen Lord; things that the people of the world may do with a clear conscience. . . . You would have no confidence in me if I should be known to frequent the card party, the theatre or dance. And I claim the right before God to do anything or to go to any place that any member of the church of Jesus Christ has a right to do or to go. There are things we must give up. . . . There is not a place in the New Testament where you can find a single line that would seem to make a distinction between the man who has had hands laid upon him in ordination and the man who is simply a lay member of the church. . . . I do not believe you have the right to sit in judgment on my life and tell me the things I must give up, and I do not believe I have the right to sit in judgment upon your lives, but I do believe that we ought all of us to go before God in sincerity and say to him, ''Oh, my Father, I will give up anything standing between me and thee, and in the way of the manifestation of thy power through me.'' . . . I believe this question of amusement may be settled by giving the benefit of the doubt always to Jesus Christ. That is a very old statement, but it is as true as it is old. You know we generally take the benefit of the doubt ourselves. We always say, we are not quite sure whether it is right or wrong, and so we do it until we are sure. My friends, that is wrong, absolutely wrong. . . . I know that when one rises to the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ, in the first place he will have no inclination to do things about which there is a question, and in the second place he will have no time. Somehow God will take away the taste of worldly things. . . . People say to me, ''Can't I be a Christian and dance? Can't I be a Christian and play cards? Can't I be a Christian and go to the theatre?'' Well, you may, possibly; but in the name of God, what is your idea of the Christian life? Is it just to step across the line and be saved from hell, and then reach out into the world and pluck the flowers that grow on the other side of the line? . . . I would not touch a card any more than I would take a live coal and let it burn its way through my hand, because my holding the cards might damn my boy and I be responsible before God. And I call upon every young woman here, for the sake of the young men of the day, and upon every mother, for the sake of the youth of the day, to take a stand against anything that might rob a man of his manhood, and I know that this will do it.

I have spoken about the things we must give up. Now, what is the gain? Some of you say, ''Well, what did Peter give up?'' And you try to figure it up, and all that you can find that he ever did give up was an old boat that was not seaworthy, an old net that needed mending and an old father that was ready to die, and you say to-day, ''Why, I would be willing to give up things like that.'' But you must remember that was all he had. The only boat he had was old, the only net he had was almost useless, and the only father he had was ready to die, and he gave up everything, and all is all, whether you live in a hut or palace! How many of you have ever given up all for the sake of the Lord Jesus Christ? . . . Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee; what shall we have, therefore?'' And the answer is, ''Everything.'' May the Lord help us to come out from the world and be separate and touch not the unclean things!

REPORTED THROUGH THE COURTESY OF REV. FR. AUG. ROESE.

DETROIT, MICH., March 9, 1897.

Dr. Peter Fahrney, Chicago, Ill. Dear Sir: As your Dr. Peter's Blood Vitalizer is now almost universally recognized as the best blood purifying remedy of the day, a recommendation seems almost superfluous. A special case here in my neighborhood, however, induces me to write to you. A gentleman here had suffered for nine years with a terrible skin disease, which showed itself in a thick white scurf all over his body, especially on the arms and legs, where it appeared like scales. At repeated intervals, a sort of biting humor would gather under the scurf which threw off the plastic eruptions. At the same time these humors would eat through the skin, causing intense pain. As the looks of the patient was a hideous one, it was only through much sacrifice and courage that those about him could nurse and supply him with the necessary food. The disease, with its offensive odor, was repulsive even to the most courageous.

For years this ailment had scoffed at medical science, although several doctors had had him under charge. As an incurable, this poor man was, at last, to be transported to the county poorhouse. A Christian friend tried to prevent this, however, by applying to our congregation for aid, which presented him with a few bottles of your Blood Vitalizer, which began its work at once, curing him eventually. The white, scaly crust dried and fell off in large quantities from the still red but dry skin. After he had used four bottles of the Vitalizer he was able, to the great joy of his family, to resume his work. Yours truly, REV. FR. AUG. ROESE, 199 Military Ave.

Notes and News.

Iowa District Convention.

BRETHREN OF THE NORTHEAST DISTRICT:—The time of our annual meeting is at hand, May 15-18. Hampton is the place. Every congregation should be represented. Every Bible-school and Endeavor are requested to see to it that their forces are represented by one delegate. Every pastor should set the example of personal interest. Our program is the best we can produce. The topics are such as all should be thinking about.

Let each congregation select a delegate to each department of the meeting and pay their way—requiring in return a report in writing of the success.

Brethren, the Lord's work demands attention. Let us awake.

SAM B. ROSS, Sec.

Oelwein, Ia, April 19, 1899.

Steubenville Dedication.

The Christian Church of Steubenville, O., dedicated their new house of worship on Lord's day, April 16th. The house is admirably arranged and the decorations and furnishings are beautiful. The auditorium and Bible-school rooms when thrown together give a seating capacity as great and possibly greater than any other church building in our city. The dimensions of the building are 118 by 54 feet; the style of architecture is Gothic-Romanesque; the material stone and brick, the inside finishing antique oak with pews and all furnishings to match. The entire cost of the building is a little over $15,000.

Bro. F. M. Rains was with us and had complete charge of the services. His two addresses, one in the morning, the other in the evening, were greatly enjoyed, not only by the Disciples of Christ, but by the hundreds of people of other churches who heard him.

The report of the building committee revealed the fact that about $8,000 were needed. Bro. Rains announced at the close of the evening service that $10,134.34 had been raised during the day in cash and pledges. This congregation will long remember Bro. Rains and the noble work he did for us.

F. G. SLAYTER.

New York Notes and News.

Since my last report to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the Lord has blessed my work by adding 46 by letter, 15 by obedience and 11 otherwise. I have held meetings at Tonawanda and Lansingburgh, N. Y. Organized at Lansingburgh with 59 members, 46 by letter from the Troy church. The Troy church started a mission Sunday-school a few months ago. The Troy church and its faithful pastor, Bro. C. M. Kreidler, and the New York Missionary Society are to be credited with a new Sunday-school of 100 members and the organization of the 49th Church of Christ in New York. The new church will buy a lot and build a church house. They have a good start on a building fund.

I have studied the conditions and prospects at Albany. Have found eleven Disciples in the city and five others in the suburbs. Doubtless there are many more. I hope to see a Church of Christ in the capital of the Empire state soon. The cities of Albany, Troy and their seven suburbs of from 5,000 to 25,000 people each form a great mission field.

Oh that I had money! By the grace of God I could plant a church and locate a preacher every two or three months. It would not require so much money as some may think. Give these people the primitive gospel and they will build their own houses and help others. It is a joyful work to begin with a handful of hearers and close with an organized, enthusiastic Church of Christ willing to labor and sacrifice for Christ. It causes sleepless nights while solving the problems involved, but "joy cometh in the morning" of success.

Another beautiful suburb of Troy has a great section of population, fine people and beautiful homes where there is no church of any kind. We have some members in that section. Money, money, money! The love of money is, of course, the root of all evil, but a few thousand dollars rightly applied here in New York would put us into the treetop of rich missionary fruit.

There are hundreds of fine fields for us in the East. The fact is, that wherever the fear of man, ice cream and the comforts of semi-infidelity have supplanted in large measure the "fear of the Lord," the "sincere milk of the Word" and the "comfort of the Holy Spirit," there is always a fine opening for the primitive gospel. J. M. MORRIS, State Evangelist.

Jubilee Convention Notes.

The Jubilee Convention in Cincinnati, Oct. 13-20, promises to be the largest denominational convention in the history of Protestantism.

The writer visited Franklin, Connorsville and Indianapolis, Ind., last week and found many preparing to come from these parts. He found the C. W. B. M. board in session in their new rooms at 152 East Market St., preparing for great things at Cincinnati.

Mrs. Helen Moses will visit our city about April 27, in the interest of the convention number of the Tidings.

Bro. A. B. Philputt, pastor of the Central Church at Indianapolis, was seen and found to be enthusiastic about the convention. He even asks for a special excursion from that city to the session of business men on Saturday night, to remain for the large communion service on Sunday. I believe that those present on Sunday will be in the largest communion service ever held in the history of the church.

The next Jubilee Rally at the Central, on May 2nd, will be worth attending. The main address will be delivered by Bro. E. L. Powell, of Louisville. Much enthusiasm will be created by local speakers also.

Bro. George A. Miller, our secretary, will address the Indiana state convention which meets at Irvington, May 9-12. He will also attend the Congress at St. Louis and deliver the baccalaureate at Eureka College.

The writer will address a mass meeting of Disciples at Columbus April 27, and will take a royal invitation to the Ohio state convention at Wilmington May 23-25.

Save your money and take your vacation in October. A. M. HARVOUT,

Chairman Jubilee Committee.

617 Richmond St., Cincinnati O.

Brethren of Indiana,

Permit me to call your attention to the matter of entertainment for delegates to our state ministerial and missionary conventions, to be held at Irvington in May.

We are expecting the largest attendance ever known in the history of our state conventions. The work of arranging for the entertainment of delegates will be no small task. To facilitate matters and provide entertainment in a satisfactory manner, it will be necessary for all delegates to send in their names at once.

I request of you, therefore, to urge all delegates of your congregation, desiring entertainment, to notify me of their coming without delay. While we promise to do what we can to care for all, yet we will be responsible for none who neglect to notify us of their coming.

Lodging and breakfast will be provided free. Dinner and supper will be served at the probable rate of 30 cents per day.

Do not fail to call attention to this notice, and see to it that all names are sent.

Fraternally, S. H. CREIGHTON,

Chairman of Com. on Entertainment.

Irvington, Ind.

A Great Need.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—In looking over the last number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST I see the attractive heading, "That Congress." You say there is for this an important program. I have not seen the program, but involuntarily cried out, "Oh that they would incorporate in that program the topic, the "Gift of the Spirit."

The Disciples have wisely chosen as their "plea" faith in a PERSON, with many a mere allusion to the promised gift of the Spirit as a mere "charism," an attendant power by which to work miracles. The gift of the Spirit referred to Acts 21:38, is the gift of the Spirit Himself, "the promise of the Father," and that to which our Lord referred when he said, "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink. He that believeth on me as the Scripture has said, Out of his inmost being shall flow rivers of living water, and this spoke he of the Holy Ghost which had not yet been given." The power to work miracles had been given; this indwelling as yet had not been and was something more.

The baptismal formula is significant, expressive—the Father in creation, the Son in manifestation, the indwelling presence of the Spirit the crowning feature of the gospel dispensation—the incarnation greater than that of creation, the indwelling presence of the Spirit in the heart of believers greater than the incarnation.

Abraham, Isaiah and John, though they had light enough to quicken faith, "died without the sight," and the least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than John—has more light and blessed assurance.

The gift of the Spirit was not until after the ascension and glorification of our Lord. It included a large measure of holy love (Rom. 5:4); included a greater light (2 Cor. 4:6); it included greater strength (Eph. 3:16); it included to believers an assurance of acceptance (Rom. 8:15).

To this may be added the witness of the Spirit Himself (Rom. 8:16). Thus baptized disciples will go forth as the heralds of salvation, a present salvation, a salvation not merely in the "hour and article of death," not merely with the hope of "imputed righteousness," but present, conscious assurance of acceptance.

Pertinent are the words of the apostle, "After that ye believed ye were sealed by the Spirit of the promise." This sealing the disciples of Christ need above all things else. We are building schools and colleges and turning out brilliant young men, and yet it will be true that though they "speak with the tongues of men and of angels and have not the 'perfect love' begotten of the Spirit, they will have become as a sounding brass and a clanging cymbal."

Our young men need to tarry in Jerusalem till they are indued with power from on high; until as sons of God with the Spirit of his Son in their hearts they can cry, "Abba, Father!" There is a hunger of the soul and the world is crying, "Who will show us any good thing?" Nothing but the fullness of the Spirit can satisfy this hunger.

Disciples have done much in gathering in numbers, but they will do much more for the world's want when it can be said of them as a body, "They are filled with all the fullness of God." JOHN G. FEE.

Berea, Ky., April 21, 1899.

[Our venerable brother will be glad to know that the subject, "Crucial Points Concerninng the Holy Spirit," has a place on the program of our Congress.—EDITOR.]

For the Throat
The Public Speaker's Friend.
John I. Brown & Son, Boston.

Missouri State Bible-school Notes.

Good reports come from so many of the schools, notwithstanding the bad spring weather, that we have every reason to expect great things this year; one of the good items coming from King Stark, the efficient pastor at Lamonte, and one whose heart is in close touch with all the work of the church, and he says that the Lamonte school was never better than it is at this time.

At Mt. Zion, Johnson County, had anticipated a most profitable visit and work with my friend, Phil Stark, always co-operating with me in the school work. But the mud was such that we were completely shut out so far as the people were concerned, for it was just impossible to do so.

Miss Nora Kiernan, county Bible-school superintendent of Randolph, is one of those that will carry off a Teacher's Bible and very likely the county banner, for she seems to work day and night, though one of the efficient teachers of Huntsville also. The indications now are that she will see that every school in the county meets its apportionment to this work, and that all report as to their growth and membership.

It is a pleasure to your secretary to see how the work is going on with the Award of Merit cards, and I need only to say to all that the medals this year will be superior to those given at Mexico, and will be worthy all the efforts put forth. They are not given by the board, but by myself, at my own expense, and as aids to those who do so much for the success of our work. Will be glad to give further information at any time.

At Troy—E. G. Merrill, pastor, and J. M. Rouse, superintendent—the friends just did our work so kindly that I must tell you of it. First, they paid their apportionment in full, and then generously gave me more than as much again. This school, under Professor Rouse's wise management, has grown right along, and is now the first school in the county. Among its forces I noticed people that have been in it for fifteen years, among whom I mention L. J. Henry, Mrs. E. A. Cottle, Geo. Colbert and J. H. Castner, some of them having missed scarcely a Sunday, while the family of my old-time, constant friend, D. M. Grandfield, are as faithful as ever, Sister Shelton with her little ones being in the school to-day. My first meeting with Charles and William Holmes was in the Hawk Point Bible-school, and here they are in the same faithful work at Troy. E. G. Merrill's work has been remarkably successful with this people, and all regret his determination to leave them. But he is determined in his resignation, and I can most fully and heartily commend him and his fellow helper to any congregation in the state. Brother Rouse shortly goes to DesMoines, and we commend him to the people in that city of churches, but the Troy people will do all possible to hold him and his.

N. R. Davis is getting his work well in hand at Burlington Junction, and Brother A. F. Stitt, in remitting their apportionment for the full year, pays the pastor and his devoted wife a very high compliment, but to those acquainted it is true in every word, and we have hundreds of them in Missouri.

Gower and John P. Jesse are friends of our work, so that your servant could not have had kinder treatment than came from these. Curtis Poe is doing in the school work just what he does in the bank, making it a success, while J. P. Jesse is held in the highest esteem by the entire community. But what do you think? they never took a collection even, asking me what their part was and handing to the secretary the full amount, and seemed happy in the doing. What queer people at Gower!

The cards for the last quarter have gone out, and if friends will see that amounts are remitted it will help us much in this effort to go to the convention clear of all debt. Will you, brethren, do this for us and right now?

Cotner University Rescue League.

We have been encouraged by the receipt of pledges and money from several states since the announcement of the work in our national journals. In Nebraska the pledges and cash is increasing in amount continually as more of the brethren awaken to the appreciation of our splendid opportunity.

No people ever had a grander church. A beautiful educational property, the mostbeautiful in the state, that cost originally over one hundredthousand dollars, can be secured for so small a sum as a little over six thousand dollars now. Think of it, brethren! Can we hesitate and excuse ourselves? During the last two weeks $500 has been added to the Trust Fund. Responses have came from Nebraska, Kansas, Ohio and Iowa. The fund is safely kept in a deposit vault. July 1st closes our opportunity. Hasten, brethren, and send in your pledge. Make them as liberal as you can and God will bless you for your interest in this great cause. We cannot be guiltless and close our eyes and ears to Cotner's claim upon us. Send in your pledges immediately and hasten the joyful day. J. W. Hilton, Sec.

HEAR WHAT OTHERS SAY.

The great business of the Disciples of the present time is that of college endowment. Our college work is fundamentally missionary work. It lies at the basis of all missionary work. We must endow our colleges or suffer disaster as a people.

We are making a strong effort for Hiram, but we are also deeply interested in all the rest of our schools. The splendid college plant at Bethany, Neb., should be saved to our brotherhood. Cotner University is greatly needed in the Northwest. To lose it would be a most serious disaster. To saveit, and place it on a solid financial basis would be of incalculable benefit to the cause of Christ and to our great move as a people. The Disciples of Nebraska and the great Northwest should rally as one man to the support of Cotner and the church at large should lend a helping hand.

J. Z. Tyler Resigns.

Following is the letter of resignation sent by J. Z. Tyler to the Acting Board:

To the Acting Board of the American Christian Missionary Society.

Dear Brethren:—I beg leave to present my resignation as National Superintendent of Christian Endeavor. This position I resigned at the Chattanooga Convention, feeling that I could no longer carry the double duties of this superintendency and the pastorate. The unanimous action taken by that convention and the subsequent representation made by the secretaries of the American Christian Missionary Society led me to so far reconsider my resignation as to again take up the work temporarily to allow time for some better arrangement to be made. But I cannot continue indefinitely. I therefore present my resignation to take effect May 1, 1899.

Although we have reached the point when, as it seems to me, it is possible for us to make a great forward movement for our young people—a movement that would lead them to far more efficient service and place the Disciples in the vanguard of the great Christian Endeavor army—yet it is perfectly clear that this important forward movement cannot be made by our present method and agency. It is impossible for any one to do what needs to be done, unless he can give his entire time and his undivided attention to this important and rapidly growing work.

Commending this Christian Endeavor work—to which I have given the best service in my power—to the generous and sympathetic care of the brethren to whom it has a right to look for leadership and guidance, I remain,

Truly and fraternally,

J. Z. Tyler.

The above resignation, we learn, has been accepted. No one can censure Bro. Tyler, under the circumstances, for offering his resignation, as his health no longer permits his carrying on the double work of pastor and superintendent which he has been doing heretofore. Our readers are familiar with the circumstances by which the Endeavor Societies were not permitted to sustain Bro. T. in his work as superintendent. It will prove a great loss to the cause of Christian Endeavor among us if Bro. T. is permitted to retire permanently from a work for which he has developed peculiar fitness. The matter will no doubt come up for consideration at the Detroit "Rally" of our Christian Endeavor workers.

Oklahoma a Special Mission Field.

Oklahoma has a population of 325,000; one-half of these are without church privileges. They are pleading for help to our general home board in evangelization.

Six hundred dollars will keep two evangelists at work all the year and their labors will be fruitful as the whole territory is a ripe field for the great plea we are making.

The Congregational board sustains forty missionaries in the field, the Methodist Church has thirty-five missionaries, yet if we had ten good men at work in Oklahoma we could win such victories as would make our impress upon the religious life in such away as it could never be effaced. One of our strong churches should leap to this great call of service and say we will take Oklahoma as our mission field and will make it our pleasure to put $600 a year into that field and water it with our prayers ann see the full harvest our God will give us.

As a result of but little effort new churches can be organized in Tecumseh, Luthe, Weatherford, Geary and Woodward. I fully believe that all these churches could be organized in one year if we could send the evangelists. I commend Oklahoma to our brethren. What church will take it as a special mission field?

Hiram College Jubilee Movement.

Up to the present time we have been gathering namesof persons who will unite in our Great Jubilee Endowment Movement. We will continue to do this, but we are also now seeking to obtain the definite pledges of those who promise a dollar or more. Three churches have been canvassed in this way. Results show that the pledges average about $8.50 apiece. So far they range all the way from $1 to $100. There are some who will give in much larger sums in special classes which will be formed a little later. The average of the smaller subscriptions ought to be not less than $10 and we hope we can reach that average as we progress in the work. Our plea for larger endowment is very enthusiastically received everywhere it is represented. The people are beginning to realize that the most important work before the Disciples at the present time is the endowment of our colleges. They are beginning to understand that this lies back and beneath all missionary work and church work of every kind. Prepared men are and always have been the great need, and the agencies that are sending out strong and well-equipped men are doing the most radical work for our cause as a people. The people are beginning to see that we have reached a crisis in our educational history, that our colleges cannot be maintained in the spasmodic and uncertain way that has been relied upon in the past. The schools of all religious bodies are being greatly sirengthened and we must strengthen ours or go out of the business of education. The people are beginning to understand this and consequently are waking up to the importance of endowing our colleges, and are realizing that this is the fundamental thing and cannot be neglected except at a serious peril to our cause as a people. Five million dollars ought to go into college endowment in the next five years.

Dear Brother, Sister, Friend: Will you not join with us in the endowment of Hiram College, one of the oldest and strongest institutions, an institution that has done a work that is recognized by all our brethren everywhere as a most important and honored work? Our Jubilee Year is just upon us. Will you not help us to place this grand old institution on a permanent financial basis by joining in the Great Hiram Jubilee Endowment Movement? Send your name and you can fix the definite amount later.

Minnesota is in line. Now is the time to display fidelity to our plea, by exercising zeal, giving money and manifesting a true spirit for enlargement and growth; then we can enthusiasticaliy enjoy our jubilee together.

Idaho.

For the sake of the cause in this vast region of Southern Idaho and for the cause all over the state, and also for the cause of Christ in this great Northwest country, the hands of the home board should be upheld so that this section could be aided for a few years, so that what has been begun may be saved, and then this people will be found to come to the help of the home board for other needy fields. Now the demand is urgent; it is imperative.

G. L. SURBER.

Mississippi.

All that our state organization has accomplished has indirectly been the work of the American Christian Missionary Society. 'Tis safe to say that half of our strength in Mississippi has been gathered as a result of help received from the board at Cincinnati. That the churches in Mississippi owe an everlasting debt of gratitude to the home board will not be denied. When the first Sunday in May comes I want every church and individual member of the Christian Church in Mississippi to give liberaly and help raise the jubilee offering up to $100,000 or more. JOHN A. STEVENS.

Tacoma, Washington.

Without the aid of the American Christian Missionary Society our cause in this city would have been lost. We come before our brotherhood not as beggars, but as brothers, asking you to help us meet the demands our Lord has laid upon us, to carry the gospel into all the world and unto every creature. We ask you to assist us, as your trusted agents, to take advantage of the golden opportunities now presented, which if lost will never be offered again. B. H. LINGENFELTER.

With the return of prosperity a flood of immigration will pour into this favored region, attracted by its rich mines and its salubrious climate. The church should be here with its saving influences. I would not insist upon the superiority of this over other states as a mission field. Fields equally destitute and important can be found in the North, the East and the South. I only insist that it shall receive the consideration its importance demands. Let us not be sectional in our feelings. Let us pour into the treasury of the home board this and each succeeding year, a sum that will be creditable to a people a million strong, and large enough to meet the demands that come from all quarters of our fair land—demands that we must meet or be guilty of shameful, sinful neglect of God-given opportunities. W. H. BAGBY.

Southern California.

The first year of our missionary partnership, though one of the severest (on account of drought) through which our state has ever passed, has demonstrated the practical value of this method of work and cemented much more firmly the bonds of love and appreciation in which the A. C. M. S. is held. The results have been more than commensurate with the money expended. Several churches have been greatly strengthened by the labors of the evangelist. One that had nearly allowed its light to go out was revived, a pastor located and the house of worship rebuilt. Another result is the feeling of greater stability regarding our work that has taken possession of the churches. And with the return of more prosperous seasons it is safe to predict a decided forward movement of our cause in the great Southwest. H. ELLIOTT WARD, Sec.

Pasadena.

Nebraska.

The Home Missionary Society sent evangelists to begin the work in this state. A large number of the churches that are now doing a strong work were organized by the efforts of these missionaries. Nearly all the time the mother society has been helping to sustain some of the weaker churches. In the years 1897-1898, when I served as secretary of our State Board, through the appropriation made by the National Board, we were able to increase the interest in our state work, and keep an evangelist in the field from November until June, a number of others a part of the time. During this year we reduced the idebtedness of our board over one thousand dollars. This would not have been possible without the aid and encouragement that our work received from the National Board. Every member of the Christian Church in Nebraska should be very grateful to the Home Society and should do all in their power to push "Home Missions to the front."

New York as a Mission Field.

We need an entire season's campaign there. If the Home Society supported us out of a fund of $100,000 in the same proportion as now, we could have two evangelists at work. How long conditions here will remain so favorable to our work, we can not foresee. We do know that now is our opportunity and that we ought to be able to take advantage of it more fully. Our own brethren are liberal. We raise as much for state work as one of our states claiming a membership of of 35,000 while we have a membership of only 8,000. Thus we demonstrate we do not seek to be relieved of the brunt of the battle. It is simply that the forces to be contended with and the size of the field are not so large that we need reinforcements. We shall do our full part to help raise the $100,000 for American missions and to win the 100,000 souls for Christ. In each case we will be found to have done more than our per capita share. We rejoice that God enables us thus to serve him. But, brethren throughout the union, shall we not rally as one man to win our entire nation to Christ? It needs no argument to prove that this can never be done in any other than Christ's way. Upon us, then, is laid the duty of the hour. Let us redeem the time. B. Q. DENHAM, Cor. Sec.

Oregon.

The American Christian Missionary Society has made its beneficent hand felt in the great Northwest. Considering the means entrusted to its care, what it has accomplished is simply marvelous. Many congregations assemble to-day and many church steeples point heavenward, indicative of the aspirations of the grateful worshipers within, because of timely aid rendered by the society. And how well and wisely that aid has been distributed in the Northwest, under the direction of Bro. Cowden, superintendent of missions for the Northwest, may be seen from the fact that all our churches in all of the principal towns along the Oregon Railroad and Navigation Company's line running through the great inland empire of Eastern Oregon, have at sometime in their history been helped by the society. If our brotherhood could only see as I can see after a residence here of seven years, of the needs and opportunities of this great country, how grandly they would rally to the support of the General Board on this our Jubilee Year. I believe the churches of Oregon will express their gratitude to the society this year by much the largest offering for missions in their history. One hundred thousand souls and one hundred thousand dollars for Christ shall be made to echo over these hills and through these valleys till the work is done. J. W. JENKINS.

Open Doors in Western Pennsylvania.

Western Pennsylvania was the cradle of our movement for the restoration of the primitive faith. Here our plea was first preached, and the first churches of our faith and order were organized. From this field have gone pioneers of the faith into all the states of the great West. And yet, in spite of this constant drain upon our churches, the cause has made continuous and steadily increasing growth. It may be truthfully said that the last dozen years of work here show results that will compare favorably with the work accomplished in any other field among us. During this short period many missions have been established that have grown into strong, self-supporting churches with a rapidity unsurpassed in any quarter of the country. Within this time have been established such strong churches as Uniontown, Beaver, East End Pittsburg, Belle Vernon, Charleroi, etc., etc. In Greater Pittsburg, twelve years ago, there were four churches of our faifh with a total membership of less than 1,000. To-day we have twenty-one churches and missions, with a membership of 4,000. Fifteen of these are organized congregations with good church properties and have settled pastors. Two of the missions have chapels and two are planning to build this year. In this great centre, with a population of 700,000 souls, there are a score or more of strategic points in growing suburbs, where we should plant churches at once. With the grant of $500 per year from the Home Society, for the support of a city missionary, we hope to speedily enter these open doors. In addition to this Greater Pittsburg field, there are several hundred towns and cities in Western Pennyslvania, where we have no organizations. Into all of these we could go and plant churches if money could be secured to start the work. It is the deliberate judgment of our leading brethren that this is one of the ripest fields in the world for the successful presentation of the plea for New Testament Christianity. The people are sturdy, industrious, whole-hearted and liberal. If once enlisted they would assist in maintaining the record for generous giving to all the enterprises of the brotherhood already established by the Disciples of Western Pennsylvania. Let us all join in pushing "Home Missions to the front," so that the Macedonian cries from our own land may be answered by those whom we have chosen to lead our forces in this great work of evangelizing America.

Sunday-School Literature

THE matter of Sunday-school Literature is one of very great importance. For, whether it should be so or not, the fact is that the character of the instruction given in nine-tenths of the Sunday-school classes throughout the country is determined by the contents of the Lesson Helps they use. This being true, and the fact that first impressions are most lasting, how important that Pastors and Superintendents of Christian Sunday-schools see that their Schools are supplied with Christian Periodicals. If the children are taught that one church is as good as another, that certain divine commands are of little or no impo[illegible], or can be changed or set aside by man, what effect will it have on the church of the future? "Think on these things."

We understand a FEW of our schools are using sectarian or union (so called) supplies, in order to save a few cents each quarter. Are you one of that number? Samples of our Supplies sent free.

The Gift I Crave.

MR. KARL KENT.

Master, if Thou a gift wouldst give to me,
I'd ask Thee, not for riches nor for fame;
Nor power to make men, trembling, bend the knee;
Nor eloquence to put all sin to shame.

I'd ask Thee for a sympathetic heart,
A nature full of pity for mankind;
To know and feel the deepest griefs that part
The heartstrings of each sorrow-stricken mind.

And I would learn to speak some gentle word
When hottest are the bitter tears that fall.
A tender, kindly hand stretch forth, dear Lord,
And soothe away the pain and sorrow all.

THE EVOLUTION OF A PASTOR;

Or, Elder Brune's Experiences at Eastville.

BY A. A. HONEYWELL.

Eastville was a beautiful little city nestling among the hills of Eastern New York. I say city, not because it was really one, but because it was so designated by its citizens, who endeavored to partially compensate for lack of city advantages by materializing their prophecies of its future—at least as to name—and so hereafter we shall speak of Eastville as a city.

Fifteen hundred was the number of the inhabitants who lived within the limits of this city; so it was in reality, as well as in the minds of its citizens, a place of some importance.

Whatever may have been the traveler's idea of Eastville's future, he was willing to admit that it was even now the recipient of nature's lavishments. Surrounded on every side by mountains, he was reminded of David's song, "As the mountains are round about Jerusalem, so the Lord is round about his people, from henceforth, even forever."

We are especially interested, however, in a neat church chapel where the Disciples, called Christians, even as at Antioch, met to worship their Redeemer. This chapel was centrally located, which fact added to its attractive features, as a delightful general appearance, comfortable pews and beautiful chandeliers would seem to indicate it as a favorite resort for church attenders.

All of these improvements had been made, however, at the sacrifice of preaching, but the elders, Bro. Brown and Bro. Olds, had exercised an oversight of the flock and had striven to keep the sheep from straying.

In this they had partially succeeded, but had failed to secure the general and regular attendance of the members to listen to their comments and exhortations and to commemorate the Savior's death and sufferings in the emblems typifying them and so after consultation they had decided to advise the church to secure the services of an evangelist to labor for them.

Tuesday night was set for a business meeting of the church, called to consider questions of vital interest. To this meeting came something like one-third the membership of the church which, by the way, was an unusually good attendance. After scriptural reading and prayer Bro. Brown stated the object of the meeting in substance as we give it here:

"Brethren, for the past three years, Bro. Olds and myself have labored with you as elders, bishops or pastors, all three being scriptural names of our office, or, if you prefer, as overseers of the church. We have done the best we could and as a result of our efforts, with your assistance, we have much beautified and adorned this house of God. About $1,500 has been raised and profitably expended; besides this we have endeavored to pastor the flock, although on account of our business affairs this has largely been confined to exhortations on Lord's day mornings. As you are aware, the membership of the church has grown rather negligent in church attendance, while many of our young people are attending other places of worship. Now, we advise that you call an evangelist to labor for us for one year, and see if the church will prosper better. We will continue to be the elders, pastors or overseers of the church and the evangelist will work under our direction. We would like to have a free expression of the membership in regard to this matter."

Bro. Line arose to his feet and delivered his opinion on the subject: "As treasurer of the church, I wish to state that we have no surplus on hand with which to hire an evangelist, so before we decide the matter we should provide the money. Since we have paid for our improvements the money has practically ceased to come to the treasurer, so to my mind this is the first question."

This called out an expression of sentiment from Sister Short, who was president of the Ladies' Aid, and who was a zealous worker, but rather blunt in speech: "If we are to judge the future by the past, I suppose the Ladies' Society will be expected to give a large portion of the preacher's salary. I think we women know pretty well where over $500 of the money spent in improving the church came from, for it has been one continual effort working buttonholes, giving festivals, socials and clambakes for the past three years, and for my part I am heartily tired of it and wish we had religion enough to raise this money without doing all this work. It seems that those who give the most have also the most work to do in addition. But I am willing to continue to work, work, work, for another year, if necessary, only I wanted to say my say, and now I've said it, I am through."

To this presentation of facts Bro. Brown replied: "We are willing to admit that the ladies have been a great help to us in making these improvements, and I for one am in hopes we will soon be able to support the work by the scriptural plan of giving; that is, weekly contributions as the Lord has prospered us."

Sister Good had a word to add to what had been said, and so she was heard: "I am very much in favor of calling an evangelist. The church has had very few additions in the last few years, while a goodly number of our strongest members have been lost through removal."

Thus one after another gave expression to their views, and among others Grandmother Gray, who had been acquainted with several of the early reformers. She expressed herself in favor of calling an evangelist, or as she remarked, "We used to call one who settled down with us, pastor or elder, but I don't know as the name makes any difference as long as he does the work of a pastor."

And so it was decided to send a statement to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of their desires and see if any one would answer. Their call in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST appeared as follows:

"The Church of Christ at Eastville, N. Y., desires a good man to labor for them at a small salary. Address B. B. Brown."

Bro. Brown waited anxiously for a reply, scarcely hoping to get an answer, because of the small salary, but soon they began to come, remarkably soon, in numbers of five, ten, twenty-five, twenty-eight, twelve, eight, three, one; in all ninety-two! How could he select from among so many? It seemed almost a hopeless task. After many readings and rereadings, however, Bro. Brown found one letter that especially pleased him. It was from T. R. Brune, Brownville, Ill. The fact that this man was from a town which carried the name of Brown impressed him favorably and the tone of the letter also very much pleased him. So it happened that Elder Brune was called to Eastville upon Bro. Brown's recommendation.

Fortunately for the church Bro. Brown's intuition in selecting an evangelist or man as it had appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, for fear of being misunderstood, was very good, for Elder Brune was a most earnest and devout young man of thirty years. But we shall make his acquaintance later. To raise his salary of $600 was the next question, for this church did not make it a practice of leaving the raising and collecting of the salary to the preacher as seems to be customary with some churches. After faithful effort the soliciting committee succeeded in securing the required amount of pledged contributions, the Ladies' Aid Society subscribing $150 and the Christian Endeavor $100.

Elder Brune was expected to arrive in a short time, and there was no little expectation as to his appearance and also that of his wife, for Mrs. Brune was quite as much an object of interest as the dominie himself. Lest any should be unacquainted with the name dominie, I will state that it was the name of a person in holy office in Scotland and was a common name in this part of the state to designate a preacher, so that in common conversation it was not Elder Brune nor Rev. Brune, but Dominie Brune.

Elder Brune had never been used to this title before and thought at first that he was being made fun of or "joshed," to use a Western phrase, when he was addressed thus: "Good morning, dominie." But he soon learned that no disrespect was intended and answered as cordially to the salutation of dominie as elder or reverend. But we are getting ahead of our story, so we will need to start anew.

Many were in favor of giving Elder Brune a reception as an expression of good will and an act of hospitality, but Bros. Brown and Olds, after a lengthy consultation, vetoed the proposition, as they desired that their preacher should be humble, and was afraid a too hearty reception might puff him up and make him feel he was the head of the church instead of themselves, who were the bishops or ruling power. It therefore happened that Elder Brune was not very cordially received as a brother, but in a businesslike way as an employee.

CHAPTER II.

Two weeks had elapsed sinee the arrival of Elder Brune. The weather had turned suddenly colder. A strong wind was blowing, while fine flakes of snow filled the air. Many a poor family were huddled together around a scanty fire, sharing each other's fears as they looked into the face of suffering.

Darkness rapidly enveloped the earth and the streets were practically deserted. Only necessity kept people out of doors. It is such a night as this that makes a pleasant home doubly so and a cheery fire doubly cheery.

This terrible night found Elder Brune and his wife seated comfortably near the base-heater, while Nellie, of five years, had set her little table for tea and invited her little brother Henry to be her company. Ever willing to play, he gladly took the seat offered and folded his tiny arms, while Nellie, in imitation of her papa, asked the blessing.

"I am very thankful," remarked Mrs. Brune, "that we are settled again, for moving is such a task."

"You are a woman after my own heart," laughingly replied Elder Brune, "for of blackened nails, cuts in my hands and ruffles in my temper, I have not a few. I think I would make a better carpenter than preacher, for in putting down carpet, while I always aim at the tack, I usually hit the nail, and on the head at that—that is, my fingernail."

"Yes, I will admit that you are pretty good at hitting fingernails, in fact better than putting up stovepipe."

"Stovepipe! stovepipe!" ejeculated the Elder, "of all the agencies used by Satan to cause preachers to lose their religion, I think stovepipe is the worst. I do believe if he has custody of any preacher in the hereafter he will set them to putting up stovepipe 24 hours in the day and 365 1-4 days in the year, as the sorest punishment within his power to bestow!"

Sister Brown and Sister Olds called today," remarked Mrs. Brune.

"Yes? What did they have to say?"

"They said they thought they would call and see if I had things straightened up yet, and was ready for church work. They said they usually kept the preacher's wife busy. I replied that keeping busy was the smallest of my troubles, for my home duties took up most of my time. To this Sister Olds suggested that I could not possibly get along without a hired girl, for I would find the church work no easy task. At this point Sister Good called and the conversation turned into different channels."

"That puts me in mind," said the Elder, "of a conversation I had with Bro. Brown to-day. It seems that the idea of having a responsive Scripture reading at morning service was new to him. He said that Bro. Olds and himself had decided not to have responsive readings hereafter and that I should eliminate that from the services. I can't understand what he means by ordering me how to conduct the services, and I mean to find out at the earliest opportunity."

A knock at the door caused the convesation to cease, for neither the Elder nor Mrs. Brune could imagine who would be calling at this time of the evening, and especially on such a blustery night. Elder Brune had not time, however, to reach the door before it was opened and in walked Bro. Brown.

"Good evening, dominie."

"Good evening, Bro. Brown; this is a terrible night."

"It is, indeed," replied Bro. Brown. "I am afraid that there will be suffering among the poor if this weather continues, so I thought I would stop on my way home from business and give you a list of the poor families in Eastville so you can call early in the morning and find out if any are suffering. You can report to me by noon and we will see what can be done if any are in need."

Elder Brune thought this was a suitable time to find out why it was that the elders used so much freedom in telling him what to do, and acting upon this impulse he opened the subject with the following result:

Elder Brune.—I was going to speak of this matter in the morning and suggest that relief measures be undertaken. I have been also thinking, Bro. Brown, about the responsive reading at the morning service, and still I think it would be a great help in getting the members accustomed to the sound of their own voices in church.

Bro. Brown.—Indeed? It is an entirely new thing here, but Bro. Olds and myself will take it under advisement and let you know our decision.

Elder Brune.—I can't understand why you should take it under advisement. Is it not the pastor's place to decide such matters in the light of his experience?

Bro. Brown.—Yes, indeed; such things should be decided by the pastors, and that is why I said Bro. Olds and myself would take the matter under advisement, for we are the pastors of church, and have been for three years.

Elder Brune.—Your statement surprises me very much. I always consider myself a pastor. If I am not, what am I?

Bro. Brown.—You are an evangelist under our employ. You have sold your services or time to us, and it is for us to say how that time shall be employed. Bro. Olds and myself are the ruling officers of the church, variously called in the Scriptures bishops, overseers, elders and pastors. We aim to treat you well and make your work as pleasant as possible, but we would not be doing our duty if we did not exercise our perogative, "to rule well." We hope there will be no misunstanding on this point.

Elder Brune.—This is the first time in my ministrial career that I have been theoretically or practically considered a hireling. It may be you are right in the matter, and until I have had time to study the Scriptures on the matter I will recognize you as my employer.

Bro. Brown.—I am very confident that you will find the Scriptures plain on this point, but I must be going as it is getting late, so I will bid you goodnight.

25 CTS PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS

Every woman should know that there is a great home medical book that tells all about the reproductive physiology of women, and all about the home-treatment of diseases peculiar to the sex. This book contains 1008 pages and over 700 illustrations. It is called Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser. It used to cost $1.50. Over seven hundred thousand people purchased it at that price and over 1,200,000 people now own copies of it. For a limited time copies will be given away free.

This great book contains the names, addresses, photographs and experiences of hundreds of women who were once hopeless invalids, but who have been restored to robust womanly health by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This marvelous medicine acts directly on the delicate organs distinctly feminine. It makes them strong, healthy, vigorous, virile and elastic. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. It banishes the usual suffering of the expectant months, and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It robs motherhood of its perils. It insures the robust health of the little new-comer and a bountiful supply of nature's nourishment. It transforms weak, sickly, nervous invalids into healthy, happy wives and mothers. For a paper-covered copy of Dr. Pierce's Common Sense Medical Adviser, send 21 one-cent stamps, to cover cost of mailing only, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y. For elegant French cloth binding, 31 stamps.

Miss Edith Cain, of Clinton, Allegheny Co., Pa., writes: "After two years of suffering, I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and am now entirely cured. I had been troubled with female weakness for some time and also with a troublesome drain on the system, but now I am happy and well."

In cases of constipation and torpid liver, no remedy is equal to Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They regulate and invigorate the stomach, liver and bowels. They never fail. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative and two a mild cathartic. They never gripe. An honest dealer will not urge a substitute upon you.

The proudest motto for the young,—
Write it in lines of gold
Upon thy heart and in thy mind
The stirring words enfold:
And in misfortune's dreary hour,
Or fortune's prosperous gale,
'Twill have a holy, cheering power—
"There's no such word as fail!"

A Useful Formula.

The Mississippi Valley Democrat and Journal of Agriculture, published in this city, recently contained the following formula for a solution for spraying trees affected with the San Jose scale, which it says has been successfully used in Idaho.

The formula for the spraying solution and its preparation are as follows:

Unslacked lime	40 pounds
Sulphur	20 "
Salt	15 "
American concentrated lye	2 "
Water	60 gallons

Place 20 gallons of water in a boiler and heat to the boiling point; then put in 10 pounds of lime, two pounds of lye and 20 pounds of sulphur. Boil for one and one-half hours, or until the sulphur is dissolved. It will then be of an amber color. While the above operation is being performed slake in another suitable vessel 30 pounds of lime, and while it is hot (caused by the slaking of the lime) add the salt and stir until it is dissolved. Then add the whole to the contents in the boiler and cook for one-half hour longer. Strain this mixture into the receptacle used for spraying, diluting it with as much water as is necessary to make 60 gallons. In extreme cases of scale, one or two more pounds of lye can be added to the formula.

Brotherhood.

One love, one life, one blood,
One truth, one aim, one end have we,
The finite human seeking the Divine Humanity.

As wave on wave comes rolling in
From seas we do not know,
So life on life, through mingled
Tides, the seas of being flow.

No less that waves of men
Who to each other stand or fall,
Move in their spheres except
As all for each, and each for all.

How is my brother lost and I
Not also gone astray?
The light I bear is false if it
Illumine not his way.

How is my brother saved and I
Not also joyful in his joy?
The bond between our souls no fate
Can sunder or destroy.

The wrong I do another swift
With fatal force reacts, and
From my cup of happiness its Measure full subtracts.

The loving thought I freely send
Through all the bounds of space
Will lift the clouds that veil
The sun, and show the Father's face.

Love's breath divine envelops us
Like clouds of living air.
Take thou thy all, but know
In love we must all things share.

How prayest thou at altar rails
For God to do his will?
Thou art his instrument; go forth
And thine own prayers fulfill.

"Thy kingdom come" is vainly said;
How shall our pleading win
Until we make our life the door
To let the kingdom in?

For the Love of Joe.

He was a little blue-eyed, wizen-faced man, with sandy hair slightly tinged with grey. With the exception of a heavy yellow mustache his face was smooth, and bore a pitiful expression that told of much worry and hard work. His hands were small and freckled and covered with an abundant growth of sandy hair. His feet were very small for a man, even smaller in proportion than his hands. His suit was a faded terra cotta brown that was considerably too large for him. It was his wedding suit. They were store clothes though, and were set off by a red bandana handkerchief, hanging carelessly out of the breast pocket of the coat. He wore a little flat derby hat with a wide brim that turned up on the sides. The hat had faded from rain and age from a black to a tinge of greenish-yellow that contrasted deeply with the broad band of new crepe that reached halfway up the crown.

He was standing on the corner near the little country store that formed the news center and the loafing-place for the sleepy little bluegrass village that was strung out along the two pikes that crossed by the store for two or three hundred yards. The little man pulled the red bandana out with a jerk and looked each way up and down the pike. Either way its white dust stretched out through the hemp and tobacco fields to a narrow thread that lost itself in the bluegrass pastures. Not a sign of life could be seen, except an old negro stripping grass along the roadside almost a mile from the store. Seeing no one, he carefully wiped a tear from each sad little eye, blew his nose as violently as a little man could, and thrust the hankerchief into his coattail pocket. He next took off his hat and looked at the crepe. After eyeing it critically for some moments, and trying to stretch it out larger on his hat, he turned and walked into the store.

Turning to the clerk, who was leaning over the counter whittling on the top hoop of a cracker barrel, he said: "Jim, hain't you got any bigger mournin' than this? I feel like I ought ter put mournin' on all over now, as she is dead. An' it ain't a year since I bought my weddin' suit right here. Yer ain't got any? Well, Jim, I guess you kin show me some baby clothes and little shoes. She's gone, an' I guess I'll have ter look arter the little young 'un that wus born when she died. The kid looks jes like her Jim."

He stopped here and looked out through the store door across the fields for a few moments, and then turned back to the clerk and went on:

"Life was jes like heaven to me then, an' now she's gone thar. Jim, yer don't know how that gal could love. I'm nothin' but er little dried-up old man at's not fit fer much but hoein' terbacker an' the like, an' yet she seemed to live only fer me and my happiness."

Here the little man pulled out the red handkerchief and blew his nose again, turned around to see Jim sell a plug of store tobacco, and then went on with his story:

"Hit wus all my fault. She wus sech a delicate little creature. A sort of a wild flower that wusn't made ter be raised any place 'cept in the woods with the violets. Jes ter love, Jim, wus what she wus fer. An' when our baby wus born she died.

"Jes 'fore she died I went an' kneeled by her bed, an' she whispered like to me, 'Joe, when I'm gone, ye'll jes remember that I couldn't be much to ye, fer I allus wus delicate an' you wus always such a good little man to me. Better'n most folks wus, an' I loved ye fer it. An', Joe, ye mustn't fergit to love my baby an' take care of it. An' now, as I'm goin' away from ye, an' can't be the little wife as ye used ter talk uv, an' as I kin never pay yer for manly love an' kindness ter me, all I kin do, Joe, is jes to tell ye to always recollect I loved ye.' An' then she died."

There was another long pause in which the little man walked to the door, looked up and down the pike, wiped his brow, then pulled himself up on a cracker barrel and continued: "Afore she took, Jim, she wus the likeliest gal in all Bourbon county. An' around Clint there wasn't a patchin'. The was slender like, but wasn't tall. Her face wus bright an' smilin' with a little red spot on each cheek. She used ter run ter me an' hold 'em up for me to kiss. An' then she could climb a tree or ride a horse the same as I can. But—but she's dead now."

He jumped down from the barrel and left the store. In a few moments the clerk saw him ride by on a tall, yellow, raw-boned horse up the pike towards his little cabin home, where in a plain, cheap coffin lay the lifeless body of Joe's only love. In the cabin were some of the neighbors, one of whom was taking care of the baby.

The next morning he saw the funeral procession slowly wend its way to the church at Clintonville, where the village minister preached the funeral.

When she had been laid to rest in the cemetery, and all the friends had left, even the last loafer had cut down across the schoolhouse lot to talk it over at the store with the farmers—everybody turns out to a funeral in the bluegrass—Joe still stood by the new-made grave.

The cemetery was beautiful that April morning. The wild flowers were peeping from the roots of the evergreens and out of the bluegrass. The bluebirds and the cardinals were there singing a morning song of joy. Joe looked at the flowers, then turned to the birds, "Ye all used to sing to me, 'I love ye, Joe,' " he said sadly, "but now ye sing, 'Always recollect I loved ye.' " "Now," said he, lifting a wood-born violet in front of his pale blue little eyes, "now, I'll have to look at your innocent face instead of her yernin eyes. An' now, O Lord," he was praying, "be good ter her, an' tell her every day I love her. An', Lord, if ye kin, make it a little easy fer me an' the baby, 'cause ye know it's goin ter be a little hard ter live like I oughter aknowin' that yer heart's a breakin' fer a little pair uv arms ter steal aroun' a feller's neck an' sorter whisper like, 'Joe, I love ye.' " Here the little man fell on his knees by the grave and kissed it.

When Joe arose he pulled out his handkerchief, and wrapped the violet with a little piece of yellow clay in it, and placed it carefully in the inside pocket of his vest. Then, turning to the birds again, he said, lifting his face toward heaven: "My heart used ter sing, 'I love ye,' now it'll a'ways sigh, 'I loved her so,' an' there'll always be a kind of echo there, 'She died fer me.' "

The loafers saw a little man on a raw-boned, yellow horse dash out of the cemetery, and in a whirl of dust pass down the pike until he seemed but a mere speck on the narrow, white thread of road where the bluegrass pastures met. One of them lazily drawled, "Wunder if Joe'll keer much."

The Apple Tree.

STELLA CLANTON.

There's a tree right under my window,
It's a gnarled old apple tree,
And its limbs are scarred and twisted,
As apple tree limbs can be.

But the blooms that come on its branches,
They are always sweet and fair,
And its rough old limbs in the autumn
A plenteous harvest bear.

The stately trees of the forest
Breathe low of secluded rest,
And murmur that peace and quiet
Away from the world is best.

But of labor and love and courage
The apple tree sings to me,
And its cheerful song rings gayly,
As it tosses its limbs in glee.

And whether the summer zephyrs
Among its blossoms blow
And, heavy with their fragrance,
Sway them gently to and fro,

Or whether the boisterous breezes
That come with the winter's reign
Throw its twisted branches rudely
Against my window pane,

The old tree's song is ready,
And I always love to hear
Its droning hum in the stillness,
Or its louder song of cheer
That it sings with a rising courage
When the day is cold and drear.

Terrific Battle With a Whale.

[The Literary Digest for April 15th published a part of Mr. Bullen's story from his book, "The Cruise of the Cachalot," which we think will be of interest to our boys. The story we are told is historic.—EDITOR.]

"We sped along at a good rate toward our prospective victim, who was in his leisurely enjoyment of life calmly lolling on the surface, occasionally lifting his enormous tail out of the water and letting it fall flat upon the surface with a boom audible for miles. We were as usual first boat; but much to the mate's annoyance, when we were a short half mile from the whale, our mainsheet parted. It became immediately necessary to roll the sail up, lest its flapping should alarm the watchful monster, and this delayed us sufficiently to allow the other boats to shoot ahead of us. Thus the second mate got fast some seconds before we arrived on the scene, seeing which we furled sail, unshipped the mast, and went in on him with the oars only. At first the proceedings were quite of the usual character, our chief wielding his lance in most beautiful fashion, while not being fast to the animal allowed us much greater freedom in our evolutions; but that fatal habit of the mate's—of allowing his boat to take care of herself so long as he was getting in some good home thrusts—once more asserted itself. Although the whale was exceedingly vigorous, churning the sea into yeasty foam over an enormous area, there we wallowed close to him, right in the middle of the turmoil, actually courting disaster. He had just settled down for a moment, when, glancing over the gunwale, I saw his tail, like a vast shadow, sweeping away from us toward the second mate, who was lying off the other side of him. Before I had time to think, the mighty mass of gristle leaped into the sunshine, curved back from us like a huge bow. Then with a roar it came at us, released from its tension of heaven knows how many tons. Full on the broadside it struck us, sending every soul but me flying out of the wreckage as if fired from a catapult. I did not go because my foot was jammed somehow in the well of the boat, but the wrench nearly pulled my thighbone out of the socket. I had hardly released my foot, when, towering above me, came the colossal head of the great creature, as he plowed through the bundle of debris that had just been a boat. There was an appalling roar of water in my ears, and darkness that might be felt all around, yet, in the midst of it all, one thought predominated as clearly as if I had been turning it over in my mind in the quiet of my bunk aboard—'What if he should swallow me?'

But the agony of holding my breath soon overpowered every other feeling and thought, till, just as something was going to snap inside my head, I rose to the surface. I was surrounded by a welter of bloody froth, which made it impossible for me to see; but oh! the air was sweet. I struck out blindly, instinctively, altho I could feel so strong an eddy that voluntary progress was out of the question. My hand touched and clung to a rope, which immediately towed me in some direction—I neither knew nor cared whither. Soon the motion ceased, and, with a seaman's instinct, I began to haul myself along by the rope I grasped, altho no definite idea was in my mind as to where it was attached. Presently I came up against something solid, the feel of which gathered all my scattered wits into a compact knub of dread. It was the whale!

'Any port in a storm!' I murmured beginning to haul away again on a friendly line. By dint of hard work, I pulled myself up the sloping, slippery bank of blubber, until I reached the iron, which, as luck would have it, was planted in that side of the carcass now uppermost. Carcass, I said—well certainly I had no idea of there being any life remaining within the vast mass beneath me; yet I had hardly time to take a couple of turns round myself with the rope (or whale line, as I had proved it to be) when I felt the great animal quiver all over, and begin to forge ahead. I was now composed enough to remember that help could not be far away, and that my rescue, provided I could keep above water, was but a question of a few minutes. But I was hardly prepared for the whale's next move. Being very near his end, the boat or boats had drawn off a bit, I suppose, for I could see nothing of them. Then I remembered the flurry almost at the same moment it began; and there was I, who with fearful admiration had so often watched the Titanic convulsions of a dying cachalot, actually involved in them. The turns were off my body, but I was able to twist a couple of turns around my arms which in the base of his sounding, I could readily let go. Then all was lost in roar and rush, as if the heart of some mighty cataract, during which I was sometimes above, sometimes beneath the water, but always clinging. with every ounce of energy still left to the line. Now, one thought was uppermost—'What if he should breach?' I had seen them do so when in a flurry, leaping full twenty feet in the air. Then I prayed. Quickly as all the preceding changes had passed came perfect peace. Then I lay, still alive, but so weak that altho I could feel the turns slipping off my arms and knew that I should slide off the slope of the whale's side into the sea if they did, I could make no effort to secure myself. Everything then passed away from me, just as if I had gone to sleep."

The above story is, of course, the very best evidence that Mr. Bullen escaped.

FREE TO MILLIONS OF SUFFERERS.

The New Cure For Kidney, Bladder and Uric Acid Troubles.

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of Swamp-Root.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of untiring scientific research by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and has truly wonderful powers in curing kidney, liver, bladder and uric acid diseases.

Kidney trouble is responsible for more sickness and sudden deaths than any other disease, and is so deceptive that thousands have it without knowing it.

Your kidneys filter your blood and keep it pure, that's what they are there for. You are well when your kidneys are well.

Thousands owe their health and even life to Swamp-Root and thousands more can be made well who to-day think themselves beyond help, if they will take Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root.

By special arrangement with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and to prove for yourself the wonderful and prompt curative powers of this great discovery every reader will be sent by mail, prepaid, a sample bottle and with it a book telling more about Swamp-Root and containing some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured.

Please mention that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

If you are already convinced that Swam-Root is what you need, you can get the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes at drug stores or of medicine dealers. Make a note of the name SWAMP-ROOT, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Watching Each Other.

A keen watchman observes that no honest worker dreads to be watched; but whether he does or not, he must submit to a custom which is universal. Even the watchman is in his turn watched.

The day laborer is hourly under the eye of the "boss," the boss is watched by the contractor, the contractor by the architict and the whole crowd by the city's building inspector. The cigarmaker is watched by the foreman; the factory girl who works on small articles that could be easily carried away is under surveillance of the forelady. The girl in the candy store by the cashier, and the respectable customer in any of the big stores is under the watchful eye of the floor walker. The cashier is watched by the bookkeeper, the shipping clerk by the superintendent, and in many cases the partners in a business watch each other's methods. There is no end to the watching and spying upon business people, and few escape it.—Sunny South.

The Barn Guest.

Miss Harriet did not sleep much that night, because every time a mouse left its home to visit a neighbor, or to lay in its day's provisions, the little lady fancied it was the robber, resuming his old vocation. However, Sunday dawned at last and Miss Harriet, who was afraid of nothing in the daylight, sent George to see if the barn guest had slipped away. George found Fup at the foot of the ladder, and Mr. Shaw was just coming down. "Good morning," said George.

"Yes, it is," said the robber. "Oh, you was aspeaking, wasn't you! Sakes alive! I'd done forgot them parlor-croquet games. You see I've been aplaying a big croquet game trying to get through everything as convenient as possible before I come to the last stake. But may be you ain't up to my figgers? Have you got over far enough in your 'rithmetic to come to figgers of speech? Its right after Tautology. I think every gentleman ought to make a speciality of some calling, even if he ain't forced to work at it. Tautology is my forte. I'm great at that."

"Cousin Harriet sent me to see if you were here," said George. "She was going to send you some breakfast. And I will bring you out the washpan and things."

"It isn't necessary," said Mr. Shaw, waving his hand. "I seldom wash. I don't hamper myself by no society conventionalities. Do you have coffee for breakfast?" George said they did. "And biscuits? Now I'll tell you what I like, George. I like a biscuit that's brown on both sides and flakey in the middle. I don't lay no injunctions on my meat, but if you have something with a bone in it, pass her out. I like to hear Fup agnawing the bone whilst I eat. It sounds sociable, like."

When this restaurant order was delivered to Miss Harriet, that lady sniffed indignantly. "The impudent scamp!" she exclaimed. We must get rid of him as soon as he has eaten." The morning was windy, sunshiny, delightful. Miss Harriet held the reception on the back porch, surrounded by Jennie, Mildred and George. Washington Shaw stood on the walk in a slouchy attitude, with Fup, no longer "Horace Greeley," lying at his feet. "Mr. Shaw," said Miss Harriet, "we have given you your breakfast and a place to stay all night. I think you owe us something in return."

"Yes, mom, but I ain't got no change."

"All we want is a little information."

The robber took off his tattered cap and made a low bow. "All I have is at your service," he said with quite a courtly grace. "Which science air you interested in? I ain't had no experimental training in chemistry, but anything in the way of geology, botony or political economy is jest like my native brier-patch."

"I want some particulars about that little girl you mentioned last night, the one you called 'Joy.'" Mr. Shaw lost his gallant manner and stooped to pat Fup's head. "I ain't got nothing to tell you," he said. "I don't know whur she is, nor what's become of her."

"You said you set Fup to watch over her."

"Well, I did set him to watch."

"Where was she when you did this? How came you with her? Where was her mother?"

"I guess I'll be agoing," said the robber.

"Mr. Shaw," said Miss Harriet, pointing her finger at him, "you stole that little girl from her stepmother and hid her in the city! While you were away at the saloon, somebody stole her from you. Now isn't that the truth?"

"Mom, that's jest what I done," said the other. "I stole her from her stepma, if you call it stealing when she wanted to go with me. 'Yes, Wash,' she says, 'I'll go anywhur with you,' she says, 'with you and Fup!' And the little sunbeam put her arms about my neck, such tiny arms! and when I got to the place, she was fast asleep. And I laid her on the bed, she looking like an angel, the hair all blowed about her rosy cheeks, and I says, 'Fup, you take keer of little Delight!'"

On hearing this name the dog started up with a loud bark. "He knows what I'm atalking of," said the master. "Fup knows. If the beast could only talk, he'd have a curus tale to tell about little Delight." Fup began to whine. "What harm come to her, Fup?" said the robber, bending down and patting the dog. "Whur is little Delight? How come you to let them git her? And did you foller her, old chap? Then how come you here, abeing Horace Greeley?" Fup sat upon his hind legs, drew back his ears till they seemed pinned to his head, opened his mouth and gave vent to a long, dismal howl.

"Still," said Miss Harriet, "I can't understand why you stole her from her natural guardian, unless you were a much more wicked man than you appear to be."

"I can only say this, mom: when little Delight's pa married the second time, he got a wicked person for his wife. That's what bruck his heart when he knowed it. You will excuse me for not coming out more direct, but it is enough to say as between lady and gentleman and children, that she was wicked. She hated little Delight, and little Delight was scared to death of her. I seen it wasn't no home for the girl. I says to myself, 'Washington,' I says, I never calls myself by my last name, 'You take the kid and do for her and it will keep you straight and give you an anchor to stiddy by.'"

"And did you think yourself a proper companion for the child?" demanded Miss Harriet.

"Well, it's this away. When a woman's wicked, like the one we air aspeaking of, she makes all about her wicked or miserable, one or tuther. Man is not so, mom. I 'lowed I could keep Delight sep'rit from my kind of life and put her in proper hands, a lot of trouble it were, but to be plain, I loved the child, for she's more like a voice from heaven than anything I knows of. When I was with that child, she seemed to take up all the good strings of my heart that had got loose and raveled, and she drawed them together in her little hands and pulled me up, and up, and up, out of my sinful place, as if she was Samson and I was the pillar of the temple, or whatever the building were that he wracked up with that last heave of his'n."

A boy was seen hurrying up with a telegram. It was from Mr. Weston, and read, "If robber turns up, persuade to stay; if won't, arrest."

"He had just reached St. Louis when he sent this," said Miss Harriet, staring at it through her spectacles. "Mr. Shaw, this concerns you."

"How so?" demanded the robber looking alarmed.

"It is from Mr. Weston, who requests you to stay here for the present. So this settles the question. If you are willing to stay and work for us, that wood is to be sawed, and a great deal of work for you can be found."

"I'll be bound they can," said Washington. "Well, I want to stay, I done told you that. At least for the present." During the following days, Miss Harriet was very much harrassed by trying to "make out" the robber. She was sure there was a great mystery about him, because at odd moments he displayed an astonishing acquaintance with large and unusual words. Besides, she could hardly ever tell if he were in earnest or joking. Another thing that bothered her was the warm friendship between him and George. Miss Harriet was afraid George would "learn things," meaning objectionable things, of course. In the meantime the "Daily Gleaner" was edited by the children with great interest. The number telling about little Delight was an extra with pictures. Mildred's story had become so mysterious that she was unable to solve her own plot, and had been forced to suspend the tale.

No letter had been received from the Westons.

One evening as all were preparing to retire, Mr. Shaw had gone to the barn some time ago, a knock sounded on the front door. "Who is there?" demanded Miss Harriet, nervously.

"Me," said a deep, strange voice. "And me," said another curious voice, which sounded as if it was trying to keep from laughing. "It's papa and mamma!" cried Jennie. The door was thrown open. Jennie buried herself in Mrs. Weston's arms. When she came out of her eclipse, she discovered a little girl of about six years, standing in the hall, looking from face to face.

"Who is this?" demanded Miss Harriet, bending down to catch a better look at the pale little face.

"My name is Delight," said the child. "I am the orphan. And I have come to live with all of you."

And I think we will have some more of this tale next week.

HERBERT L. WILLETT.

ABIDING IN CHRIST.*

Charlemague, in the closing years of his reign, gathered about him a circle of scholars and poets and organized what he called the "School of the Palace," to be the center of education in his kingdom. Jesus in the last hours of his ministry took the disciples away into a quiet place where, in the "school of the upper chamber," he gave them the most precious words recorded in the Scriptures. Much there was which they could not yet understand, but it would come back to them in future years under the promptings of the Spirit. It is probable that the entire body of discourses recorded in John 14-16, ending with the Savior's prayer in chapter 17, was uttered in the room where the Passover supper had been eaten and the memorial of the Lord's death instituted. Such seems to be the implication of 18:1, and it is not improbable that the words, "Arise, let us go hence," of 14:31, were originally connected with this latter passage.

As already noted, the fourth Gospel is characterized by many figurative references to himself in the teachings of Jesus. To the test, which includes allusions to his work as the good shepherd, the door, the light of the world and the water of life, this lesson adds the figure of a vine as the supporter and nourisher of the branches. Like the others, it was a figure of speech at once intelligible to the disciples, most of whom were countrymen, familiar with the processes of the vintage.

But a vine is tended and watched by a vine-dresser or gardener. In Jesus' reference to his function as source of life for his followers, he assigns this superintendence to the Father. There are two sorts of branches, the fruitful and the fruitless. The latter the Father takes away. Jesus here refers to no direct act of God, but to the divine law of all life. When a branch ceases to bear fruit we observe that nature takes the speediest possible means of ridding the tree of the incumbrance. If there is a human gardener he sees that it is detrimental to the welfare of the tree and removes it. If left to itself the tree exerts itself to cast off the useless member. The function of the gardener is to assists nature. In the spiritual as in the natural world, the laws of life are the laws of God. A branch that refuses to bear fruit has pronounced its own doom; it cannot remain on the vine. In the spiritual life the person who fails or ceases to perform the service characteristic of the Christian becomes useless and is, by his own choice and by the necessity of the case, separated from the living body. It is not a question of church membership or profession. One may be a member of the church to all external appearance, and even perform the external functions of church relationship, while possessing no vital relation to Christ and actually separated from him by the fact of fruitlessness. This is the profoundest fact of Christian experience. It is not the membership in a visible body, it is not the acceptance of a form of words or a test of doctrines which constitutes one a follower of Christ. It is not even a rite or ordinance, however approved or scriptural, that unites the soul to the Master. These are but meaningless if unity with Christ in vision and purpose is not sought and obtained. Many people seem willing to be members of the church or to take any external step that may be required, but are not willing to be united to Christ in spirit and life. Such unwillingness to pay the full price of spiritual life is the secret of weakness and barrenness. They are like branches tied to the vine, but having no vital contact. It is not divine wrath which removes such. It is the demand for life on the part of the vine and the living branches. The organism must rid itself of that which loads and obstructs it. The fire is for the useless branch. All nature, physical and spiritual, cries out for its burning. To be fruitless is to invite the flame.

On the other side, all nature welcomes and rallies to the support of the fruitful branch. If there is a gardener, he prunes and cleanses it. Nature centers its affection and blessing on the parts that perform their functions. The secret of bearing fruit is vital contact with Christ. Not only to believe in him, but to enter into his vision of God, of life, of power, of responsibility, to have his mind, to share his purposes for the world, to be possessed by him till it is possible to say, "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me;" this is the secret of life and power. This is to be "in Christ." It is not merely a formal relation; it is the possession of his confidence, his sympathy and love. Such a Christian is beyond the reach of danger. He is passed from death unto life. There is no condemnation to those who are in Christ Jesus. All things work together for good to those who love God. Such are bearing the fruit of the Spirit, and that splendid catalogue of qualities belonging to that fruit—love, joy, peace, etc.—must be characteristic of one who abides in Christ. This is the secret of power, of love, of constant satisfaction. Our weak, inefficient lives may be made strong and serviceable by this abiding union with Christ.

Herein also lies the secret of prevailing prayer. It is only one who enters into the mind of Christ who can pray aright. Prayer is not that formal and stereotyped thing which it often seems, but the commerce of the soul with God. Only one who is acquainted with God by constant habits of prayer comes to discern the secret of life with Christ, and to know the things for which prayer should be offered. The etiquette of courts is learned only by those who know royalty. The true attitude of soul in the divine presence is learned only by those who come often. To such who come to desire only what God seeks to bestow, prayer is habitual and prevalent. They grasp the hand that moves the world.

Moreover, on such unity with Christ and such fruit-bearing God's glory waits. In a sense the glory of God is unaffected by man. He has set his glory above the heavens. But most truly, also, can his honor never be completed, his glory never attained, till the redemptive process is complete, and many sons are likewise brought to glory. To feel that the fullness of God's life waits for the completion of ours and that without our co-operation God can never be fully glorified, gives the profoundest significance to our lives, and fills them with the greatest value and responsibility. By bearing much fruit the Father is glorified and we become Christ's disciples indeed.

The tenderness of Jesus' appeals to the disciples to abide in his love must touch every heart, even to the end of time. That love of his was not exhausted on the twelve, but goes out to all. His love is like an atmosphere of sunlight. Jude says, "Keep yourselves in the love of God." Come out of the shadow and abide in the light. In this atmosphere there is health and blessing, satisfaction in the highest service, the consciousness of power, the pursuit of the noblest purposes, unity with Christ in all his redemptive work, the consummation of the Father's glory, and the fulfilling of Jesus' joy and of our own.

SUGGESTIONS FOR TEACHING.

Christ is the true vine, the only source of life and power. He is not independent of the Father, but united with him in the program of righteousness. There is no place in the universe for a useless organ or limb; nature, society and the divine kingdom get rid of all such as speedily as possible. It is therefore an awful peril to be good for nothing. All blessing comes to those who are serviceable. The Word of Christ is the means of purifying the heart. Where it enters nothing unholy can remain. If we abide in Christ, i. e., stay near him in spirit and purpose, he assures us he will remain with us. Individual Christians, not different denominations or sects, are the branches; these words can never rightly be used to sanction divisions in the church. Whatever is useless is destroyed; the wheat is gethered into the garner, the chaff is consumed. Union with Christ is the secret of knowing how to pray aright, and to receive the answer to our prayers. God's glory depends on the conduct of his children. One cannot be a disciple of Jesus without being like Jesus. The love of Christ is the atmosphere in which there is safety and peace.

Sad and Loathsome.

By W. J. Lhamon, Director.

The full glory of missionary work is like a rainbow resting on a dark and terrible cloud. We sometimes fear that our handbooks, by reason of their exceeding brevity, fail to give our readers a full sense of the crying need of missions. Because of this, and because of a feeling in some quarters that the average pagan is a happy and contented being, who is best off when not disturbed by missions and missionaries, we think it well to reproduce here some things recently told in the Missionary Review of the World about the city of Benares, the Mecca of Hinduism in India. It is a city adorned with many palaces and temples, and some of the architecture is "curious, ornate and varied." A double temple is described, "whose exterior resembles that of a mosque." The domes are overlaid with plates of pure gold. Its interior is filled with almost innumerable idols—images of Gunpat, Parwati, the sacred bull, Siva and many others. The whole scene was loathsome in the extreme. Swarms of people were going in and out of the temple, each one going in carrying a plate filled with flowers, rice and cups of oil and water, which form the offerings to the idols. Stalls of flowersellers and oil and grainvenders blocked the road on either side. The water, oil and flowers which fell on the pavement were trampled into a slimy paste, and as most of the flowers were marigolds, the odor was sickening. The temples in the crowded city, the idols, the deluded worshiping throngs, and above all the scenes along the river's edge, all proclaim superstition, impurity, vileness, a people given over to uncleanness and all abominations."

Our readers will see in this picture of pagan worship nothing of the Christians faith and hope and brotherly kindness; in it the teacher has no place and the mind of the devotee is left a blank, the prey of ignorance, fanaticism and superstition, and how could there be any revelation through this sickening slime of trampled rice oil, and marigolds!

But the picture is not complete. The writer continues: "We spent most of our time in a boat, going up and down the two miles of river front. The numerous ghats are long flights of wide stone steps reaching down below the water's edge. All day long and most of night these great steps are literally covered with throngs of people, all eager to wash away their sins by a plunge into Mother Ganges. . . A Brahmin priest was leading a young woman into the water. We are told that he was giving her the holy bath. He dipt her up and down, mumbling incantations all the while. She placed the edge of his robe on her head every now and then, and the sad sight suggested temple practices such as Pundita Ramabai tells us go on in this great city of Hinduism and elsewhere in India."

To make the picture more lurid, here is a description of the burning ghats: "Whatever the rite of cremation may be elsewhere, here it partook only of the repulsive. The bodies are brought on bamboo stretchers and are placed just inside the edge of the stream while the pyre is being made ready. This is the place where "suttee" used to be performed, before English law put a stop to the practice. One corpse was that of a man about forty years old. His widow, in the white garments of widowhood, came down to the water's edge and, dipping up some of the blessed Ganges, poured it over the face of the dead. When the body was lifted on the pyre, she helped to pile wood on it, and it was her hand that applied the torch. When the sickening crackling began she went up the bank a little distance, and at a gesture from a relative—perhaps a command also—she picked up a stone, and putting her hands alternately on the ground, she broke off the pretty glass bangles from her wrists and walked up the bank a desolate widow, done with pleasures, ornaments and even respect; perhaps to endure treatment which will make her wish for the olden, sharper but speedier death of the suttee."

Perhaps the scene cannot be completed on paper. Our author says she dare not write the worst. But to the above one must add monkey temples, numerous fakirs, holy beggars, dying pilgrims, lustful priests and naked ascetics, who rival the very cows in posing as gods. This is Benares, we are told, and because such places exist beneath our sweet heavens and smiling sun, we plead for the presence in them of the Christian teacher and preacher with the Word of God, and science and reason and history and civilization accompanying it, that life may be made endurable and heaven desirable to many myriads who are yet living more mournfully than the beasts which perish.

MEN OF YESTERDAY. A Series of Character Sketches of Prominent Men among the Disciples of Christ. By Thos. W. Grafton, with an Introduction by Benj. L. Smith. St. Louis, Christian Publishing Co. 1899.

It is perfectly in keeping with the law of religious development that there is a decided tendency now among us to study the historic sources of our religious movement and to acquaint ourselves with the character and lives of the men who, under God, did most to give direction and impetus to that movement. This volume is a praiseworthy effort to meet the demand for information in succinct form concerning a group of these men. The sketches in this handsome volume just from the press of the Christian Publishing Co. are of Walter Scott, B. W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, Barton W. Johnson and Otis A. Burgess. These are not, of course, complete biographies of these men, for that would have made too ponderous a volume, but the sketches are so skillfully drawn, the essential facts are so compactly stated, that one finishes the reading of the volume with the feeling that he has a fair knowledge of the character and work of the subjects of these sketches.

The six men, sketches of whom make up this volume of 291 pages, and who are made to live again before the eyes of the reader, are worthy of a place in this series of historical volumes. They were men of "light and leading," whose labors contributed in no small degree toward the success which has crowned our efforts at religious reformation. It can hardly fail to stimulate the faith and religious zeal of the younger generation among us to read these sketches of these splendid men of God, who consecrated their learning, their talents, their lives to the cause of religious reformation. This volume might well be made a part of the Bethany C. E. Reading Course and of Sunday-school libraries, that our young people might become familiar with the leading facts and characteristics of the men into whose labors we of to-day have entered.

Both the author and the publishers have done their work well, and the result is a book which will find a place very generally in the libraries of the brotherhood. We take pleasure in commending it to our readers as worthy of reading and preserving for reference.

MAY MAGAZINES.

Sidney Lanier was a musician of exquisite taste as well as a lyric poet, and in the May Scribner's will be given a number of his letters to his wife upon musical subjects, which are a blending of poetic imagination with musical appreciation.

Newfoundland is at present the centre of interest among the North American Colonies. A picturesque account of "St. John's," the capital of the island, will be written for Pall Mall for May, by a resident, and will be illustrated by many fine photographs.

The May Woman's Home Companion contains the latest literary production of Julia Magruder, the poular Southern novelist, in the opening chapters of the serial "A Sunny Southerner." Harriet Prescott Spofford also begins a continued story, entitled "Cyril," that has to do with a vital question of domestic happiness.

An interesting symposium on "Missionary Interest and Missionary Income" gives especial value to the Missionary Review of the World for May. The writers include a number of prominent secretaries, pastors, laymen and women, and their criticisms and suggestions are brief, pithy and to the point.

GOSPEL MELODIES

REVISED AND ENLARGED.

First Lines of Some of the Best Songs in this Excellent Book

Praise Him! Praise Him!
I love to steal awhile away.
Delay not, Delay not.
Softly and tenderly.
If God has riches given you.
Oh, I want to be still nearer.
Where the billows roll the highest.
There is a land beyond somewhere.
Oh, would to me were only given.
The Bible reveals a glorious land.
The voice of the Savior says come.
The path is set with many a thorn.
Oh, the love of God to me.
List to the song of the reapers.
Night with ebon pinion.
In the presence of our God we meet again.
Preaching Jesus on the way.
I ask not earthly treasure.
Oh, bless the Lord, Oh my soul.
There'll be room enough in heaven.
I am going to Jesus.
Broad is the road that leads to death.
There is a home, a beautiful home.
Attend young friends while I relate.
Peacefully lay her down to rest.
In thy name, Oh, Lord, assembling.
Toiling for Jesus day by day.
How sweet 'tis to know.
When our earthly life is ended.
Just beyond the shad'wy valley.
The Lord's our Rock, in Him we hide
Far beyond the rolling Jordan.
Lead me gently home, Father.
How firm a foundation.
Go on, you pilgrims.
Oh, how lovely! (Anthem.)
List to the voice of the Savior.
In our Father's home above.
There is one thought that cheers my way.
Make channels for the streams of love.
I've found a friend in Jesus.
It is the hour of prayer.
When storm-clouds arise in the sky.
I wonder if any poor sinner will come.
Oh, the wondrous love of Jesus.
See the ranks of sin approaching.
A thousand lords had gathered in the palace of Belshazzar.
Glory and praise to the Lord who died for me.
See! on the cross, the Savior bleeds.
There's a city of light 'mid the stars, we are told.
Just over the river are palaces grand.
Christians, are you growing weary?
There is a rock in a weary land.
O pilgrims, look forward to glory.
When the day is full of gladness.
There is a precious fountain.
Beyond the golden sunset sky.
Do you know a soul that's fainting?
Yes, we have a friend in Jesus.
Come now and let us reason.
When the waves are rolling high.
There is a house not made with hands.
Gone from our home.
I am on my journey to Canaan's happy land.
In thy temple, Lord, we gather.
Christ is knocking at my sad heart.
Let me sing the old song o'er again.
I will tell you an old simple story.
I'll rejoice in the love of Jesus.
There's a beautiful land far beyond the sky.
There's a hand ever ready to lift up all the fallen.
All for Jesus, all for Jesus.
There's a city that is far, far away.
When the trump of God shall sound.
Where are the ones we love fondly?
Teach me thy way.
God of our salvation.
Oh, there is joy in believing.
Praise Him, praise the name of God most high. (Anthem.)
Great is the Lord. (Anthem.)
One sweetly solemn thought.
Make a joyful noise unto the Lord. (Anthem.)
Hear the call to labor for the Lord.
Savior while my heart is tender.
Of the old time I'm thinking.
Twilight is stealing.
At home or away, in the alley or street.
Mother, tell me of the angels.

GOSPEL MELODIES contains several good easy anthems that will please choirs and singing societies. It is the only church music book of its class that does.

Obituaries.

[One hundred words will be inserted free. Above one hundred words, one cent a word. Please send amount with each notice.]

CHRONIC.

Bro. F. M. Chronic was born May 1st, 1836, died April 8, 1899. For 30 years he had been a faithful soldier of Jesus Christ, and for several years was elder in Christian Church at West Union, Ill. For many weeks he was confined to his room, yet he murmered not. He rejoiced in the Christian's hope. He leaves behind a devoted Christian wife and daughter. He was loved by all. To such as Bro. Chronic death is but the threshold to a more blessed environment. Funeral services were conducted by the writer.

EDWARD E. BOYER.

Hutsonville, Ill.

ERGENBRIGHT.

Died, March 31st, Sister Ruth Ergenbright, at Kellogg, Kansas. Her remains were brought to Noodesha for interment. She was in the 25th year of her age. Was married to Bro. C. S. Ergenbright in 1893 and united with the Church of Christ two years ago. She leaves a husband and two little daughters and five brothers and five sisters and her aged father to mourn her untimely death. Her last words were, "I am saved." J. A. SMITH.

Wichita, Kan., April 15, 1899.

FIELDS.

Miss Inez Fields, second daughter of Judge Fields and Mrs. Jehu Fields, was born in Lawrenceville, Ill., Sept. 27, 1869. While she was in school in Clinton, Mo., she became a Christian under the preaching of D. R. Lucas. This was in 1888. To her vow of consecration made in baptism she was faithful unto death. She fell asleep in Christ Friday morning, April 14, 1899, at the home of her parents in Colorado Springs, Col. Her brother, Byron, preceded her to the spirit world 39 weeks to a day. To his memory she was tenderly devoted. The disease from which she suffered was valvular affection of the heart. Her sufferings were protracted and at times intense. Just before her death she seemed to be improving in health. Lord's day, April 9th, she attended public worship. She was buried on Sunday, April 16, one week later. In her life Miss Inez was wonderfully Christ-like. Her passion was to be good and to do good. She was blessed with a quick and vigorous mind. Study was a pleasure. She dared to look hard questions in the face. Literary work was easy. In her life plan a book was to be written, the purpose of which was good to men and honor to God. But her work is done and it was well done. No one who knew her doubts that she did what she could. Blessed are those who live and die as did Miss Inez Fields. B. B. TYLER.

FOSTER.

Died at Independence, Kansas, April 3rd, 1899, Sister Emma K. Foster, wife of Bro. J. L. Foster, in the 46th year of her age. She was married to Bro. Foster in 1877 in Bartholomew County, Ind., and together came to this state in 1884, where they have resided till death took her. She united with the Church of Christ at the early age of 15, and died as she had lived, a true child of God, leaving a devoted husband, one son and one sister, also a host of friends, to mourn their loss, but not sorrowing as those who have no hope.

J. A. SMITH.

Wichita, Kansas, April 15, 1899.

HARDY.

Bro. Lion, son of Bro. and Sister R. C. Hardy, a member of Cowardin Avenue Christian Church, Manchester, Va., died after a brief illness at the C. O. Hospital, Clifton Forge, Va., on Jan. 16, 1899, of typhoid fever. His mother reached him a few hours after his death. He was a model son, and a comfort to his parents, brothers and sisters. He is missed by the church and loved ones, but we hope to meet him again. Hosts of brethren and friends sympathize with his dear ones in their great sorrow. We know not why God took one so young and capable of doing for the Master, but we question not the motives of Him who is infinitely wise and boundlessly good. One by one those whom we love are being taken from us, but the Father and Son are our strength and joy. May we so live as to enjoy the blessedness of an endless life.

J. A. SPENCER.

Manchester, Va.

SWEENEY.

On the 19th of March some unseen power entered the home of Bro. John L. and Grace Sweeney and claimed as its victim, little Blanch, their only child, aged three years. After a brave struggle, in which she suffered much, her spirit took its flight to Jesus who said, "Suffer little children and forbid them not to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven." All was done that loving hands could do to rescue her. She died on the 24th and on the 26th we placed her little body in a lonely grave in the place selected for a cemetery. Thus we have the first grave in the Christian colony on Rainy River. Funeral conducted by the writer.

T. L. READ.

Elmo, Ont., March 31, 1899.

WHITMAN.

Mary F. Whitman was born in Bath County, Kentucky, in 1832, and died at her home in Hannibal, Mo., April 9, 1899. She leaves two married daughters and husband, John S. Whitman, and several brothers and sisters. She had a lingering illness of more than a year in duration and longed to depart and be with Christ. She was a faithful disciple of the Master for more than 40 years. She was faithful and true in all her relationships in life and will be missed from the activities of the community where she served and loved to do the will of God. LEVI MARSHALL.

Hannibal, Mo.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT?

For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

Publishers' Notes.

"Men of Yesterday" is just from the press. The author, T. W. Grafton, spent much time in collecting the facts he gives in this book. It contains sketches of the lives of Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, Barton W. Johnson and Otis A. Burgess. This work will give the reader biographical sketches of the above men who stood for years on the platform, "The Bible alone as the rule of faith and practice," and whose lives are an inspiration to those of us who will acquaint ourselves with their histories. The young people of the church of to-day should avail themselves of the opportunity of following T. W. Grafton in his history of the above defenders of God's truth. The price of the book is $1.00.

I have read "Mary Ardmore, or a Test of Faith," by J. H. Stark, and earnestly recommend it to the public. It brings out most forcibly the Christian's firm hold on the truth as taught by our Savior in the character of Mary Ardmore, and later in the life of her lover, Dr. Harlow.—J. D. Hays, Elkville, Ill.

"Mary Ardmore" is J. H. Stark's latest work. His former production, "Hugh Carlin," has had a wide reading, and has been a source of pleasure and profit to its many readers. The author sustains his reputation as a writer of religious stories in his late production, "Mary Ardmore." The book is a work of 328 pages, beautiful cloth binding, and the price is $1.00, postage paid.

The Quincy Whig, of Quincy, Ill., gives the following notice of "Queen Esther" in its issue of April 19th:

"The beautiful story of 'Queen Esther' is told in a pleasing manner in a volume by M. M. Davis, Dallas, Tex., just published by the Christian Publishing Co., of St. Louis. To those men and women who admire pure and strong characters the story of 'Queen Esther,' as told in this recent work, cannot fail to prove interesting."

The price of "Queen Esther" is 75 cents.

The girls and boys of to-day will be delighted in reading "Aunt Maria's Saturday Talk Series of Childhood." These talks are complete in six volumes, entitled, "Little Presidents," "Little Kings," "Little Queens," "Little Orators," "Little Statesmen" and "Little Generals." Aunt Maria tells of incidents in the lives of presidents, kings, queens, orators, statesmen and generals which are true and that attract the child-mind. The mental wants of the child are happily met in these books. Each volume is profusely illustrated, clear, bright print, and bound in beautiful colored cloth. The price is 50 cents per volume, or $2.50 for the set of six volumes. These books are just from the press.

Do you need good reading matter? Write us for our large catalogue, in which you will find a full list of our publications. You will find splendid books mentioned in this catalogue, which should be in your homes where your sons and daughters will take a delight in reading them. A good book well read is a source of pleasure and profit in any home, and no home is furnished properly without good books. Examine our catalogue. It is sent free for the asking. You might spend sometime in selling some of our publications. Agents' terms quoted to those who will want to canvass for the sale of our books.

What We Plead For.

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The past week in the Philippines has been marked by hard fighting in which the Americans have been generally successful and the first attempt by the Filipinos to make peace. The center of activity has been Calumpit, a fortified town on the Rio Grande, seven miles Northwest of Malolos. The plan of the campaign involved the co-operation of two divisions, Gen. MacArthur moving straight north along the line of the railroad from Manila to Calumpit, while Gen. Lawton made a flank movement, passing through territory hitherto unexplored by American troops and approached Calumpit from the east. On Tuesday Calumpit was taken after a brisk fight and the Filipinos fired the town and retreated in good order across the Rio Grande to a fortified camp on the north bank of that stream. The crossing of the river by the American troops and the successful attack upon the retrenchments form one of the most brilllant episodes of the war. The American losses were less severe than might have been expected in consideration of the advantage which the enemy had in numbers and position. The hero of the occasion is Col. Funston of the 20th Kansas Volunteers, whose intrepidity and good judgment Gens. MacArthur and Wheaton declare to have won the victory. The men of Kansas have repeatedly distinguished themselves for the highest soldierly qualities during the Philippine campaign, but nowhere more signally than in this fight. There is talk already of promotion for Col. Funston and he deserves it. The retrenchments captured on the north bank of the river, together with the fortifications of Calumpit on the south bank, are said to form the strongest military position in the island. It is at least the key to the northern part of Lugon. At this point the insurgents successfully withstood the Spanish forces in 1896, and the defeat now may well discourage the Filipinos.

Immediately after the fall of the stronghold on the Rio Grande and the retreat of the insurgents to the north, Gen. Luna, who is in command of the Filipino forces at the front, sent emissaries under a flag of truce to confer about peace. They were brought to Manila where they consultod with Gen. Otis and also with some members of the Philippine Commission. Their request was for an armistice to continue until May 1, at which date the Filipino Congress will assemble and consider terms of peace. Gen. Otis refused to consider this proposition, but said that the United States was ready at any time to accept unconditional surrender and grant amnesty to all Filipinos who have borne arms. The proposition to grant an armistice until Aguinaldo's Congress could consider the matter involved several risks. First, that it was merely a scheme to gain time for throwing up new fortifications and preparing to make a new stand. Second, that Aguinaldo would gain strength with the natives in the north, who would know that the American advance had ceased but would not know about the armistice, by representing that he had stopped the Americans by force of arms. Third, that it would be construed as implying an official recognition of the Filipino Congress as a body with which the United States could treat. In reply to the request for a cessation of hostilities until the Filipino Government could consider terms of peace, Gen. Otis very properly replied that he knew nothing of any Filipino Government, but only of certain insurgents under arms. With these he is willing to treat on the terms specified. The emissaries have returned and the truce is ended. Gen. Otis believes that the insurgents are badly demoralized by their last retreat, and that their commanders are discouraged.

When a recent writer characterized us as a nation of negro-burners, the allegation was too sweeping to be true, but after such exhibitions of savagery as that given in Georgia last week one cannot put much spirit into the protest against the characterization. A negro who by his own confession was guilty of a double crime of which murder was the lesser half, was burned at the stake by an infuriated mob. No man in his right mind can think either of the crime or the punishment which was meted out to the criminal without a shudder of horror, and one's indignation at the action of the mob cannot but be mitigated in a degree by the consideration of the guilt of the victim. The Lynching was a detestable exhibition of lawless and brutal savagery, but it was savage and lawless justice. But the second part of the tragedy wss worse than the first. An aged negro preacher was seized by the mob on suspicion of complicity with the former victim in the same crime. There was no evidence against him which a court of justice could have considered seriously for a moment. After prolonged torture, the details of which are too sickening to recount, he was left hanging lifeless on a tree. Citizens of Georgia will point with shame to the county in which these outrages occurred. In the eyes of Americans in general Georgia is disgraced. But as the world looks at it, the disgrace belongs to the whole country. It touches the honor of every one of us that such an affair should be possible in our country. And yet the Atlanta Constitution, one of the most influential papers in the South, attemps to defend the action of the mob by throwing all the emphasis on the crime which it was punishing. The deliberate defense of the deed is as disgraceful as the deed itself.

April 27 was the birthday of General Grant, and the anniversary was fittingly celebrated in many cities. The occasion was especially noteworthy at Galena, Ill., and Philadelphia. At Galena, Grant's old home, from which he went directly to the war, there is a Grant's Birthday Association, which conducts an annual celebration. At the first of these annual celebrations, under the auspices of the association in 1893, the orator was William McKinley. This year the address was delivered by Postmaster-General Charles Emory Smith. In Philadelphia an equestrian statue of Grant was unveiled in Fairmount Park. President McKinley and several of his Cabinet were present, and the unveiling was made the occasion of a great demonstration. The cruiser Raleigh lay in the harbor and Capt. Coghlan was one of the invited guests at the exercises. It was noted with interest that the Captain was warmly greeted by the President, and the conclusion is that he does not rest under any very severe official displeasure on account of his indiscreet utterances about Admiral von Diederichs at the Army and Navy Club.

General Kitchener, having conquered the Soudan, is preparing to hold it by putting it in communication with civilization. To this end he is building a railroad from Wady Halfa to Kartoum. He is in a hurry about this railroad, and consequently when he came to a tributary of the Nile which had to be bridged he wanted to bridge at once. Specifications were prepared and submitted to English bidders. The fastest of them would not agree to furnish the parts ready to put up within less than six and a half months. The competition was opened to American bidders and a Philadelphia firm agreed to furnish the bridge, on board at Philadelphia, in forty-eight days. The terms were accepted and the work was actually done in forty days. Naturally the English bridge builders do not like it. You couldn't expect them to. Their only recourse seems to be to say foolish things about unfair advantages which were given to the American firm. They charge that the specifications were altered, or that the American firm got hold of the specifications in some underhand way months ago and had the work nearly completed when their bid was accepted, or that they worked off some old bridge that they had lying around. On the basis of such ridiculous charges they have had the effrontery to begin to talk in the papers about the "Atbara Bridge Scandal." The Philadelphia firm laughs full merrily and says the English are all right, but too slow for the bridge building business. It is only another case of the thing that is constantly occurring, the successful competition of American iron manufacturers with British and German firms.

The pope's recent condemnation of "Americanism" in the Roman Catholic Church has awakened echoes in the European press. Few continental editors know enough about religious affairs in America to risk a defense of what the pope has condemned, but many are found, even outside the ranks of Protestantism, who are willing to approve the similar movement in Bavaria, led by Professor Schell, of Wurzburg. Professor Schell has retracted everything which he said in the four books condemned by the Congregation of the Index, but there are still many who believe and are willing to say that he stated the truth when he said that at present Protestantism has an advantage in that it conformed to the spirit of the age. On the other hand, the official organs of the church are of course unanimous in their agreement with the pope. The fact is pointed out that in Italy not only the Republican papers, like L'Italia, but the political papers devoted to the monarchy, agree in praising Americanism, and this is considered as evidence that it must be something inimical to the interests of the papacy. The "Civilta Cattolica," of Rome, an official organ of the pope, has these cheerful words about the objectionable features of Americanism:

> "To be condemned, for instance, is the tendency of lauding the American Constitution and Government system as the highest ideal of statesmancraft which should be imitated and copied by other nations; and none the less to be condemned is the custom of claiming that the relation between state and church as it exists in America is to be a model for other lands, and that state and church should always be separated. The ideal, according to the teachings of Leo XIII., is that state and church should go hand-in-hand. Another mistake of Americanism consists in this, that the republican form of government is lauded as that form which is most satisfactory to the church and has grown out of her principles, or to teach that the principle of freedom, equality and fraternity is preached by the church."

There has been of late an extraordinary drift of public opinion in the direction of what a few years ago would have been instantly condemned as socialism. Municipal ownership is in the air and, unless the signs of the times are misleading, it will soon be a substantial reality in more than one of our large cities. Detroit, under the leadership of Governor Pingree, is a pioneer in the enterprise. Toledo is committed to it by the re-election of Mayor Jones with that as the principal plank in his platform. Carter Harrison declared himself in favor of municipal ownership before his re-election as mayor of Chicago. Mr. Phelan, mayor of San Francisco, writes in favor of civil service and municipal ownership versus the spoils system and private ownership of monopolies. There is an important movement on foot in New York City for the construction and operation of an underground railway by the city. There is still plenty of opponents to this tendency, but most of them have learned by this time that no effectual opposition can be made by holding up the hands in holy horror and crying, "Socialism!" There are abuses connected with the present system of franchises and monopolies, and every day is bringing a clearer and more universal consciousness of these abuses. In the course of nature there must be a change. The most obvious expedient is to try municipal ownership. Public opinion will continue to move in that direction until the experiment is made in some one of our cities on a large scale. If it is successful, the movement will be immensely strengthened. If it fails, there will be a reaction. Therefore, it behooves those who have faith in this policy to see that the attempt is not made rashly or without due preparation. The outcome of the first experiment means much for the future, and hence the interest and significance which attaches to the movements in the above-mentioned cities.

The discovery of a process for making liquid air and the extraordinary claims which are made for it by the discoverer, Mr. Charles E. Tripler, as a source of mechanical power, have created something of a commotion in the scientific world. The commotion would be greater but for the fact that most of the scientific journals characterize Mr. Tripler's assertions as nonsense. There is no doubt but that he has performed a genuine service to science by the invention of his method for liquifying atmospheric air, and the experiments which he has publicly performed with it are in the highest degree interesting and theoretically valuable. But the practical utility of liquid air is a different matter. Liquid air is simply cold air, as water is cold steam, but while the liquifying point for steam as it cools is 212 degrees above zero, the liquifying point for air is several hundred degrees below zero. In other words, while water boils, vaporizes and becomes steam at 212 degrees, liquid air boils, vaporizes and becomes ordinary atmospheric air at a point some hundreds of degrees below zero. When water becomes steam, the expansive force of the released vapor is a valuable mechanical agency. In the same way when liquid air is vaporized by raising its temperature a force is generated by the expanding vapor which may be mechanically valuable. Nobody denies that the force is there, but its practical value depends on the answer to one question: Will the expansion of a given quantity of liquid air give enough power to produce an equal amount of liquid air and have some left over for practical uses? The refrigerating plant which produces liquid air is run by an engine, and the engine may be run by liquid air. If the plant will produce more liquid air than is needed to run the engine, then Mr. Tripler has made a discovery compared with which the invention of the steam engine was mere child's play. The critics of the new invention almost unanimously agree that the engine cannot possibly produce more power than it consumes. Mr. Tripler says that with three gallons of liquid air he can produce ten, so that after loading the engine for the next round he has seven gallons left over for practical application. He says he has done it, but has not yet proved his assertion.

OUR FIRST CONGRESS.

The first Congress of the Disciples of Christ is now a matter of history. To say that it was a success would be altogether inadequate. It transcended the most sanguine expectations of its friends, both in numbers and in the interest awakened. If any one attending its sessions had entertained the idea that the propriety or need of such a congress was doubtful, that idea was entirely removed by the close of the congress. So strong was the conviction as to the value of such a gathering that it was unanimously voted to hold the next one a year hence instead of two years, as some of us had thought before the congress convened.

The first session began Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. After an opening prayer by J. P. Pinkerton, of Jefferson City, the chairman of the first session, J. H. Garrison, gave a brief address of welcome to the members of the congress present, together with a brief introduction of the topic under consideration, which was the "History of Doctrine." He congratulated those present on having attained to the dignity of members of congress, referred to the religious liberty which had always characterized this religious movement, making such a congress entirely in harmony with its history and spirit, and spoke of the suitability of St. Louis, located as it is in the center of the nation and of the brotherhood, as the seat for our first congress. He spoke of the World's Fair in 1903 in commemoration of the Louisiana Purchase and asked, "Why not a World's Congress of Disciples as one of the religious features of that Fair?"

HISTORY OF DOCTRINE.

The chairman then introduced Prof. E. S. Ames, of Butler College, Irvington, Ind., who read a very able paper on "The Value of a Theology," defining theology as "the science of divine things." He pointed out its relation to religion as that of "theory to practice, of science to art." He showed that the leaders among the Disciples of Christ from Alexander Campbell down have always recognized the value of theology, though in the popular mind the rejection of "official" theology has often led to "a blind opposition to all theology whatever." He contrasted the positions of Protestantism and Roman Catholicism, the former holding theoretically that speculation should be absolutely free, while the latter requires that all speculation shall issue directly in support of the dogmas of the church. Protestantism has not always been consistent with its fundamental principle in this respect. He next pointed out the task of theology at the present time. The paper was clear-cut, incisive in its statements, indicating a thoroughly disciplined mind and a wide acquaintance with theological and philosophical thought. The discussion of this paper was led by Dr. Albert Buxton, Chancellor-elect of Add-Ran University, and C. C. Rowlison, pastor of the church at Marshalltown, Iowa. These were followed by voluntary speeches, in which quite a number of brethren engaged. Some of the points made by the paper in the discussion were that the theology of the future is to be neither Roman Catholic nor Protestant, neither Trinitarian nor Unitarian, neither Calvinistic nor Arminian, but simply Christian. It was agreed on all hands that we must have a theology, but it was also agreed that no man had the right to make his theology a test by which to measure his brother's Christian character. In other words, theology is not to be made a test of fellowship or the basis of union and communion.

EDUCATION.

The second session, over which E. V. Zollars, President of Hiram College, presided, was of a more practical character. The subject was "Education." In his introduction the chairman said that the Disciples in their use of the great commission used to begin with the phrase, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Later on we discovered that back of this was the command, "Go." And now we had learned to emphasize the missionary feature of Christianity. But he called attention to the fact that there was still something lying further back than the word "Go," namely, the men who must go. Jesus spent three years in training preachers to "go into all the world." We have been neglecting that, he said, and at last we have begun to wake up to the necessity of preparing men in our institutions of learning for the service which Christianity demands of us in the present age. The address of the evening was by J. H. Hardin, President of Eureka College, on "College Endowment." It was a strong presentation of the necessity for college endowment based on the advance in the educational world in the past decade. The Disciples of Christ were committed by their history to the cause of education, but we have not heretofore discharged our full obligations in this respect. Not a single institution among us is sufficiently endowed. The remarkable growth of state institutions and some of the church or denominational institutions made it a necessity to increase our educational facilities or turn over the work of education of our young people either to the state or to other religious bodies. He pointed out in conclusion some practical considerations which bear upon this topic. The discussion was led by President Clinton Lockhart, of Christian University, who outlined the needs of a modern college, showing the necessity of endowment, and by Prof. W. P. Aylesworth, of Cotner University, who called attention to the fact that until we could reach the ideals which had been mentioned we could accomplish a great deal even with more limited facilities, and that we were doing this and that we must not despise the day of small things. The voluntary speeches emphasized the necessity of arousing the conscience of our men of wealth, particularly on the subject of the endowment of our schools. We should say that our educational interests received decided empasis in this session of the congress.

BIBLICAL STUDY.

The session on Wednesday morning was devoted to biblical study and was presided over by Dr. D. R. Dungan, of this city, who introduced this topic with a few pertinent remarks. J. J. Haley, of Cynthiana, Ky., now editor of the Christian Oracle, Chicago, read a paper on "The Scope and Significance of the Cry, 'Back to Christ,' in Modern Religious Thought." It was generally acknowledged that Bro. Haley reached the high-water mark of his intellectual effort in this splendid paper. The paper began with the confession at Cæsarea Philippi, which the writer held as the true place to begin. We need to go back, not simply to Jerusalem, but to Mt. Hermon. He pointed out how the real Christ had been obscured and how in modern times he had been rediscovered. The theological Christ of the Greeks, the ecclesiastical Christ of later times, had given way to the historic Christ. The Ritschlian movement in Germany had done great service in this restoration of Christ, but its fatal defect was that it stopped with the crucifixion and did not give us a living, reigning Christ. He thought our fathers builded better than they knew when they seized hold of this confession of Simon Peter as the essential truth of Christianity. In conclusion the paper pointed out the essential conditions of getting back to Christ.

The reviews of this paper by J. B. Briney and W. J. Lhamon were very able. Bro. Briney took issue with some of the points in the address, chiefly, however, emphasizing phases of the subject not brought out in the original paper, while the second review by Bro. Lhamon was a carefully prepared paper taking the same general view of the subject as that of Bro. Haley. Christ must have the supreme place even above the apostles. We were to understand the apostles through Christ rather Christ through the apostles, although we are dependent upon the apostles for our knowledge of Christ. Once, however, we have been led to Christ by the apostles and enlightened by His Spirit we are able to see that he is larger than even the apostles were able to comprehend. The discussion of this topic was also exceedingly interesting, not only in the different sidelights which were brought to bear on the subject, but in the spirit of liberty and courtesy which prevailed.

CITY EVANGELIZATION.

The afternoon of Wednesday was devoted to "City Evangelization," the chairman being E. W. Darst. Twenty-minute addresses were delivered by J. A. Lord, editor Christian Standard, on "The Urgency of City Evangelization;" on "Congregational Selfishness," by Geo. F. Hall, Decatur; on "Heroic Methods of City Evangelization," by F. G. Tyrrell, St. Louis; on "Resources for City Evangelization," by G. W. Muckley, Kansas City; on "The A. C. M. S.," by B. L. Smith, Cincinnati; on "The Pastor's Relation to City Evangelization," by B. Q. Denham, North Tonawanda, N. Y. These addresses were all spirited and practical, well emphasizing the various phases of the subject. It was clear that our cities must be evangelized, not only for their own sake, but for the sake of our institutions and for the sake of the church.

LITERATURE.

This session was presided over by Dr. W. T. Moore, of Columbia, whom one of the speakers referred to by mistake as having "passed down through the centuries!" After a brief introduction he introduced the speaker of the evening, Prof. W. D. MacClintock, of the University of Chicago, who spoke on "The Value of Literature in the Training of the Teacher of Religion." The address was of a high literary order and was a splendid emphasis of the part which literature must play in fitting the preacher for the highest usefulness in the training of the imagination, in the culture of the feelings by "vicarious experience," in the training of the taste for the perfect, in training the faculty of expression in language, in curing the disease of the "eloquent preacher," in acquainting the preacher with the human nature and experience with which he has to deal, in giving him the persuasive power of ideals, in preventing professionalism, etc. This lecture was ably discussed by B. O. Aylesworth, of Denver, and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair, of Columbia, Mo. The former had an independent treatment of the subject corroborative, however, of the address, while the latter was more of a review of the address, criticising some points and commending others. The lateness of the hour prevented any general discussion of the topic.

THEOLOGY.

Thursday forenoon was devoted to this subject, W. B. Craig, chancellor of Drake University, acting as chairman. After a happy introduction he introduced R. T. Mathews, pastor of the church at Newport, Ky., who read a carefully written and very able paper on "The Crucial Points Concerning the Holy Spirit." These crucial points were (1) the personality of the Holy Spirit; (2) baptism in the Holy Spirit; (3) Method of the Holy Spirit's operation in salvation. Of course, the personality of the Holy Spirit was maintained. The baptism in the Holy Spirit was held to be taught, especially by four passages of Scripture: 1 Cor. 12:13; 6:11; Titus 3:5, 6; Eph. 5:18—"Proof explicit and implicit of a present baptism in the Spirit." On the third point he held that there were two errors to be avoided, namely, mysticism on the one hand and rationalism on the other. "Spirit-alone and Word-alone" theories were both to be rejected. He held that the Spirit's presence in His work to-day is not historical simply, but dynamic. The paper was reviewed by F. N. Calvin, of Milwaukee, who, however, presented a rather supplementary statement of a practical character, and by W. E. Ellis, of Nashville, who in an able, well-written paper, took issue with the paper of Bro. M. on the first and second crucial points. The discussion on this subject was intensely interesting as might be expected, and there was general regret that lack of time prevented a fuller discussion.

CHURCH ORGANIZATION.

This subject occupied the seventh session of the congress and was presided over by Dr. B. B. Tyler, of Colorado Springs. Omitting his introduction of the topic he introduced A. B. Philputt, of Indianapolis, at once, who read a very fine paper on "Organization and its Adaptation to the Present Needs of the Church." The writer took the position that the New Testament presents no scheme of divinely authorized church organization, but that it presented rather different types determined by local environment. Organization is a matter of development and the church is a living organism. We have the liberty to adapt it to existing conditions so as to make it effective. He thought some readjustments were necessary now in the unification of our missionary interests, in our educational work, in our congregational co-operation, in local fields, especially in city congregations and in the utilization of latent forces. The discussion was led by W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City and Geo. A. Miller, of Covington, Ky. Bro. Richardson emphasized the need of a better supervision of our churches and expressed a willingness to put himself under any good man to whom might be given the superintendence of a given district to decide the question as to his remaining or leaving the congregation. Bro. Miller dealt chiefly with the problems of the local church. The discussion of this subject was very lively, being closed with a speech by the chairman in which he declared his opinion on the subject very freely. He and Bro. Briney took the position that the elder or bishop in the primitive church was a preacher of the gospel, corresponding in his function to the man whom we now call pastor, and that there was a plurality of these in the cities because there was a plurality of meeting-places.

CHRISTIAN WORSHIP.

The closing session of the congress on Thursday evening was devoted to "Christian Worship." Dr. H. O. Breeden, of Des Moines, presided, and after a graceful but brief introduction of the topic introduced Mrs. Ida Harrison, of Lexington, who gave a very interesting and instructive paper on "The Enrichment of Public Worship Among the Disciples." She spoke on ritualism in worship, of its evil tendencies, but thought we had, perhaps, gone to an opposite extreme. Our church needs a more reverential attitude on the part of the worshipers, involving an atmosphere of stillness, and silent prayer was recommended on entering the church. More emphasis should be given to the worship, which should be characterized by dignity and decorum. Importance of music was emphasized and the plea made for a higher standard of hymns and of music. Stress was laid upon communion service which should be freed from everything not relevant to the service. A higher standard of personal piety is, perhaps, essential in effecting this needed reform. The discussion of this topic was wholly voluntary, but was exceedingly interesting and profitable. The importance of cultivating the spirit and demeanor of reverence in the house of God was much emphasized. This should be done without sacrificing sociability, which has its legitimate place in church life.

CLOSING WORDS.

The general chairman of the Congress then took charge of the meeting and conducted the closing exercises, which consisted of brief talks by the members of the Congress expressing their appreciation of what they had seen and heard and the impressions the Congress had made on their minds. Bro. Briney expressed the feeling of us all, perhaps, when he said two things had impressed him as never before during this Congress, namely, the liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, and the unity which underlies all our differences of opinion. Many brief, happy speeches were made, and all expressed their delight at having been present at this Congress. The chairman in conclusion told of the origin of this Congress in a little group of preachers resting from the summer's heat at Macatawa Park, on Lake Michigan, in August last, and his gratification at the splendid outcome. It was not in the power of any one present, he said, to know the vast influence for good which would flow from this Congress. "God Be With You Till We Meet Again" was then sung, a closing prayer was offered by the chairman, and the First Congress of the Disciples of Christ had come to an end.

It is scarcely too much to say that this Congress marks the beginning of an era of larger liberty, closer fraternity, and of a safe, enlightened progress in the history of our movement. At a brief business session a committee appointed for the purpose, of which Bro. Briney was chairman, recommended that the second session of this Congress be held in Indianapolis, during the last week in April next, and that an executive committee be appointed to prepare a program for same. This was unanimously adopted, and our next Congress convenes in the capital of Indiana.

WINGS AND WEIGHTS.

Dr. Deems divided the members of his church into two classes, wings and weights, those who made his burdens light by helping to carry them, and those who made them heavier by adding to their weight. Every person in the world belongs to one or the other of these classes in relation to the burden-bearing of humanity—he is a wing who makes the burden of the world lighter, or he is a weight who makes it heavier and more burdensome to carry. To which class do you belong?

Consider how much an infidel adds to the burden of humanity. He takes away its hope and adds to its despair. He takes the joy out of life and puts sorrow in its place. He puts out all the lights of the future and leaves burdened and despairing humanity confronted by eternal night. The natural language of despair is this: "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," and this is the natural cry that arises from modern materialism. There is no God and no Father in heaven to care for us. We are a family of helpless and homeless orphans. We are voyagers in a crazy ship on a wild and stormy sea, without a compass or captain, sailing whence we know not, whither we know not. To pass from mystery through mystery into mystery is the fate of man, and there is not a word of explanation. The world formed itself. Matter is from everlasting. Its atoms and its molecules had in them marvelous forces—chemical affinity, attraction and repulsion. After much selecting and rejecting and wild confusion they came together, arranged themselves, and gradually the world as we now behold it was formed—formed without a God, formed without a superintending mind. Verily, great are molecules! Great is chemical affinity! How it lightens the burdens of life to be told that there is no intelligent spirit in man; there is no intelligence, no voluntary movement anywhere; the universe is only a huge automaton moved by forces. Man is only organized matter. There is no world to come. When we die we are dissolved—that is all. The organized matter is disorganized.

The prophets who fought so nobly have been dissolved. The apostles, who asked nothing from the world but liberty to do good, have been dissolved. The reformers, who spent their lives to elevate their fellowmen, have been dissolved. The martyrs, who died that the truth might live, have been dissolved. The great statesmen, who labored for the civilization of the race, have been dissolved. The philosophers, who explored the mystic chambers of nature and brought to light her hidden treasures, have been dissolved. The poets, the sons of genius, who caught sweet music in the stir of the forces, and brought it to us to cheer our life, have been dissolved. Our dear ones, whom we loved so well and have lost awhile, have been dissolved. All the generations of men have been mistaken. The heathen philosophers of old said, The soul can never die. The great poems of Greece and Rome have descriptions which involve the same doctrine. The Scandinavian warriors believed that after death they should join their forefathers in Odin's banquet hall. The American Indians, who lived by the chase, believed most firmly that there are happy hunting grounds beyond the flood of death. Mohammedans looked for a paradise in a future world. Pious Hebrews sought "a better country, that is a heavenly," and we did once upon a time believe that the dead lived. But modern materialism has discovered that prohets, apostles, reformers, martyrs, Greeks, Romans, the wise and the unwise, all the generations of men have been living in a wild poetic dream. Its cry is, "We infidels know, the terrible secret is out. Matter is all, and all is matter. God has been blotted out. Man is an automaton. Soul is not. The dead cease to exist. "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Drink long draughts of the sweet wine of pleasure, to-morrow you are to die. Do not sorrow for anything. Be stoical enough to laugh at distress, poverty and ills; weep no more; to-morrow you die. This then is the gospel of despair. It is the blackness of darkness forever, wherein is horror more terriable than that which fell upon Abraham in that strange night of sacrifice. This is the way that unbelief and unbelievers help to make lighter the burden of existence.

The man of the world, the godless man, the unchristian man, the man who pulls down the scales on the animal side of life, whether in the church or out of it, like the unbeliever, and pretty much in the same way, is not a wing to help us fly above the burdens and miseries of life, but a dead weight to pull us down into their lowest depths. If the writer could get the consent of his mind to put the interpretation upon human life that these men do who browse and loaf around hotels, saloons, pooling rooms and gambling hells, pouring filth and nonsense out of their filthy mouths and brainless heads, swearing, drinking, gambling, abusing and prostituting the little power that God has given them, he would not hesitate to say that human nature was a tantalizing failure that called loudly for abatement and that this was the last generation of men that should be tolerated on the face of the planet. "If I were God," is the title of Mr. LeGallienne's last book. If it can be said without irreverence, and an unchristian degree of harshness, the writer would be half inclined to say, "If I were God" these sons of Belial should be brought to book, and the earth no longer encumbered by their disgusting presence and pestilential influence. They think wrong, talk wrong, feel wrong, live wrong, vote wrong—they even use the franchise, the blood-bought liberty of American citizens to fasten burdens upon communities and the nation under which they reel and stagger and can not endure much longer without going to pieces. This is taking up the "white man's burden" with a vengeance, is it not?

The true Christian man is the wing, he is the only one who can make our burdens less and lighter. Christianity comes with its faith as opposed to infidelity; its holiness as opposed to sin; its love and practical goodness as opposed to selfishness; its hope and joy as opposed to despair, and every man who receives it becomes a lightener of human burdens. The real Christian in every community is a wing and not a weight.

WHAT I THINK OF THE CONGRESS.

The editor asks what my impressions are of the congress which has just adjourned. I do not hesitate to say that, taken as a whole, the congress was superb. It far exceeded my most sanguine expectations. The number attending was large, but not too large. A mass meeting would have been a mistake. As it was the congress was wieldy.

Among the impressions received I note the following:

(1) The congress emphasized the growing intellectual development of the brotherhood. There can be no doubt about the advance in this direction. There was a fiber, and strength, and comprehensiveness in the papers, addresses and talks which clearly indicated a distinct growth among the Disciples from an intellectual point of view. I was personally surprised at this decided characteristic. I had not been at many of our representative gatherings for twenty years, but those I had attended were rather disappointing in the matter now under consideration. But the congress at St. Louis has dissipated all my fears with respect to intellectual growth.

(2) I was also much pleased with the spiritual trend. In everything that was said and done there was a manifest desire for a higher spiritual life. Occasionally there was an overflow of feeling in this respect which seemed to lead to abnormal conclusions. But this is just what might have reasonably been expected. When men are straining every nerve in order to obtain an end, they are not always careful about the means to that end. However, whatever was abnormal as regards this matter, there can be no doubt about the sincerity of the desire to attain a higher level in spiritual things.

(3) I was especially delighted with the free spirit which prevailed in the congress. There was no disposition to sound an alarm because some one sounded a somewhat different note from what we have been accustomed to hear. There was a feeling that we had met for conference, not for the regulation of each other's orthodoxy, and consequently every one was allowed to express himself in his own way to his heart's content. This was right. This is the only way that such a congress could be made to yield useful results. Nevertheless, this liberty was very seldom abused, and only once or twice was it used so as to even startle those who were present.

(4) It was evident that so far as this body represented the great brotherhood there can be no question about the fact that the Disciples are feeling their way to better things. They recognize that their past history has been a decided success in meeting the conditions of their past environment; but they now recognize that this environment has somewhat changed, and they are seeking to adjust themselves to the new situation; but they are aiming to do this without violently shocking either themselves or any one else.

(5) I was glad also to notice that while there was a strong feeling for a forward movement in all legitimate things, there was equally a strong feeling to hold on to the truth that has already been accepted. There is no danger whatever that our intellectual development will make us break with the main contentions of the past. We may change some of our methods, but the great principles for which the Disciples have always contended will remain intact.

(6) I was more than delighted to notice the spirit of the young men who attended the congress. They were evidently there to receive istruction and not to bring their individuality into prominence. They showed the most consummate tact, and those who took part in the deliberations did so with the finest good taste. I never was prouder of our young men than at this congress.

(7) The congress was in every respect a prophecy of better days. It showed that all classes of opinion may be brought together on a free platform and discussed without the slightest friction whatever. This I regard as one of the chief glories of our plea as a religious people. It has been fundamental from the beginning, and was never more distinctly put to a test than in the great congress which has just adjourned.

W. T. MOORE.

A LESSON FROM MEN OF THE WORLD.

We are justified from the language of the Savior in seeking to be benefited by some things which we see in the children of this world. They not infrequently manifest a zeal and a wisdom in the prosecution of their worldly objects which Christians might well emulate in the prosecution of their Christian work. Now and then, however, there is an example of magnanimity and of charity, shown by men of the world, which puts to shame the actions of many Christians. As an instance of this kind we clip the following from a correspondent of the Globe-Democrat of this city:

The first monument erected in the United States to the memory of Union and Confederate soldiers jointly will be formally dedicated on the 3rd of May. It is the work of the state of Kentucky, a magnificent shaft, towering above the forest on the battlefield of Chickamauga. The inscription is peculiarly fitting:

ERECTED BY THE STATE OF KENTUCKY IN HONOR OF HER SONS WHO FOUGHT AND FELL ON THIS FIELD.

As we are united in life, and they are united in death, let one monument perpetuate their deeds, and one people, forgetful of all asperities, forever hold in grateful remembrance all the glories of that terrible conflict which made all men free and retained every star on the nation's flag.

The time for the dedication of such a monument, at the close of a foreign war, which has wiped out all sectional lines, is most appropriate.

Kentucky had seventeen Union and nine Confederate organizations in the battle of Chickamauga. . . . . .

At the beginning of the ceremonies the band will play "My Old Kentucky Home," and at the conclusion "The Star-Spangled Banner."

We read the above with something of the same feeling of pleasurable emotion with which we read accounts of brotherly union meetings between long alienated divisions in the church. It seems to us there is the real spirit of Christianity in this proceeding. All honor to Kentucky for the erection of a monument which is to commemorate the courage and devotion of her soldier dead, regardless of whether they wore the blue or the gray. The inscription on the monument, as given above, contains a lesson for the divided Christians of our time which they ought to be willing to learn, and which, when learned, would be a long step in the direction of that unity for which so many Christian hearts are praying.

What was it that these soldiers possessed in common that entitles them to this monument to perpetuate their memory to coming generations? They loved their country and were willing to lay down their lives in defense of what they believed to be its true interests. Fair-minded people no longer doubt that the soldiers on the one side were as honest in their convictions of duty as were those on the other. As they were equally honest, so were they equally brave and equally willing to die rather than be false to what they believed to be duty. Mistaken notions may have been and doubtless were entertained by the men on both sides, but for this they were hardly responsible.

> "Their's not to reason why;
> Their's but to do and die."

The erection of such a monument for such a purpose is a triumph of fraternity and patriotism over the bitterness and misunderstanding of the past. Thank God, the North and South understand each other much better now than they did before the terrible ordeal of our Civil War. Our recent conflict with Spain has served to demonstrate the fact that the people of the South are no less loyal now to the old flag than are the people of the North. Side by side they fought and fell on the heights of San Juan and in the trenches at Santiago. Let Kentucky's towering monument at Chickamauga proclaim to all the world that these United States are united now, not in name alone, but in reality, "one and inseparable, now and forever."

What is the lesson which the Christian world may learn from this generous deed performed by one of our commonwealths? It is the lesson of larger charity for differences of opinion. It is a lesson of fraternity, in which the issues of the dead past are not brought forward into the living present as causes of division and strife. It is a lesson of moral discernment, which pierces through outward differences to the very core of things and finds that which is essential to noblest manhood. Are we prepared to accept the lesson? There are churches in this country divided over issues long since dead. Will they allow "the children of this world" to be, not only wiser in their day, but more magnanimous and forgiving than they? Let us hope that the time is near at hand when all North and South divisions in the churches of this country will be obliterated, and that these divided members of the household of faith may work together unitedly for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom.

Is it not true also that many of the other divisions in Christendom have been caused and are being perpetuated by differences of opinion which might well be overlooked? What is the essential thing in Christian character? Is it not faith in Jesus Christ and loyalty to Him, according to the best light we have? Perhaps all, certainly all Protestants, would agree to this principle, while in its application under existing conditions there would, of course, be differences of opinion. What evidence should we require of a genuine faith and a genuine loyalty to Jesus Christ? This is the question concerning which there would, no doubt, be honest differences, as it relates to the question of church membership. But if the principle be admitted and properly emphasized, it will bring about greater mutual respect, more brotherly love, more Christian recognition, and so hasten the time when there shall be "one flock and one Shepherd." When we have reached the point where we can recognize the Christian character of all who believe in Christ and obey Him to the best of their knowledge and ability, we are far on the road to the fulfillment of the prayer of our Lord for the unity of His disciples.

THE CONGRESS OF DISCIPES.

Probably the most unique thing about this assembly and its work is its name. The appearance and work of the assembly was very much like a lectureship, but upon a broader basis. Themes vital to our religious life were discoursed upon by thougtful men and women from various states and discussed by thoughtful hearers. The attendance of preachers was large and also of people from the city. Having a different chairman for each session seemed to intensify the anticipation of the audience from session to session. The addresses were thoughtfully prepared and well received. Not that all persons believed all things said by all the speakers, or even by any one of them, but it will be safe to say that no one went without appreciation for some merit. Some of the addresses were masterly in their treatment of great themes and some were not only masterly but elegant in their spirit and literary finish. These remarks apply to the reviewers as well as to the chief speakers of the Congress.

The floor speeches under the head of discussions at each session were brilliant penetrating, sharp, pleasant and helpful. There was not even the appearance of bad feeling in anything that was said by any speaker. There were many pleasantries passed at each session which kept back any appearance of the pessimistic spirit and added greatly to the enjoyment and enthusiasm of the occasion.

One of the impressions received from the personnel of the Congress and especially from the personnel of those participating in its discussions is that we not only have a highly intellectual, consecrated body of men in our ministry, but that we are producing a class of scholarly men to become leaders of thought in the future of the church, that will not only be an honor to "the fathers," but men among the thoughtful men of the religious world of whom the church will be proud. And in this remark we believe that none will more heartily concur than the more elderly men of our ministry present at the Congress. And for these elders in Israel let it be said that only God can know how helpful their sweetness and cheerfulness of spirit to the younger men of our ministry. Behold how good and how pleasant it is to see love and sweet fellowship between the elder and the younger men of our ministry.

Another value of the Congress was its incidental test of the unity of our people upon fundamental themes and their loyalty to the Bible, the fathers and more especially to the Christ. There were different views expressed about different things as a matter of course, but no signs of degeneration, division or destruction. All signs were indicative of growth, of a larger conception of our work, of a keener sense of our responsibilities. The radical and the conservative elements which are supposed to characterize every religious as well as every political body were not sufficiently in evidence for even a sensational heading for a sensational article in any of our city dailies. It was there in a measure, of course, but not manifast to the casual observer. Love, unity and sweet fellowship one with another were the dominent characteristics outside of the intellectual feast.

Of course, there will be another Congress. The enjoyment and benefits of the present one could not but beget another. We canot now speak more in detail of the present one as we shall do in another place, but we feel that this method of teaching cannot result otherwise than in great good to the church, to its ministry and to the cause of a purer Christianity.

Hour of Prayer.

JESUS IN THE HOME.

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, May 10, 1899.)

(Luke 10:38-42; Eph. 6:1-8.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: Jesus came into the world as the Savior of the home as well as of the individual and of the world Blessed is the home in which He is permitted to occupy this seat of honor.

There is, perhaps, no more beautiful picture in all the Bible than that which is given us in the passage from Luke, cited above. On the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives nestles the little village of Bethany. In it there lived a family consisting of a brother and two sisters—Lazarus and Martha and Mary. The indications are that they were in good circumstances for that age and country. Jesus found in them congenial friends. He was a welcome visitor in their home. He was accustomed to retire there, after the toilsome duties of the day at Jerusalem for that sympathy and rest which He could not find in the great city. The picture presents Him as seated in this home talking as He only could talk, of the great things of the kingdom, while Mary sat at His feet, an entranced listener, and Martha the elder sister, was busily engaged in the household duties. So intimate was the relation between the great Teacher and this family that Martha felt at liberty to ask His opinion concerning Mary's course in leaving her to attend to the household service while she was sitting at His feet.

The answer of Jesus, while full of considerate kindness for Martha, deprecated her undue absorption in outward serving and gave His approval of Mary's course in choosing the good part which should not be taken away from her. There is many a home in which this admonition of the Master is needed. There is great concern in reference to the furnishing of the house and in providing bountifully for the material wants ofthe family and of visitors, while there is great lack of attention to that which really makes a home—the spirit of reverence to God, of interest in the things pertaining to His kingdom, and of love for the Master and for each other. Better a humble home, plainly furnished, with Jesus enthroned in the hearts of the members and consulted on all questions of life and duty, than the most magnificent palace in which He is a stranger.

The second citation emphasizes a duty much neglected, we fear, in modern times, namely, the religious training of the children. The passage teaches the duty of obedience on the part of the children, and something more than mere compliance with the parental requirements. They are taught to "honor thy father and mother." This is an essential condition of an orderly home. The admonition to parents is one equally pertinent: "Parents, provoke not your children to wrath; but nurture them in the chastening and admonition of the Lord." We are in danger of neglecting this parental duty in the hurry and bustle of this busy age. This duty, however, cannot be neglected without the most serious consequences to family life. Let this admonition of the apostle remind us of this neglected duty and stir us up to a more faithful performance of our parental obligations.

There is a word in this lesson, too, for the servants, who are exhorted to "be obedient unto them that according to the flesh are your masters, with fear and trembling, in singleness of your heart, as unto Christ." And then the masters are taught to "do the same thing unto them and forbear threatening, knowing that both their Master and yours is in heaven, and there is no respect of persons with Him."

What an ideal home Jesus would make if He should be allowed a central place in it! Children obeying and honoring their parents, parents instructing and training their children, servants serving with singleness of heart as unto God, and masters and mistresses treating them with that kindness and justice due them as children of the common Father. Let us seek to Christianize our homes.

PRAYER.

O Thou gracious Lord and Master, who while here in the flesh did sanctify the home with Thy presence, wilt Thou be pleased to come into our homes that they may be filled with Thy Spirit and that we may discharge those mutual obligations which we owe to each other as parents and children, as masters and servants. May the spirit of unselfishness prevail in our homes,driving out all strife and animosities and making a type of that heavenly home for which we hope. For Thy name's sake. Amen!

If any sincere Christian cast himself with his own will upon the Divine Presence which dwells within him, he shall be kept safe unto the end. What is it that makes us unable to persevere? Is it want of strength? By no means. We have with us the strength of the Holy Spirit. When did we ever set ourselves sincerely to any work according to the will of God, and fail for want of strength? It was not that strength failed the will, but that the will failed first.—H. E. Manning.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

SECOND DECADE.

OUR FIRST MISSIONARY AND HIS WORK.

B. B. TYLER.

A man of distinction, a native of Poland, and his son, sojourning in Jerusalem, heard Dr. Barclay on the "Way of Redemption in Christ," were persuaded to accept Jesus of Nazareth as a personal Savior, and were baptized. They repeated the story to a fellow countryman who also put on the Christ in baptism. About this time a report was current that the Roman Catholics in Bethlehem were about to become Protestants en masse. Dr. Barclay said, Jan. 30, 1852: "The Jews are now more accessible than they have heretofore been."

The work was commenced in Jerusalem February 8, 1851. The first annual report is dated February 9, 1852. A church had been organized and seventeen names were on the church register. This report shows that with the eagerness for numbers sometimes characteristic of our evangelistic efforts a large church, in numbers, would have been in that brief time established in the city of Jerusalem. More persons who applied for baptism were rejected than were admitted to the ordinance.

The first annual report shows the results gained by the agent of the American Christian Missionary Society in comparison with the success of others engaged in the same kind of work in this field. The following statements are interesting in this connection:

"The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions sent two missionaries here as long ago as 1821; and their mission was well sustained by a strong band of excellent, devoted and talented men, till about four or five years ago, during all which time three converts were all the fruits of this great outlay. The persevering efforts of the Lutherans have been still more barren of good results. The London Jew's Society have had missionaries here more or less constantly for more than a quarter of a century; and in 1834 they established a regular mission on a very extensive scale, which has been lavishly supplied with chaplains, missionaries, colporteurs, helps, governments, etc., under its learned 'Lord Bishops.' A splendid church edifice has been erected at a total cost, as I am informed, of £70,000; an extensive and well-conducted hospital established; well-endowed literary and manual labor institutions founded, and money funded for the purpose of 'aiding inquiring Jews,' 'assisting to establish converts in business,' etc. Besides the money already so extensively invested in real estate by the Society, thirty or forty thousand dollars are annually expended in support of the missions, which are not only under the auspices of that powerful and wealthy Society (one of whose patrons alone has recently given it $300,000), but are under the special care and patronage of two of the most enlightened and potent monarchs in Europe (Victoria and Frederick William), both of whom maintain able consuls in the city for the special protection of its members. And yet, during the thirty years' labors of the various well-sustained and energetic agents, the number of converts made in this city, even with all the worldly inducements set before them, amounts to only a score or or two, more than three-fourths of whom are retained in the service of the Society at salaries far more than adequate to their support.

"Not a single convert from Mohammedanism has been made by either of these denominations, nor by the combined efforts of the dozen different Christian sects of Jerusalem; but on the contrary, several Christians have actually gone over to the Moslems and Jews!"

It was the custom of the missionary societies at work in Palestine to care for, in a material way, the few converts that were gained. Inquirers were treated in a manner that almost amounted to bribery. What degree of protection to afford, and in what manner to extend it, were questions about which Dr. Barclay thought much. He suggested to the board something in the nature of an "Industrial Retreat." The idea was that a piece of land should be purchased at some distance from Jerusalem to which converts could be sent until such time as they could be settled in some vocation or business in which they could live the Christian life free from persecution. They would earn their bread at the "Industrial Retreat" by tilling the soil. This suggestion met with the approval of the board, and land was purchased. The property which was bought was the "Wady Farar," or "Valley of Delight;" the ancient Enon where John baptized. The money was paid to a man who was believed to possess authority and who was thought to be reliable. It was a case of misplaced confidence. The owners of the property did not receive the money, the transfer was not made, the "Industrial Retreat" existed only in the mind of the self-sacrificing missionary and on paper. The money was later returned, so that neither Dr. Barclay nor the board suffered financial loss.

The board in a meeting held the fifteenth day of May, 1854, requested the corresponding secretary "to inform Bro. Barclay, in view of the unsettled condition of that country, that the board advise his return to this country as soon as he can arrange the affairs of the mission."

At the suggestion of Drs. Robinson, Hacket, Bimoblodski, etc., Dr. Barclay gave attention to archæological investigations with such diligence that after his return to the United States in 1854 he published a book of more than six hundred octavo pages entitled "The City of the Great King; or, Jerusalem as it was, as it is and as it is to be." This book was an honor to the Disciples of Christ. It did more to gain the favorable attention of learned men than any book which, up to that time, had been written by one of our men. It is a monument of painstaking industry and ripe scholarship. Isaac Errett said of "The City of the Great King," by Dr. Barclay, and "Hadji in Syria," by Sarah Barclay, that "these are some of the first fruits of the Jerusalem mission, which have given it character before the country, and are indirectly aiding to give us character as a people." The North American Review, the Christian Examiner (at the time the leading religious critical review of New England), the Presbyterian Quarterly, with more than one hundred of the best literary and theological authorities in this country and in Europe ably reviewed "The City of the Great King." Some of the reviewers declared that the book had "no rival on the subject in the English language." "Hadji in Syria" was sold in Europe as well as in America. The Presbyterian Board of Publication, in Philadelphia, ordered 500 copies for their Sunday-schools. The North British Review noticed Dr. Barclay's book in a highly appreciative tone, at the same time making grateful mention of the Christian zeal and intelligent devotion in the support of the Jerusalem mission. Seven thousand copies of the work were sold in a short time. "The amount of new detail with regard to Jerusalem and its vicinity is greater than that of any volume that has ever been published on the topography of that city," is a single sentence taken from the North British Review. The brethren did not waste the Lord's money—not one dollar of it—in sustaining the Jerusalem mission.

The work in Jerusalem upon the return of Dr. Barclay and his family to the United States was left in the hands of M. J. Dennis, a gentleman whom he had taught the way of the Lord more perfectly.

For a time the American Christian Missionary Society had no work in a foreign land. Alexander Cross, a negro slave in Kentucky, had been purchased by Christian men, given freedom, educated and sent to Africa as a missionary. Before he did any work he fell a victim to a fever. Thus ended the first effort to evangelize Africa—the first effort made by the Disciples of Christ.

This is a good place in which to give some account of certain educational and literary enterprises inaugurated and carried forward by those whose great aim is to call the church and the world back to a belief in and to the practice of simple New Testament Christianity.

MEMBERSHIP OF CHRISTIANS IN SECRET SOCIETIES.*

I believe the time has come for a thorough and dispassionate investigation of this question. The principle that a Christian has a right to do that which any other man has a right to do, must be limited to the condition that no man has a right to do wrong. Right and wrong are but names readily transferable to this or that: the only right is that which contributes to the good of all men. The attitude of the masses is so much in favor of existing institutions, that whoever opposes must carry himself in the presence of all opposition as if everything were ephemeral but himself.

Christians show their love for God by not making concessions to men for the sake of peace, but by being loyal to the truth. The attitude of the Christian in all organic bodies of men based on a human proposition for financial, moral and religious benefit is the great question. What his revelation is, and what it ought to be, is the vital question in this discussion.

Hence I ask, What inducements have the secret societies to offer as a financial investment? Do they insure the principal and interest on your investment? The so-called benevolence of the lodges is simply to meet obligations that have been paid for, and generally the recipient of the help gets back very little of the amount he has paid into the lodge through a long series of years. Your benefits for which you have paid so often are even made to depend upon your ability to keep your dues paid. The moment you fail to pay your dues, all is lost. I suggest that an investment in first mortgages on Illinois mud is better than the lodge.

I am told that some of the lodges are good insurance societies. I trust there is no one who can defend the old line insurance companies who have robbed thousands of innocent men of millions of dollars by forfeited policy. The 20 year endowment company never intended to pay you more than you gave it.

The mutual insurance companies are a cheaper form of insurance, but they, like all others make your benefits depend upon an early death; and that chance ceases when you once fail to pay your assessments.

The eminent actuary L. S. Fouse, states that the insurance companies receive a per cent. on $14,000,000,000. This is $3,000,000,000 more money than the total gold and silver product of the world from 1792 to 1892, 100 years. It is estimated that the wheat crop of Illinois, at 50 cents per bushel, in no year will pay the people's life insurance.

I don't know how long we will continue in this business. I suppose until insurance companies get all the money and we all the experience. I, in public, declare my inability to do my own business when I insure and appoint some Shylock to take care of me and my interests. May the good Lord help the Christian in the language of the apostle to "do nothing in vainglory, but in lowliness of mind let each account others above himself. Seek not your private ends alone, but let every man seek his neighbor's good" (Phil. 2:3,4).

As Christians, can we not learn to "bear one another's burdens and so fulfill the law of Christ?" (Gal. 6:2.) Can we not divide our fortunes to restore all losses that are not caused by neglect; to increase our joy? Can we not divide our sorrows and lighten our burdens? To do this would glorify God, honor the church and save millions for the cause of Christ.

The church is the only divinely authorized institution to do good. The societies are for mutual aid in a financial way. The church has learned from the Bible that it is more blessed to give than to receive. The lodge has learned from the god of this world that it is more blessed to receive than to give. The church is to do good unto all men (Gal. 6:10). The societies pay what they owe to some men.

MORAL SUFFICIENCY IN SECRET SOCIETIES.

We now consider the moral advantages of secret societies. This relates to duties or obligations pertaining to actions of which right and wrong, virtue and vice are predicated. The sufficiency of morality in secret societies is one of Satan's most effective arguments (lies). In the promulgation of this falsehood the church has suffered much. These organizations of which we can say nothing better than that they are the devil's counterfeit for the church of Christ, have this as their chief corner stone and upon it have reared their temples to the usurper. I believe that thousands of innocent self-deceived men and women are resting their souls upon it and trusting to it for salvation. Well has Satan employed this agency to win the world from Christ, so he comes to us in these latter days as a Savior without a cross or a sacrifice.

All who are acquainted with the present condition of the heathen world know that the state of morals is no better than it was among the ancients. Indeed it has been proven by the testimony of all history, that Paul's description of the moral state of the Gentile world, given in 1st Romans is still a true and faithful picture of the moral condition of all nations that are without the light and influence of a revelation from God.

There is no good done in human societies which cannot be done far better by the church. Let the Christian bring all his tithes into the house of God and there will be no room for complaint. But when they join other organizations for bettering life, that is taking a step backward, and when they give to them what the church needs, that is robbing God. There is no other institution capable of saving man, no matter what the evil may be. But the Devil has not gone out of the angel of light business, yet; and he knows how to put in the institutions and hindrances under the guise of morality and good works.

Treat him as he deserves, and give the church a chance, then none of these handmaids of morality and so-called good works will be needed.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

THE EVOLUTION OF A DISCIPLE—IV;

Or, My Conversion to and from Methodism.

T. R. HODKINSON.

BAPTIZED.

That day was a high day. I preached for the Wesleyans in the morning, led the Y. M. C. A. Bible class in the afternoon and preached for the Primitives in the evening. (The English attend church at 6:30 P. M., which allows time for a walk afterward, or for a later mission service.) After my evening sermon I left the closing exercises in other hands, and hastened to the "Church of Christ," where I confessed the good confession before many witnesses (about eight hundred), and was identified with Christ in the figure of his death, burial and resurrection. Across the street my wife was leading the Y. M. C. A. "boys" in the opening of their mission service, for—with unwonted secrecy—I had planned a surprise for her. As I prepared to join them, her soprano penetrated to the dressing room, and my heart beat in time. But it was with shamefaced gladness I acknowledged that all these years I had been in error. She did not close my mouth with a triumphant "I knew I was right," but in a more literal and excellent way.

Of course there was a little buzzing in the Methodist hive, but as I was now only a "local," and it was not yet laid upon my conscience to preach baptism, things went on for some months as before.

THE "CHURCH OF CHRIST."

I was constantly meeting one or other of the ministers, and amongst them Bro. Gliddon. One day, in talking with him, I took exception to the name on their bulletin board, "Church of Christ." It appeared to me audacious for "a branch of the Baptists," as I deemed them, to appropriate as their own a title which was the common property of all the Lord's people, and I rather bluntly said so. With his pleasant laugh he replied, "We are Christians only, but not the only Christians;" and showed how all denominational names, whether of church governments, as Episcopal, Presbyterian, Congregational—ordinances, as Baptists, or leaders, as Wesleyan, Lutheran—were so many fences erected to divide God's people. He proved—by Scripture as ever—that such names were also dishonoring to Christ, the only head of the church; and closed by assuring me that their congregation was not "a branch of the Baptists." Once more he had made me feel as if the foundations might give way at any moment.

A GREAT LIGHT.

I quickly came to the conclusion that if these "Christians" could teach me anything further it would be bigoted folly on my part to refuse to learn. So I very respectfully asked for more light, and was dazzled and bewildered by the response. It came in the form of two pamphlets (blessed be tracts!); the first by Bro. Gliddon, explaining briefly their position; and later, one entitled "Our Movement," by a certain J. H. Garrison. He outlined the history of a marvelous religious association, having for its aim the reunion of all true Christians on the basis of a restored apostolic Christianity. It came upon me like a new revelation (as the first sight of the New World to Columbus, or the discovery of the Old Bible to Luther); so simple, yet so sufficient; the evils of a divided Christendom caused by departures from the primitive gospel; the only remedy a return—I fairly gasped! From the general he came to detail, and every fresh item evoked my admiration, though it also trampled on my cherished teraphim. He showed the deplorable mischiefs that had been wrought by taking as guides the mutually destructive man-made creeds, instead of the inspired Word of God. He pointed out how the Bible, as the standard of appeal, gives its verdict against infant baptism. I had previously (as you have seen) through much tribulation entered into that knowledge, and the remembrance of my former ignorance was still a half-healed sore. It mollified my wounded self-respect, therefore, to find that the great leader of this restoration movement, Alexander Campbell, was originally in that matter as obtuse as myself. Will pedigree Disciples who have never unlearned anything, please paste this inside their hats?

After next dealing with immersion, the essayist came to the confession of faith. "Since believers are entitled to baptism, what must they believe?" Answer: "The faiththat saves is personal, not doctrinal. It has Christ for its object" (Matt. 16:16); and then followed a brief, but lucid presentation of the Christ as the center of Christianity, and a declaration of faith in him as the only bond of fellowship for all of his disciples. It captivated me. Why had I not seen this sooner? I had made this very confession at my immersion (as a requirement of Bro. Gliddon's denomination, I supposed), without realizing its comprehensiveness; but now — placed in its proper setting—it burst upon me in its simple grandeur; belief in Him, trust in Him, love for Him, and the desire to live for Him. Yes! it was grand.

The latter part of the booklet dealt with the terms of salvation as set forth in the New Testament. "Faith," he wrote, "is the product of divine testimony honestly examined." I had always been taught that it is a direct impartation of the Holy Spirit. Baptism, I read, "follows after faith and a renewed heart—immediately after—and is a pledge of the divine forgiveness." This was a staggerer; it was as far from my views as the east is from the west. But when, a few lines lower, came the words, "the overt act of a penitential faith," I began to "see men as trees, walking." Furthermore, my experience of these wonderful "Christians" had been so disastrous to my pride that I discreetly resolved to investigate very thoroughly before disbelieving anything they might henceforth be pleased to say.

The essay closed with a passing reference to their form of church government, and a short explanation of their views on the Lord's Supper. It was claimed that this ordinance formed the central part of the worship on each Lord's day, in apostolic times, and that it was simply a tender, commemorative feast.

JOINING THE "DISCIPLES."

I laid down the little book with a "What next?" Very soon my wife and I decided that these people should be our people. It tore me up by the roots, but after twelve years I have no regrets.

I was now eager to propogate these divine principles. From October, 1887, to January, 1888, I "held the fort" at Southport until their pastor-elect could come. W. T. Moore was the first pastor, and J. H. Garrison led them for one year. This was the home of Timothy Coop, of blessed memory. It was not my good fortune to have known him personally, but I was happy in the friendship of his two sons, both of whom are pillars of the cause in England. Here I found the remnants of an old library, and made the acquaintance of the Christian Baptist—Alexander Campbell's periodical—from 1823-9, Dungan's "On the Rock" and a number of other books which proved of great service.

LONDON AND SOUTHPORT.

At the close of this engagement I became assistant (or according to the Report of the Foreign Missionary Society, "native helper") to W. T. Moore at the West London Tabernacle. When Bro. Moore, soon after my arrival, was called to pass through much sorrow by the loss of wife and daughter, I had charge of the Tabernacle during the four months of his enforced absence. This was heavy on a new Disciple, and it is highly probable that I gave my large audience a choice blend of Metho-Disciple doctrine; but they were an excellent people and treated me well.

After two years in London we spent two and a half years in the Southport pastorate. In addition to the brethren already named, I was privileged to become familiar, during the time, with W. Durban, your London correspondent; J. M. Van Horn, of Warren, O.; H. S. Earle, of Irvington, Ind.; A. Martin, general evangelist; F. W. Troy, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; J. J. Haley, your associate editor, and others of the "missionaries."

Being determined to "read, mark, learn and inwardly digest" our principles, I asked questions, plodded through books, perused the Christian Commonwealth (Bro. Moore's paper), the Christian Standard and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, etc., and the more I knew of the "Current Reformation" the more I thanked God that I had any part or lot in it.

UNITED STATES.

In October, 1892, I came to this great country to see this great restoration movement "at home." My first two sermons were donated to our colored brethren in Cincinnati. Their leading man publicly assured me that I "mighty tickle um, an' preach 'most as good as a colored man."

During the subsequent six years I have preached or lectured, held meetings or church institutes in New York, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas, Colorado, Missouri, Kentucky and Ontario, and am thankful for information and experience which could not have been gained in any other land. My heart is gladdened by the growing friendship between the two nations I love.

AMERICAN "DISCIPLES."

Just before leaving the old country I amused J. J. Haley by my inquisitiveness regarding the characteristics of the American Disciples. We had been talking about the English O. B.'s ("Old Brethren"), and regretting that their close communion anti-organ conservatism prevented united action with the churches established by the Foreign Board. In answer to my queries Bro. H. laughingly told me I would find in America "all kinds, amongst so many." Of course!

I have met a large number of noble souls, prompt to recognize any good in any denomination; and I have run across a few veritable Ishmaelites. A hard-working, self-sacrificing evangelist told me that nothing so delighted him as to "skin the sectarians and hang their hides on the fence;" because, forsooth, they had the misfortune to wear theological fetters. With a great sacrifice obtained I my freedom, but some who boast of being free-born Disciples, are indeed slaves to a sectarian spirit.

I have met many deeply spiritual men and women, who endure "as seeing Him who is invisible;" and I know of others whom I could not adequately characterize without seeming discourtesy, who scornfully reject "whatever cannot be put into language"—wordolators.

Taken as a whole, the Disciples are a mighty brotherhood, with a phenomenal record, with such vast possibilities ahead as should keep them humbly trustful. "Who is sufficient for these things?" "Our sufficiency is of God."

For myself, I am debtor both to the Disciples and the Methodists, who gave me light and heat respectively; and I live for the sole purpose of hastening the day when not only they, but all of Christ's followers shall be one, "that the world may believe."

PRIVATE USE OF PUBLIC RIGHTS.

I. C. THINGS.

More and more are people coming to understand the difference between what belongs to a community as such and the individual members thereof. Street railways, gas plants, waterworks, telephone lines in a city and other things derive their value entirely from the comunity. Take away a city's population and their stocks and franchises would not be worth the paper upon which they are written. Every person in a city contributes to the value of its public rights and are entitled to their profits. For men to get control of public rights and use them for their personal wealth is unjust, and yet thousands of men to-day are becoming rich from these sources. They are enriching themselves off the labor and rights of others. True, a city by its legal representatives or agents, and its own choice, may lease or sell one or more of these public rights to a man or a company of men for a time, but for such transactions it should have value received; it should enjoy at least a portion of the proceeds or emoluments. But here is where the people are most frequently and shamefully deprived of their rights. Through the dishonesty of its agents men manage to get hold of these rights for little or no consideration and apply the proceeds to their personal account. The money derived from these sources instead of being applied to the necessary expenses of the city, as they should, are diverted into personal purses and the citizens are left to bear the burden of the expense of the city's government. They are robbed of their rights and then taxed to make up the loss, to supply their own needs.

Not only are public rights thus perverted and their profits personally possessed, but these things are made use of for political purposes. It too frequently happens that an important city franchise may be had through an officer, or candidate who can only be used by corrupt, grasping men. And so eager are some men at times for new franchises, or the renewal or extension of old ones, that in order to secure them they will have their own men put in office in order to secure the same and then divide the spoils with these perjured officials. In other words, money that rightfully belonged to the city is given by the aid of perjured officials to persons who have connived to plunder the city. It is high time, therefore, that the public was aroused to this great source of corruption in city life.

Public rights are just as well defined as private rights and should be held just as sacred. It is unfair to the laboring man to give the benefits of these valuable rights to the rich for their further enrichment without value received. The rights of the community or a city ought to be worth the expenses of the government of that community or city. At least they ought to be made to relieve the community of taxes as far as possible for the maintainance of communal or municipal life. It is useless to talk about equal rights, prosperity, opportunities for labor, etc., until this great evil is corrected and what rightfully belongs to the community is restored to it fully and forever.

What is true of a city is also true of the state and of the nation. But, as in the case of cities, the nation has been robbed or defrauded out of possessions which it should never have surrendered. This has occurred in immense land grants to corporations, in its rich mineral districts, in its facilities for transportation and in telegraph lines. It is by the private use of these things that so many have become multi-millionaires. They have simply gathered money that should have gone into the public treasury for the use of the government. These special privileges put men at an unequal advantage. A government that claims to be by and for the people has no right to thus favor a few to the disadvantage and at the expense of the public.

At this point the justness of the position of single-taxers becomes apparent. The government ought to have retained direct control of all its territory, including rivers, mines, railways and telegraph lines. Its right to do so rests, not alone on moral philosophy, but upon the fact that it is now actually doing so in part. It still owns the rivers, reservations, and controls the postal system. Had the government retained full control of all these things it would have been able at all times to furnish land, labor, and a good living to all its worthy subjects. It would not be the debtor that it now is to bondholders nor the tool of trusts, corporations and monopolies that it has been. The course pursued has almost made it a government for the rich and the strong instead of a government for the common people.

But these things are being studied as never before, and cannot continue as they have in the past. The people are coming to see that their public rights are as essential to their prosperity as their individual rights and will not suffer them to be usurped by the rich and the strong. If all men are born equal and have their inalienable rights they are also born parts of a social organism which likewise has its inalienable rights, and which justice will not permit any individual or corporation to appropriate to its private use. What the world now needs is more enlightenment upon the distinction between public and private rights and a keener appreciation of the former. We need also a stronger public conscience to guard our public rights from the ravages of devouring men.

Thou art to know that thy soul is the center, habitation and kingdom of God. That, therefore, to the end the sovereign King may rest on that throne of thy soul, thou oughtest to take pains to keep it clean, quiet and peaceable—clean from guilt and defects; quiet from fears, and peaceable in temptations and tribulations. Thou oughtest always, then, to keep thine heart in peace, that thou mayest keep pure that temple of God; and with a right and pure intention thou art to work, pray, obey and suffer (without being in the least moved), whatever it pleases the Lord to send unto thee.

"NOW CONCERNING THE COLLECTION." (1 Cor. 16:1.)

BENJ. L. SMITH.

Paul writes with kindling faith of the triumphant resurrection, closing with the victorious outburst, "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ," and then without pause or apology the apostle goes on, "Now concerning the collection." There is no hesitation, no timidity. Paul moves from the very gate of heaven to this practical necessity.

"Money answereth all things," was never truer than to-day, never so many things money could buy, never such power and facilities; money could never reach so far nor go so swiftly nor cheaply as now.

There never was a nation intrusted with so much wealth as is the United States to-day, and our wealth increases at the rate of two million dollars every day. It may be a blessing or a curse, so plainly teaches the Word of God. Rightly used, such great accumulations of wealth as we have in this land means much for the salvation of souls.

We must believe that Paul's inspiration was right. The Holy Spirit led him to lay this great duty upon the waiting church at the moment when their hearts were most drawn heavenward. Since Paul gave the collection such prominence, we should readily estimate the importance of our annual collection for Home Missions.

1. THE COLLECTION IS THE ONLY PRACTICAL THING WE CAN DO FOR THE SALVATION OF OUR GREAT HOME LAND. It is the only tangible evidence of our interest in home missionary work; it is the practical outcome of all our words and prayers and good wishes for the advancement of His kingdom in America. All the rest is preparation. The collection is the actual fruit of our missionary education.

2. THE COLLECTION IS NECESSARILY THE LIMIT OF OUR WORK IN THE GENERAL HOME FIELD. In this land our missionaries go as far as our contributions send them. Not a missionary preaches in the great West or the South beyond the reach of the offering we make to send them. The Board of Missions has no means except that intrusted to them by the churches in the offering. The board sends out just as many missionaries as the brotherhood will permit, and the measure of that permission is the offering.

3. WE SHOULD PARTICIPATE IN THIS OFFERING BECAUSE IT DEMONSTRATES OUR PARTNERSHIP WITH THE SACRIFICING HOME MISSIONARY. The board sends out the missionary with only a small promise behind him. It is only a small pittance the mission board is able to give; our frontier missionaries go sometimes into counties as large as Rhode Island without a church building, without a church organization, with only a few scattered members of the church, he goes with his wife and children on the pitiful appropriation of fifty or one hundred dollars for the whole year. He has this promise and nothing more. Praying and trusting he makes his way, he collects the people, holds half a dozen protracted meetings, organizes one or two churches, builds as many meeting houses and comes up to the end of the year with sheaves and rejoicing. The church gives largely but it is not money, she gives the life-blood and the nerve of her home missionary heroes and their not less heroic wives who coin their love for Christ and his church into personal sacrifice for the preaching of the Word.

We can have fellowship with these only in the great Jubilee offering.

4. THIS JUBILEE OFFERING SHOULD BE AN EXPRESSION OF OUR GRATITUDE TO GOD FOR OUR MISSION WORK. The American Christian Missionary Society celebrates its Jubilee this year, it has been the leader in all our work, the mother of every missionary board among us. Its missionaries have organized over twenty-two hundred churches and baptized over eighty-nine thousand converts, yet all this in the face of practical neglect of the great work of Home Missions.

Concerning the collection, let every church have a part in this great Jubilee offering, let every member of the body of Christ make a thankoffering to the Head of the church for his manifest blessings upon our missionary work.

The Religious World.

The Literary Digest says that Canon McColl is quoted in the Living Church (Protestant Episcopal, Chicago) as wishing that somebody would give him a definition of Protestantism. He said:

> In common parlance, a Protestant means anybody who is not a Roman Catholic, and Protestantism is thus a sort of dragnet that "gathers fish of every kind," from the believer in the Trinity and Incarnation to the Mormon and the agnostic, and even the avowed atheist. What, then, is "the Protestant faith" of which we hear so much? It is a contradiction in terms. The note of faith is, "I believe." The note of Protestantism is, "I do not believe." It is a negative term, and therefore to call the Church of England "Protestant" is much the same thing as to define a human being as "not a quadruped." My loyalty to the Church of England is too genuine to let me accept for her specific connotation an abjective which surrenders the whole field of controversy to the Church of Rome. There is, of course, a sense in which every church is Protestant, for every church protests against some errors. But institutions which have life, and an institution in particular which claims to be divinely founded, must be defined by their positive qualities, not by their accidental negations; by the truths which they profess, not by the errors which they deny. And therefore the Church of England puts the creed of Christendom into the mouths of all her members, and enjoins them to believe in "One Holy, Catholic and Apostolic Church.

Much interest is being developed in the American Sunday-school Union as the occasion of its 75th anniversary approaches. Meetings will be held in the Academy of Music, Philadelphia, on May 24th and 25th, at which addresses will be made by eminent speakers. The work of the Society for 75 years in part is as follows: 100,928 Sunday-schools organized, containing 578,680 teachers and 4,070,348 scholars; 224,844 cases of aid to schools, having 13,333,968 members. Nearly four schools a day organized for every day of the last 75 years. Value of publications distributed by sales and gifts, over $9,000,000. After all this work that has been accomplished by the Union and the great work which the denominations are doing, there are no less than 11,000,000 youths in the United States, between the ages of five and eighteen, who are not in any Sunday-school. Realizing the great need, as the Union does, it is desired that this 75th anniversary shall be the occasion of arousing fresh interest in the great work of the Society for the neglected children of the land. They especially request that the 28th of May be observed in all the churches and Sunday-schools as American Sunday-school Union Day. Persons wishing to make inquiries concerning this anniversary may address J. M. Andrews, secretary of the committee, 1122 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Our Budget.

—Now for the May offering.

—Let preparation pan out in performance.

—It is the "doing of it," as Paul would say, that attests the thoroughness of the preparation.

—No church can afford to drop out of the procession this Jubilee Year.

—That congress was a splendid success. Everybody was glad that he was there and was sorry for the man that didn't get there.

—There were two surprises in the congress: one was that the progressives were so conservative, and the other was that the conservatives were so progressive. In other words, the difference between the two classes of thinkers was not half so great as had been supposed by many of those on either side; hence the congress was a great unifier.

—The ladies of the First Church did themselves proud in serving meals for the hungry congressmen, and Bro. Fannon, pastor of the First Church, made an ideal host.

—The ladies of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church utilized one of the evening meals for some toasts relating to the different phases of benevolent work. Mrs. Garrison acted as toast mistress and some telling speeches were made by B. B. Tyler, W. F. Richardson, W. J. Lhamon, W. B. Craig, Carey E. Morgan and others.

—W. W. Hopkins, of this office, is enjoying a needed and well-earned vacation at his suburban home, near Kirkwood.

—Dr. W. T. Moore, of Columbia, Mo., remained over in the city after congress, preaching for the Central in the morning and for the First Church at night.

—The congress appointed an executive committee of five, to arrange program for next congress. Following is the committe: J. H. Garrison, A. B. Philputt, E. V. Zollars, J. B. Briney and H. L. Willett.

—There were about two hundred delegates from abroad who attended the Congress. These with a large local attendance, gave us full houses at each sessions of the convention.

—The offerings for Foreign Missions during April, 1899, amounted to $17,066.89, a gain of $3,886.44 over April, 1898.

—Our venerable artist brother, M. C. Tiers, No. 913 Forest Ave., New York, having disposed of the copy of the painting of Alexander Campbell, made from the picture published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, to the great satisfaction of the purchaser, has made another one which he is ready to dispose of at the same nominal price of $5.00. It is a labor of love of our brother, who joins with his artist work the "telling the gospel story in public whenever and wherever opportunity offers without material compensation." Any one desiring this picture may addresss him as above.

—The church has been appealed to from all that is high and noble for a large offering next Sunday for Home Missions. All know of the day, the demands of the hour, the importance of the work, and the responsibilities under which God has placed us, and there should be such an outpouring of gold and silver and checks and notes that our leaders should have to cry enough. Such an incident happened in connection with the effort to erect a tabernacle in the wilderess many centuries ago, and there is both the opportunity and the worthy occasion for it so happening again. Why not? We are a great people, we have great wealth, and this is a great year in our missionary history.

—Home Missions is a great question. It involves, not only the Christianizing of our own people in America, but also those who come to our shores from other lands. All races are here, and herefin large numbers, here to stay and to grow, and the continuity of blood-bought institutions demands that these people from foreign lands be brought under the influence of the gospel. Home Missions is one of the means for accomplishing this work, and should be given the power to cope with the problem as the emergencies of the case demand. Let Home Missions have a large place in your heart and purse until the work be done.

—The Congress in this city last week compelled us to almost abandon our office for a season. The discussions were so interesting and profitable that we could not resist the opportunity to increase our knowledge of men and things. If our paper lacks in variety this week, or seems to dwell at length upon the Congress, you have the explanation.

—Brother Fannon, pastor of the First Christian Church, looked happy at the large number of distinguished guests that it became the pleasure of himself and his church to entertain, and the distinguished guests looked happy during and after the entertainment. It was done orderly, with dispatch, and to the entire satisfaction of all.

—W. J. Lhamon's supplementary paper on the significance of the plea "Back to Christ" from a logical and literary view-point was one of the finest intellectnal productions of the Congress, Its style, spirit, grasp of the problem and clearness of thought was unsurpassed in the Congress.

—Elder J. B. Briney was anything but briny in the Congress. In spirit and his characteristic combativeness, he never appeared to better advantage to himself nor more pleasantly delighted a public audience. his ineffectual probing for heresy, however, helped to assure the audience of the orthodoxy of the Congress.

—We did not see the enrollment of names of attendants at the Congress, but heard it reported to contain about two hundred, from without the city, of course. Those present came from various parts of the United States; Missouri, Illinois and Iowa, of course, furnished the larger portion. There were preachers present from the Atlantic to the Pacific and from the lakes to the gulf, or nearly so, at least. Several of our colleges, as the program indicated, were represented by their presidents and professors.

—Orphans' Home literature, pictures and friends were in evidence in the Congress, and at one of the meals the Home was made the theme of toasts and conversation. Benevolences, by the way, seems to be one of the undiscovered or at least undeveloped continents of the Christian world, but we are discovering it; yes, beginning (barely) to develop it. Glad the sisters who are mothering these orphans had the opportunity of compelling the attention of a public representative gathering of our brethren to this important yet unappreciated work.

—As vigorous as were the speeches on "City Evangelization," at the Congress here last week, we think that the discussion as a whole failed to grasp and wrestle with the real question at issue. City evangelization is a question that has outgrown the resources of any single religious body and can no longer be profitably discussed from a denominational platform. There is no doubt but that there are sufficient resources in the various religious bodies committed to Christ and righteousness in any one of our great cities to evangelize it, and all discussions of this gigantic question should recognize these facts and look toward their united action in this work. Any other method is too feeble to touch the real question.

—The address upon literature by the Dean of Literature of the University of Chicago, W. D. McClintock, was the finest presentation of direct and relative uses of literature and its value to the minister of the gospel that we have yet heard. The analysis of the subject, purity, clearness and terseness of speech were some of the excellent features of this remarkable address. No other address in the Congress was more remarked upon or better enjoyed by the audience. It was itself a splendid representation, in part at least, of that of which it treated, literature. Probably every one who heard that address became conscious of an increased desire to become better acquainted with the literature of the age and of the world.

—J. A. Lord, editor of the Christian Standard, in his speech on "City Evangelization" defined a city as a condition of society in which men could live within twelve inches of each other without acquaintance.

—E. B. Ellis, of Nashville, Tenn., made the clearest and the strongest presentation of the plea which excludes the Holy Spirit as an agency in the conversion of sinners except through the Word of God that we have yet heard; but loyalty to the Word of God does not necessitate such a conclusion. To try to discover the presence and scope of the Holy Spirit and his work seems more consistent with the position of a true disciple of Christ than that of setting bounds to his ways and methods.

—B. L. Smith, corresponding secretary of our American Christian Missionary Society, made a beautiful, eloquent and inspiring summary of the work of this society in its half century existence, especially during these latter years. Later in the Congress he also in a few strong words deeply impressed the audience of the fact and importance of the May offerings for Home Missions, especially that it be personal and prayerful, congregational and consecrated, general and liberal.

—According to the discussion on "Theology," at the Congress of Disciples here last week it appears that "systematic theology" is something that is always behind the times; always growing, but never abreast of the age, and of little practical use in the conversion of sinners; more ornamental than practical. But this is not saying that it is not a useful and necessary science, even if imperfect or imperfectly perceived.

—In the discussion of the very able paper on the significance of the plea, "Back to Christ," by J. J. Haley, the question of uniting Mt. Hermon and Mt. Zion was thrown into a triangle by J. S. Hughes of Chicago, who reminded the disputants that the Isle of Patmos must not be excluded. Bro. Hughes suggested that we have had a reign of Pauline and Petrine theologies with the Johanine excluded; but the Isle of Patmos vision is coming to the front and the Johanine interpretation of the Christ is to have its day and place in the world's history.

—F. N. Calvin's supplementary address and review of R. T. Mathews' profound paper on "The Holy Spirit" was a most excellent view of the subject of the Holy Spirit's indwelling from the practical side of the question. It was also as strong an appeal for a higher spiritual standard of living on the part of Christians as was made in the Congress. It made one's soul hungry for the things of God, anxious to realize his promises in a more real and larger sense. While other papers tempted the intellect, this paper tempted the longings of the soul for better things.

—The collection for Home Missions should be taken next Sunday in every congregation in the United States and forward at once to B. L. Smith, Cor. Sec., Cincinnati, O. We do not mean simply to pass the hat for a few loose pieces of silver that a few may chance to have in purse or pocket, but the voluntary giving of money in large sums for a great purpose. Let every Disciple of Christ for once at least make himself or herself equal to the occasion and give worthily, richly and freely. Home Missions means something for you and for your children after you in this world as well as for Christ and for your fellowmen.

—Elder J. C. Reynolds, a good portait of whom we present our readers this week on our first page, was born in Hart County, Ky., December 15th, 1825. He became a Christian in his eleventh year, and during all the time from that to the present has maintained an unsullied Christian character. He spent two years in Bethany College during the presidency of Alexander Campbell, but he continued his studies after he left college, and, indeed, has never ceased to be a student. He began preaching in 1850, but has spent about fifteen years in teaching. He was for seven years professor in Abingdon College and two years at the head of Christian University. He was married in 1851, to Miss Sarah Frances Meadows, who departed this life Dec. 31st, 1882, while he was at Canton, Mo. They raised a large family of children, nearly all of whom are yet living. His ministry has been chiefly in Illinois and Missouri. In 1868 he became editor of the Gospel Echo, which he removed to Macomb, Ill., where he was then preacher. At the beginning of the following year, at his earnest solicitation, the editor of this paper became associated with him and has known him intimately through all these years. We have never known a purer or truer man. He still lives in Macomb, where he is much endeared to the people. At the 40th anniversary of the Christian Church of that place recently Bro. Reynolds preached, referring in his sermon to the early days of the church and to many of the old members, most of whom had passed on before. The Macomb Eagle, referring to his sermon, said: "The audience was in tears the greater portion of the time." Bro. Reynolds has never lost his interest in what is going on among us. He was an attendant on the late congress in this city. He loves his brethren; he loves the cause with which he has been so long identified; he loves the Lord, whom he has so faithfully served and into whose presence he expects soon to go. Many of our readers will thank us for permitting them to look upon this picture of their friend and brother while they recall the memories of the past.

—The mutilation and slow burning to death of a negro in the South a few days ago by a mob shows how hard it is for infuriated men to keep themselves within the bounds of reason and of law. The negro had committed a horrible crime, in a horrible way, and the mob made a horrible end to his life. Much has been said to modify the barbarian character of this and other instances of mob law, but we cannot see how this can be done save at the expense of our domestic and civil safety. It is a stroke at the very foundations of society and of government. Without a recognition of the place, use and dignity of our civil and criminal laws we cannot even hope for the stability of the nation. The horrible character of that negro's crime will not admit of even the shadow of an excuse or apology, but the laws of the state were equal to the emergency and would have produced far better results even as a warning to other evil doers than the course taken by the mob. The effect of such an act upon a community cannot be removed for years, perhaps generations.

—At a special meeting of the acting board of the American Christian Missionary Society, held April 14th, Bro. J. Z. Tyler's resignation as national superintendent of Christian Endeavor was presented, as stated in this paper last week, and accepted, and a committee appointed to prepare a minute of the board's appreciation of the services of Bro. Tyler. At the regular meeting of the board, the 21st of April, John E. Pounds was elected national superintendent of Christian Endeavor.

—We occasionally hear men expressing admiration for Calvinism for the reason that it has produced very great and strong characters. This may be true, but who can tell how many characters have been dwarfed or deprived of greatness, or turned into infidelity by its influence. This is a case in which there are two sides to the question.

—The article from the secretaries of the American Home Missionaries in this paper on how affairs in the office at Cincinnati are conducted will interest many of our readers. In this article the secretaries give a detailed account of their methods of business. This was asked for, we are told, by an Endeavor Society as a matter of information and the secretaries thought that it might be equally important and interesting to others.

—We have received a program of the Northeast Iowa convention, to be held at Hampton, May 15-18, and pronounce it a goon one. We are informed that this is the weakest district in Iowa, but this should not prevent a good convention. The fact that the secretary of this district, B. S. Denny, was promoted to the office of state secretary, shows that it is a district of no mean soil. For further informatiom about the convention address S. B. Ross, Sec., Oelwein, Ia.

—Strong resentment has been expressed from many quraters and from able jurists to the interpretation which the Attorney-General has given to the anti-army-canteen bill passed in the last Congress, but this will probably not deter the Secretary of War from carrying out the interpretation instead of the law and thus invite another congressional battle in the future over it. If so we suspect that the next bill will be so framed that it cannot be so easily annulled if passed and passed with such an overwhelming majority as to amount to a rebuke to those who have helped to make void the present law.

—The fifth annual convention of the Missouri State Missionary Association, auxiliary to the Cross Bearers' Missionary Reading Circle, a three years' course of systematic reading and study on missions in all lands, will be held in the Christian Church, Columbia, Mo., May 11-14, 1899. At this convention careful inquiry will be made as to the condition of missionary work in all the churches and societies of Missouri—Baptist, Presbyterian, Christian, Methodist, Epworth League, Christian Endeavor, Y. M. C. A., and all other missionary agencies. Rev. Richard Wilkinson, of St. Louis, Mo., is gathering information on all these points, and if the reader of this notice has any printed matter which gives the names of the officers of missions, and of missionary societies, with number of members and amounts contributed and names of missionaries who have gone to the foreign field from Missouri, he will confer a favor by forwarding such information to Rev. Richard Wilkinson, St. Louis, Mo. For a a home during the convention, write Mr. W. D. Moore, Columbia, Mo.

PERSONAL MENTION.

F. P. Arthur has resigned at Rochester, N. Y., and takes the work at Grand Rapids, Mich., May 1st.

Having finished a year's course at Creighton Medical College, Omaha, Neb., C. L. Pickett will now locate with the church at Woodbine, Iowa, where he preached on Sundays during the winter.

Bro. A. L. Jones and Bro. J. D. McClure, it is said, are meeting with remarkable success in their canvass for Central Christian College, Albany, Mo.

Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Teachout, of Cleveland, O., who spent the winter in California, chiefly at Pasadena, called at this office on last Friday, enroute home.

Prof. O. B. Sears has resigned his position in Central Christian College as teacher of Greek, Latin and Hebrew; his future field of labor has not definitely been decided.

The Mitchell Park Christion Church, St. Joseph, Mo., where Prof. J. A. McKenzie preaches, has increased in attendance and membership and expects soon to build a church.

J. L. PARSONS, now at 1421 East Market St., Indianapolis, Ind., says: "After May 1st I shall be ready for some meetings for the spiritual development of the churches wherever I may be wanted."

G. Halleck Rowe, pastor of the church at Salem, Ill., and his wife, on returning home from choir practice recently found their home possessed by their friends for an evening, and abundant evidence, of a substantial nature, of their appreciation of his and his wife's work.

E. M. Barney, pastor of the church at Perry, Okla. Ter., was recently complimented by a surprise visit from his people and some valuable presents. Bro. Barney says: "The Disciples have the only church in Perry that is not receiving aid from missionary funds, and this is made possible by their extreme liberality to the Christian cause."

The Great Huxley.

What Huxley, the Great English Scientist, Consideredthe Best Start in Life.

The great English scientist, Huxley, said the best start in life is a sound stomach. Weak stomachs fail to digest food properly, because they lack the proper quantity of digestive acids (lactic and hydrochloric) and peptogenic products; the most sensible remedy in all cases of indigestion, is to take after each meal one or two of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets because they supply in a pleasant, harmless form all the elements that weak stomachs lack.

The regular use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will cure every form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

They increase flesh, insure pure blood, strong nerves, a bright eye and clear complexion, because all these result only from wholesome food well digested.

Nearly all druggists sell Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at 50 cents full-sized package.

New York Letter.

A recent note from Bro. E. J. Teagarden a Danbury brings the good news that the church in that town has just recieved a gift of a thousand dollars from one of its older members. It is reported that Bro. F. W. Troy, former pastor of the Church of Christ, Sterling Place, Brooklyn, is arranging to organize a new church at Flatbush, that city. We had among other visitors at our services recently, Sister Collis, wife of Bro. Mark Collis, of Lexington, Ky. She reports the cause as flourishing in the "Blue Grass City." And also Bro. Maurice Willis and wife, Elizabeth Flower Willis, late of Boston, now of New York. Ours was the pleasure also of a visit from Mrs. D. H. Patterson, wife and true helpmeet of the beloved pastor at Auburn, N. Y., who says that the work in that city moves quietly onward. The pastors of the W. 56th, and 169th Street churches enjoyed the luxury of an exchange of pulpits last Lord's day evening, when Bro. Payne gave our people a good discourse.

A recent letter from Bro. J. A. Erwin, of San Juan, Porto Rico, states that has begun mission work, preaching already. He says there are several Christian workers on the ground, among whom are representatives of the Y. M. C. A. for the Army and Navy, the Baptist Mission Society, the American Bible Society and a Sweede who is "an independent." But none of them have made any great progress as yet. He was called upon to meet the President's Commission, to communicate to them his idea of the needs of the island. This he did. Whereupon he was requested to submit his opinions in the matter in writing, which the Commission promised to present to President McKinley for his consideration. We know all Disciples of Christ will be pleased to learn of this merited honor shown our first missionaries to Porto Rico. He praises the climate and says the prospects financially are good.

We are exceedingly sorry that the dates of the Western Pennsylvania missionary meeting at Newcastle, and the Conference of the North Atlantic States at Philadelphia, May 9-11, conflict. In all probability this will prevent many brethren in the Pittsburg district coming to Philadelphia, much to the regret of all. If this had been known a few weeks since it could have been adjusted. We should, however, do all the more to make the attendance representative from all sections of these eight great states in the conference. We have heard of people coming from Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and New York, but as yet no one has reported from West Virginia as an intended delegate. Are there not several expecting to come from West Virginia? Bethany College is the only institution of learning we have in the territory of this conference and she should be strongly represented. Let Bethany's welcome voice be heard in this convention.

Among the men whose presence and council are needed and who are peculiarly fitted to set forth, to advantage, the conditions of the several states, are the state evangelists. Some of these have promised to be present. All should be at the conference. They can render invaluable help and may receive much inspiration and encouragement for greater service in their home fields. Are not the state missionary boards willing to send them? Sunday-schools and Christian Endeavor workers, church officers, all pastors, city, district and state evangelists and the principal representatives of the various missionary boards within these states should be at Philadelphia. We wish to inaugurate a strong forward movement in this section with its 26,000,000 of people. All things considered it is the greatest mission field on the face of the earth. This is the last letter before the conference meets. Let us therefore urge upon all just this once, and last time the vital importance of their presence and advice in this conference of Christian workers. Let us come together, brethren, as the representatives of Christ, praying that God may direct all our deliberations to his praise and glory, to whom be honor, dominion, and power forever. S. T. Willis.

Protestant Theology at the University of Paris.

At the corner of Rue St. Jacques and Boulevard Arago—one of the sunniest spots and one of the airy peaks of the great metropolis—is a group of extremely modest buildings arranged about an oblong court, enclosed with a stone wall plastered and smooth without. One would certainly suspect a convent behind that wall, if it were not for this sign above the plain wooden door in the angle: Protestant Theological Faculty of the University of Paris.

Before entering note that the summit of the hill is occupied by the splendid Paris Observatory, while just below, and almost joining walls with the property of the theological school, is a monstrous, formless, gloomy building with a wall so high that we see only the upper story and a row of square, grated windows. It is the "Prison de la Sante," where Picquart, the friend of Dreyfus, is awaiting trial. Just below this prison is the home of the dean of the faculty, Dr. Aug. Sabatier. It is a fifteen minutes' walk from here to the main buildings occupied by the faculties of law, medicine, science and letters. These are imposing modern structures, and one is struck at once with the fact that theology is badly housed at Paris.

The court is so barren, so sandy and so pebbly as to be for that very reason worthy of mention. At the right, on entering, is the house occupied by the janitor, M. C. Concierge; at the left a seven or eight story pigeon house, which, however, is not higher than the wall that hinders the view from wandering. Near the center a few scrubby shrubs offer the pigeons shade. A three-story dormitory closes the court at the opposite end. Between the janitor's house and the dormitory is a long, one-story, nearly flat-roofed structure, parallel with the wall. Opening on a long, very narrow corridor are some four or five recitation rooms, of which number one is respectable enough and larger than the others. Of the ordinary rooms one is especially interesting. Twenty desks, long enough for four persons, as many uncomfortable, backless benches, for all the world like a narrow board across a wagon bed, a blackboard 3x4, some maps on the wall, a low desk in front for the teacher or lecturer. On the whole, the room might be likened to one of the most humble and least comfortable of country schoolhouses. These details would perhaps have no justification whatever except for the fact that the leading personage and dean of the faculty honors this place twice a week with the presence of his genius. Dr. Aug. Sabatier is one of the most distinguished characters of the French Protestant Reformed Church. This is the place to say that the man is like unto the room. He is small of stature, very modest in appearance; he walks, talks and acts like a sincere Christian. There is absolutely no trace of disdain for the opinion of others, no vulgar contempt for the traditional faith of his brethren; yet in the most distinct terms he challenges the authority of much that is accepted with the ease of one who has reached and fortified himself in a new position. His unshattered faith in God and in Christ, his fervent and unaffected piety assure him the favor of all who know him personally, and who believe in the right of private interpretation. A favorite expression of Dr. Sabatier is this: "The best theology is that which you make yourself." It is necessary to hear him lecture, to see his splendid head framed in a profusion of gray hairs, to listen to his sincere proclamation of the truth in order to fully admire the character of the man.

The relation of this school, which counts six professors and four other instructors, to the University and to the French Republic is not a little curious. It forms a part of the one precisely like any other faculty and with the same rights, though there is reason to believe that it is not regarded entirely as "free and equal," by the very fact that after all, its purpose is to produce a peculiar kind of pastors and to propagate a peculiar faith; while a theological faculty, says its enemies, ought to have no other purpose than the scientific study of all religions without regard to the production of pastors or even the conserving of an evangelical faith. The teachers are paid by the state. But France is a Catholic nation, and this faith is not represented by any faculty whatever to-day in connection with the state schools of higher instruction. The education of the priests is in the hands of the church of Rome, and at its expense. The state supports two Protestant institutions. The second, more orthodox and the more representative of French Protestantism, is at Montauban, in the south of France. Young men educated there find more easily employment as pastors, so they say, at Paris. Something like two hundred students are enrolled in the two schools.

Very naturally the Catholics make constant war on the present system. Every year an attempt is made in the Chamber of Deputies to suppress these schools by suppressing their part of the budget. That is probably what will happen one year or another, and without any special warning. The system dates from the time of Napoleon, and is not without serious contradictions from no matter what point of view one might consider it. Aside from this, the faculty at Paris has less sympathy than that of Montauban and those of the French-speaking cantons of Switzerland, on account of the wide-gauge teaching of Dr. Sabatier and Professor Jean Reville. In every case the life of these theological schools, depending on the generosity of a state where the clerical party is well entrenched, is seriously compromised. For, on the one hand, they must remain evangelical, if not orthodox, in order to produce pastors acceptable to the churches; on the other hand, they are obliged to adopt the most rigorous intellectual methods, first in order to respect themselves as searchers after truth, second in order not to be disdained by their fellow-teachers. By no means whatever can they hope to satisfy the Catholics, to whom their evangelical notions as well as their scientific methods will continue to be objects of hatred and sources of danger; for no matter what they teach, nor how, the result is inevitable: a recruiting of Protestant pastors for the Reformed Church. The Free Church, doctrinally about the same, would welcome a fall of these schools, for they preach and practice the separation of church and state. A doctrine still sacred here is that the state should support the church. If the Protestant theological schools go by the board, it will not be on account of an evolution within the Reformed Church in favor of "separation," but the result of clerical politics, for, at least at Paris, the present system is considered the only logical one. In an opening address at the beginning of the present school year Professor Jean Reville spoke in unmistakable terms on this point. Briefly put he believes in three things: in the unhesitating application of the scientific method, no matter what the result, in theology as an independent science worthy of study apart from any and all confessional ends, and that a theological faculty is necessarily a part of a state university. "Theological studies conducted as they ought to be form an integral and necessary part of the cycle of university instruction, in such a way that, if by any political calamity they should be eliminated, it would be necessary to establish them at once under penalty of leaving a deplorable gap which might compromise the health of the University organism." To those who believe in the absorption of theology by the terms philology, psychology and general history, the distinguished professor replies that "the field of study which it offers is so vast as to require its division instead."

With politics, papalism and conservative Protestantism as watchdogs, the Bible Chairs at the University of Paris, as well as the faculty at Montauban, will have, no doubt, many a dark day—and perhaps an untimely oblivion.

WM. H. MATLOCK.

Chicago Letter.

"Home again!" Not "from a foreign shore," nor from the "sunny (?) South," but from six months of strenuous and encouraging work among the university students of Virginia and Georgia. On our return we found Chicago as "breezy" as ever. Strange as it may seem, the Christian Churches of Chicago have made more substantial progress during my absence than ever before. Excellent meetings have been held at the Union Christian and the West Side Churches. Two new churches on the South Side and one at Austin Park have launched out into the deep under very auspicious circumstances. J. W. Infield, Bro. Cantrell and F. G. Tyrrell are vigorous, God-fearing, Christ-filled men, who have reinforced our former preaching force. The Christian Oracle Publishing Company has greatly enlarged its plant and increased its editorial strength. With J. J. Haley as editor-in-chief; the clear thinking, fearless yet peace-loving Campbell as office editor; the active and optimistic Broadhurst for business manager, and a number of our best writers contributing to its columns, the Christian Oracle deserves and doubtless will receive a much larger circulation in the future. The establishment of a first-class religious journal means a long and strenuous work, in which both patrons and paper heartily co-operate.

The Chicago Letter writer cannot refrain from dwelling at more length upon one of the additions to the preaching force of our Chicago churches. While attending the Congress in St. Louis I met my old friend, Mr. Herman Bollman, business manager of one of the best music establishments in Chicago's little sister city. He is a staunch Baptist, yet almost his first question was, "Why did your brethren let Dr. Tyrrell go to Chicago? St. Louis needs him so much." I told him I felt sincerely sorry for St. Louis, but her loss would be Chicago's gain. The Chicago dailies had fine pictures of Bro. Tyrrell and good reports of his sermon on last Lord's day. From the Times-Herald I quote the following: "The First Christian Church has secured one of the brightest men of the Christian Church denomination for its pastor—Rev. Frank G. Tyrrell—who has for nine years been pastor of the Central Christian Church, St. Louis. Rev. Mr. Tyrrell was educated in the schools and State University of California. After finishing college he studied law. His father is a Methodist minister and his son was raised in that faith, but he joined the Christian Church and abandoned the law for the pulpit." Then followed a fine outline of Bro. Tyrrell's sermon.

What did I say in the last paragraph? A Congress in St. Louis? Yes, a genuine Congress, and it was an unqualified success. The attendance was large and representative, the papers were strong and the subjects discussed vital, the spirit—well it was the spirit of Christ—made us feel "it's good to be here." Loyalty, love and liberty reigned supreme in the noble men who would go back to Hermon and Zion, but especially in the grand old truth-conserving hero who would combine Hermon and Zion. Certainly no religious Congress ever opened more auspiciously. When Bro. Garrison called the first session to order there were as many present as I saw at any of the day sessions of the Baptist Congress which met in Chicago two years ago. There were young men, middle-aged men, old men, and at least one whose white beard told the story of "many centuries." This centenarian was more—but I must refrain from personalities! The first paper, by Dr. E. S. Ames, struck, a high clear note, but the "feast of reason and flow of soul" did not lower its tone in succeeding sessions. Dr. Ames showed the necessity of "a theology" for each generation, although the science of God and divine things must be a growing science, never reaching absolute perfection. He not only showed the importance of the facts of the atonement, the inspiration of the Bible and the divinity of our Lord as contrasted with any theory of the atonement, etc., but that every man, whether consciously or unconsciously, must have a theology. But I must not whet your appetite too much. The papers I trust will be published. As I could not remain to the close of the Congress, Mrs. Ida W. Harrison kindly permitted me to read the closing paper on the "Enrichment of Public Worship among the Disciples of Christ." This paper will be valuable to our preachers.

I was especially gratified to see so many noble cultured women and wide-awake business men in the first Congress of the Disciples of Christ. While there was no centenarianess, there were young women and elderly ladies. Mrs. Kate I. Judy, whose kind words were valuable to me in years gone by, said to the writer, "So this is the baby Congress! If it were not so large I would take it in my arms and press it to my heart." There were many couples present like Mr. and Mrs. Dulaney, of Hannibal, Mo., who represent the consecrated working and business Christians in our churches. Chicago was well represented among our ladies by Miss May Rogers, a High School teacher of Latin from Englewood. When the report of the Congress is published buy it and read it, and you will doubtless attend the next Congress in Indianapolis.

"Home Missions to the Front!" As Cato ended every speech with "Carthage must be destroyed," so every letter, sermon and prayer during the month of May should close with "America for Christ." Shall we feel our strength, even mightier than Samson's in such an inspiring, uplifting Congress, and returning home bury our hearts and hands as well as our heads in the Delilah lap of sinful ease and indifference? What a soul-stirring session we had on City Evangelization! Chicago alone should have one hundred Christian Churches at least. Think of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, St. Louis and San Francisco! Indeed, "the fields are white." "Send the light." The people of India call the mighty river which like Tennyson's brook is forever going, going to the sea, Go-Go (Ganges) River. Let us be a go-go people, ever going forward in our missionary enterprises. The duty of the hour is Home Missions. Nelson said, "England expects every man to do his duty." The Captain of our salvation expects every preacher, every man, every woman, to do his or her duty, not in competition with our religious neighbors, but in holy co-operation with Christ. Because "the love of Christ constraineth us," let us persistently pray and gladly give. Home Missions to the front.

The descent is certain from weak lungs, lingering coughs, throat troubles or bronchial affections through bleeding lungs, to consumption, if the first stages are neglected. Thousands of people who are now in their graves would be alive and well to-day if they had heeded the first warnings of those troubles which lead to consumption and death.

The hacking cough, spitting of blood, weak lungs, and all similar troubles of the organs of breathing, will surely lead to consumption, if they are not already the signs of it. Then there are the other indications of the approach of consumption, such as night-sweats, emaciation, or wasting away of flesh from bad nutrition, which, if neglected, lead to certain death.

Ninety-eight per cent. of all the cases of weak lungs, bleeding lungs, lingering and obstinate coughs, and other bronchial and throat diseases, which have been treated with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, have been cured by it. Do not wait until your throat trouble becomes serious. All bronchial and throat troubles are serious. The time to take the "Golden Medical Discovery" is right at the start.

Even if your throat trouble has been neglected until it has been pronounced pulmonary disease or consumption, do not hesitate to use the "Golden Medical Discovery," for thousands of letters from the sufferers themselves, who are now well, bear evidence that the "Golden Medical Discovery" will cure, even after good physicians have pronounced the disease pulmonary consumption.

"I had been troubled with bronchitis for several years," writes Mrs. Orlin O'Hara, Box 114, Fergus Falls, Ottertail Co., Minn. "In the first place, I had sore throat. I doctored with different physicians and took various medicines, but got no relief. I raised from my throat a sticky substance like the white of an egg. Could not sleep, and had made up my mind that I would not live through the winter. I took Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and 'Favorite Prescription' alternately, and in a few days began to see that I was better. I took eight bottles. I have not felt as well in years as since using these medicines."

Unfailable—Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets for constipation and biliousness.

Jamaica Letter.

Some very startling press despatches appear to have been published lately in New York in reference to Jamaica. If some of your readers have come across them, as is likely, they must wonder what the island is coming to, and those who have friends here may be alarmed for their safety. Some highly sensational newspaper agent has been carrying on this sort of thing for some time. Here is one of his latest productions:

The New York Herald of the 20th ult. contains a long sensational despatch about the condition of Jamaica. It is dated from Port Antonio. The headlines are sufficient to indicate the character of the message:

ANARCHY MENACES ISLAND OF JAMAICA.

GOVERNMENT DETERMINATION TO INCREASE HIGH TARIFF MAY RESULT IN OPEN REBELLION.

GOVERNOR SHOWS FEAR.

SIR AUGUSTUS HEMMING UNDER PROTECTION OF AMERICAN FLAG AS GUEST OF CAPITALIST.

GRAVE ECONOMIC CONDITIONS.

After describing the industrial condition it says: "Jamaica will be driven by the British Government to anarchism or, perhaps, rebellion."

Here is the paragraph referring to the governor:

"The whole country is arroused and indignant. The governor is afraid to remain at his residence. He is always traveling away from it, and to-day he is under the protection of the American flag, being a guest of the Boston Fruit Company at this place."

Now the facts are these: There is a serious contest going on between the governor and the official members, and the elected members of the Legislative Council.

It is not so much the new tariff bill as the way in which it has been brought in that is the bone of contention. There have been some stormy scenes in the Legislative Council, and there will probably be more, for the elected members are men of intelligence and power, and they are defending the popular rights which there seems an intention on the part of the government to ignore. The country is for the most part on their side. Some very demonstrative public meetings have been held in all the principal towns. But no one anticipates that any but constitutional means will be resorted to. No one fears violence. After what must have been to the governor a very trying time he simply went to the hotel of the Boston Fruit Co. for a day's rest and change; and he also visited an English gentleman in the same neighborhood. Except for that little break he has lived as usual. The people are excited, there is no doubt, but I think we are too English to damage our cause by excesses. Here is another despatch:

The following are the headlines over a despatch in the New York Herald of the 31st ult.:

LIVES LOST IN JAMAICA RIOTS.

TWO AMERICAN SEAMEN KILLED, ONE MAY DIE, AND LOSS OF EIGHT NATIVES REPORTED.

TWENTY-FIVE ARE INJURED.

THREE FROM THE TEXAS ARE IN HOSPITAL, ONE SEVERELY HURT BY A STAB WOUND.

This is almost worse than the first. The facts are, the North American and West Indian squadron came into this port—six or seven warships. There were several thousand men on board. The second day they were in port a large number of them were granted shore leave. "Jack ashore" is known to be generally boisterous, but these exceeded what is usual. They appeared to get generally drunk, and there was a good deal of disgraceful rowdyism in the town. The next day a still larger number appeared to come ashore, and the scenes were worse. Under the influence of rum the men not only attacked natives indiscriminately in the streets, but they attacked one another. There were several serious frays. There were a number of severe cases of wounding, and I believe two or three men died of wounds inflicted by their fellows. It was said that never was such disgraceful conduct witnessed on the part of even men-of-war's men. After this Admiral Sampson would give no more shore leave, and there was no more noise. Alas, it was our American visitors who caused all the riot, and set the bad example!

We are thankful that we often get American visitors whose example and influence are of a very different character. Two weeks ago we were favored with a visit from Dr. F. E. and Wm. Clark, especially in the interests of C. E. work. They were here eleven days, during which they attended and spoke at sixteen meetings at five different places. They had some large audiences, the largest being near 2,000. They won golden opinions, and great good is expected to result from their visit. We were pleased at the Christian chapel to have them come in to worship with us on Lord's day morning. The services at which Dr. Clark spoke were at 6:30 in the morning and at 3:30 in the afternoon, so as not to interfere with the regular services. I expect they will advertise Jamaica very favorably.

Having already given you two newspaper cuttings I feel disposed to give you another:

THE ROYAL MILLENNIUM.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

NO. 1 SPANISH TOWN ROAD, KINGSTON.

A grand baptism by the Rev. C. C. Higgins, B. A. E., a champion of champions, will take place at the August Town River, on Monday, April 9th, 1899, when he will baptize by immersion one hundred and fifty candidates. (Mass Charlie is carrying Kingston on his back.) Alleluia!

The man who sends this advertisement to the paper has nothing whatever to do with the "Baptist Missionary Society." He is a black man who appears to be partially crazy. He "preaches" in the streets of Kingston, and is more comic than serious, and indulges in the most grotesque antics. On several occasions he has used a stick, or a sword, or a pistol to enforce his teaching; and has been brought up several times for breaches of the peace. Yet this man attracts crowds, and has before this baptized large numbers. Persons have left the churches to join with him. The doings of a man like this are often the cause of much mischief and a hindrance to the doing of evangelical mission work among a certain class who have a liking for noise and excitement and for the wholesale abuse of those who really seek their highest good but would put a rein upon their passions. This is one of the evils that sometimes tends to make our work more difficult.

The last improvement in Kingston is the opening of the electric car service throughout the city. It is found to be a vast improvement on the old mule car service, and is being patronized by large numbers. Our streets have been greatly improved. But out of regard for your space I must close for the present.

FRANCE (NORMANDY).

Mormandy, though only a small corner of Europe, bordering on the English Channel, has been of great importance in the world's history and to literature and art has proved an inspiring theme.

First inhabited by the Gauls, this province passed into the hands of the Romans and from them to the Northmen, who gave it the name of Normandy. It is now a part of the Republic of France, divided into five departments, in which fishing and agriculture form the chief pursuits of the simple, industrious people.

The current issue of the Singer National Costume Series shows two women of the peasant class wearing the large picturesque white caps which have characterized Norman women since the days of William the Conqueror.

There are about 150 Singer offices in France; among them are Caen, Cherbourg and Havre in Normandy. In this beautiful country the family exists in a very attractive form; nearly every one has a sewing machine, most of them being Singers.

FREE ECZEMA CURE!

Cures every kind of Eczema, Itching, Burning, Crusty Eruptions on the Face, Limbs or Body, Pimples, Milk Crust, Salt Rheum, Scrofula, Ulcers, Painful Sores, Skin and Blood Humors.

To the thousands of unfortunate sufferers, who are sickened and despairing of ever being cured of Eczema, a free trial bottle of B. B. B. (Botanic Blood Balm), the great Blood Remedy, will be sent by mail absolutely free to prove that it cures to stay cured Eczema in all its forms.

READ THESE SYMPTOMS.

Have you Tetters, Pimples, Scabby, Crusty (dry or moist) Eruptions on the face, limbs or body; around the mouth, ears, cheeks or forehead; attended with itching or burning; or a rough, scaly, chapped skin; the crusts fall off, sometimes leaving an angry, sore surface, upon which the crusts form anew? Have you such eruptions resulted in painful sores, ulcers, scrofula, swollen glands? Do the itching sores appear on the head, cutting off the hair, with a thick yellowish matter, forming crusts on the scalp?

Caused by Bad Blood.

Ointments and salves have never cured (they may relieve), because the real cause is in the diseased, poisoned condition of the blood, and the bad blood asserts itself in this form, just as it does in some one else in the shape of boils, or in scrofula.

Dr. Gilliam's Experience With B. B. B.

Dr. Gilliam, the distinguished Altanta specialist, long ago demonstrated that Eczema was a sign of bad blood, and for the past 30 years he always prescribed B. B. B.—Botanic Blood Balm, a powerful internal blood remedy, which always cured after everything else had failed. The effect of B. B. B. was not only to cure, but to act as a fine tonic, building up the broken-down constitution. It drove the bad, poisoned blood from the system, eliminating every trace of the discase. B. B. B. is the only remedy that does this, and the only REAL, PERMANENT CURE. Perfectly safe to take by young or old.

How to Obtain B. B. B.

WRITE FOR FREE SAMPLE BOTTLE.

If you are satisfied that B. B. B. is what you need, you will find large bottle for sale by all druggists for $1.00, or 6 bottles (full treatment) $5.00. For sample bottle enclose 2 stamps to pay postage, and address Blood Balm Co., 137 Mitchell St., Atlanta Ga., and trial bottle and medical book will be sent, all charges prepaid. Washington (D. C.) Letter.

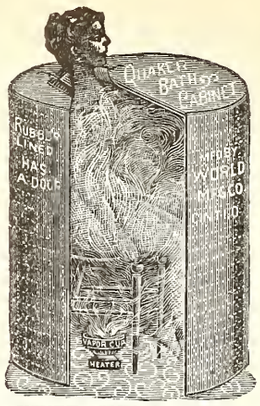
The five weeks' meeting at the Ninth Street Church of this city, closed April 9, with one hundred and eighteen confessions, thirteen by letter and four others baptized who had previously made the confession, making a total of one hundred and thirty-five. The results are exceedingly gratifying. Ever since the dedication of our new house of worship last May, we have been planning for a protracted meeting. The pastor of one of our large churches, a brother who has been remarkably successful in evangelistic work was engaged to spend the month of February with us. On acconnt of certain exigences in his own church, he found that he could not come. We were forced then to rely mainly upon home forces. C. E. Millard, the singing evangelist, was called to help us out in the emergency and rendered valuable assistance.

Bro. Millard has devised a plan which I am sure in time will be an important factor in evangelistic work. He uses a stereopticon and illustrates upon a large canvas his gospel solos. The advertisement of "illustrated solos" draws the people and the combination of song and picture deepens the impression of the sermon. Our Lord was accustomed to preach object sermons, seeking to gain entrance to the soul by the way of "the eye-gate" as well as "the ear-gate" and we will be wise to follow his example and adopt such methods as seen from their results to have the seal of his approval.

Speaking of object sermons we might point to the history of the Ninth Street Church, as such a lesson of the importance of Home Missions in Eastern fields.

Beginning eight years ago with a membership of less than one hundred we now have an enrollment of seven hundred and seventy, an average attendance of three hundred and fifty in the Sunday-school, the chapel in which the work was begun paid for and pulled down and the erection of a new house of worship at a cost of $30,000. The Vermont Avenue congregation, our mother church, invested about $3,000 in this work. Already we have nearly returned this sum to our various mission boards and have soon to pay to some mission child of our own the debt we owe to our mother.



In the states along the Atlantic Coast are twenty-six million people, about one-third of the population of the country, who own probably two-thirds of its wealth. Yet in these states the Disciples of Christ number only a meagre forty-six thousand and claim only six hundred churches, many of which are located in lonesome pine woods and on obscure crossroads. I mean no disparagement of the country churches, for the city churches are made up largely of peopie from these rural congregations and many of our prominent pulpits are filled by men from the backwoods. But, brethren, it is time we were planting churches in the great centers of population. The Home Society should have $50,000 for missions in the cities of the East. With this sum they could plant a score of churches which in a few years would become self-sustained and return with liberal interest every dollar spent in their behalf.

The Church Extension Board seems cognizant of the importance of the Eastern field. The money loaned to the H Street Church of this city is bearing fruit. Since this congregation began to worship in a home of their own, the work has been of a substantial and permanent character, which was not possible while they met in a hall.

The meeting held by Geo. E. Devol and W. J. Wright with this congregation closed with some forty additions. Among the number was the gentleman from whom the lot and house of worship were purchased.

The Rockville, Md., church holds this week a jubilee service at which time the mortgages on their church property will be burned. Bros. Power and Wright will assist the pastor, Robt. Elmore, on this happy occasion.

The money thus released, as George Muckley would say, from one link of the perpetual chain goes to the another to carry on its beneficent work. The Church Extension Fund has granted $250 to the new church in Joppa, Md., which was dedicated March 26. The church is a neat and comfortable structure 30x40 feet with an annex containing a baptistery, robing rooms, etc., and cost $1,620. The amount raised on dedication day, supplemented by the loan of the Church Extension Board, will nearly cover the entire indebtedness. Our evangelist, W. F. Watkins, and Pastor J. A. Hopkins, have closed an interesting meeting in this church. EDWARD B. BAGBY.

Lyman Beecher Lectures at Yale—II.

Prof. Geo. Adam Smith continues his lectures before the Divinity School on "Preaching of the Old Testament as Affected by Modern Criticism."

On discussion of question of the Old Testament as history he takes the position that from the time of Samuel on we stand on historic ground and deal with indubitable facts. In the period of the prophets it becomes more certain.

There are three portions around which doubts cluster. (1) The psalms and their titles. the dates of many of them are undecided and uncertain, and authorship unknown. (2) The books of drama, as Job and Jonah. He claims that it matters not whether these are history, they convey its message just the same. In fact, Dr. Smith says: "I never saw so much gospel in the book of Jonah till I treated it as a parable—as one of Christ's, for example." (3) Discussion as to historic and legendary character of the Pentateuch.

REVELATION OF GOD IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

He goes somewhat into full treatment of the fact that the religion of Israel was cast in the Semitic mold and temper, and that it was the natural outgrowth of the religiousness of the Semitics as a people.

Then if revelation, however high it may reach, at first to be intelligible it must begin on the Semitic level in order to gain any hold on the people, their social, political customs, ideas, conceptions, etc.

The Semites are a fertile soil for monogonous ideas of God, He says it is no more incredible that God should choose a race in which to reveal him than that he should choose one man, as in the incarnation, shows the superiority of the laws and religious ideas of Israel over surrounding nations. Criticism has shown that that influence has not been due to one body of laws given at one time, but these laws were the result of slow, steady growth.

Revelation, then, is not words, nor words and laws engraven on stones, not covenant—it is the unveiling of character and life of God, the enforcement of his Spirit on men's hearts, of which revelation in its workings and progress we have a record in the Old Testament writings.

In consideration of the subject, "Spirit of Christ in the Old Testament," he maintains the position that it is not by typology and Messianic prediction that we see manifestations of the Spirit, but in the inner life the conduct of the nobler impulses and in highest forms in such prophets as Hosea and Jeremiah, who learned the power of vicarious suffering and understood in the same way as Jesus, though not to so high a degree, our sins, their power and depth and God's love, how he travails in agony and sorrow for our sins.

In speaking of Israel's wars he says, on the battlefield the Spirit of Christ won its first great triumph, it was Calvary and the cross on which heroic love laid down its life for its brethren. It was the call to unselfish service.

The magnanimity of David's soul as shown in his dirge on Saul and Jonathan—dirge on friend and foe.

In all these discussions he keeps in mind and lays emphasis on the richness and suggestiveness of the Old Testament as its storehouse of material for the preacher of the present day.

Kansas City Letter.

Among the books I have recently read is one of such superior merit and absorbing interest that I wish to call the attention of the readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST to it. "Anglo-Saxon Superiority: To What it is Due," is the strking title. It might be inferred from the name of the book that it was the production of an English or American "Jingo." On the contrary, it is written by a Frenchman, M. Edmond Demolins, the learned director of La Science Sociale. Having passed through a number of French editions in quick succession, it now appears in a good English translation, through which it seems destined to reach its widest circulation. It is a remarkable book, judged by its grasp of facts, its sweet reasonableness and its cumulative and unanswerable argument. More than all is it remarkable for its absolute honesty and unfailing kindliness of spirit. The failure of Celtic and Latin civilization, as compared with Anglo-Saxon, is brought out in boldest colors, yet without cynicism toward the former or jealousy toward the latter. It is almost equally surprising that the French press has given the work its hearty endorsement almost without exception. One leading reviewer says: "It is like an examination of France's conscience. The times have been when boastfulness and self-infatuation were but two common French qualities; we have now some high-minded, watchful men at work, finding out the faults of the nation and seeking their remedies." M. Jules Lemaitre, whose rank as a critic is perhaps first in his country, writes as follows in Le Figaro: "An infinitely painful book is that of M. Demolins; but we must swallow the bitter cup to the dregs. The book ought to be read. We knew, or at least we suspected, the things which M. Demolins tells us. But he makes them precise and clear, he puts these things together and the effect of his work is to convince us of the social, political, commercial, industrial, financial and moral superiority of the Anglo-Saxon race and of our own weakness, our misery and inferiority. For the superiority of our cooks and comic playwrights is not calculated to save us, and it is just possible that our artistic superiority is but a somewhat useless luxury." A nation whose leading thinkers can thus frankly recognize unwelcome facts is not in a wholly hopeless condition, however low its actual state may be. It gives us hope for France that she is ready to face truth so humiliating to national vanity and to learn the lesson taught by a schoolmaster that spares not the rod of severe rebuke.

It is idle to attempt a review of this volume within any reasonable space. The barest indication of its contents must suffice. Beginning with a comparison between the present condition of the lands under Anglo-Saxon and those under other rule, he sets forth his views in such sentences as this: "See what has become of Southern America under Spanish and Portuguese rule, and behold the transformation of Northern America in the hands of the Anglo-Saxon. It is like night and day." He brings it closer home and portrays the increasing failure of France to keep her place at the front of the national procession in either commercial, intellectual, social or moral life. It is a scathing indictment.

The causes of this superiority of Anglo-Saxon nations he finds in the contrasts drawn between the Frenchman and the Anglo-Saxon in three particulars, their educational ideals, their ideals of private life and those of their public life. The Anglo-Saxon believes in the power of individuality. To him each person is a sovereign to himself. He is taught in the school, the home and society that he must depend upon himself for success in life. His education is such as to fit him, not for a parasitic, but a self-supporting career. He esteems it an honor to be a "self-made" man. The young woman is equally mistress of her own fortune, and trained to think, choose and act for herself. Marriage becomes an union of two self-respecting and self-chosen persons, rather than a bargain between mercenary and ambitious parents. The home life is elevated and the social atmosphere purified by this free choice of intelligent and congenial hearts.

One result of this individual independence of the Anglo-Saxon, as indicated by M. Demolins, may be hardly so gratifying as those we have named. The desire of the Anglo-Saxon for independence of thought and action leads him to avoid active politics, which demands large submission to social authority as expressed in political "bossism." Hence, he leaves that duty to the more socialistic element of his fellow citizens as represented by the Irishman and German, notably the former. Of this concession, the Hibernian is quick to take advantage and our large cities are rapidly falling under the rule of the foreign-born citizens. But we must resist the temptation to furthur comment. Every thinking American man and woman ought to read this book. It is stimulating, encouraging and instructive. One rises from its readings with gratitude in his heart that he is so blessed of God as to be a member of the great Anglo-Saxon race, while he is likewise duly warned of the danger of ignoring the fatal errors that have brought other races to a degenerate condition.

A very practical result of reading this book would be to secure a most generous offering from our churches for the American Christian Missionary Society. This great Anglo-Saxon nation must be conquered for Jesus Christ and his religion, if the world is to speedily receive the highest and truest civilization. Let every preacher among us do his utmost to enlarge the offering of his congregation.

Texas Letter.

It is only about a month till our state convention at Ft. Worth. The time is from Monday to Thursday, June 5-8. The program is before the people, and is regarded a business-like document, prepared with special reference to our Texas work. A few only of its features I will mention. From Monday evening to Tuesday noon the women will be in charge. The first session will have the "Opening Address," by Miss Grace Carlton; "The Great Harvest Field," Mrs. D. W. O'Brien; "The Auxiliary as a Home Missionary Society," Mrs. Belle B. Davis; "Our Children," Miss Myrtle Rogers. Tuesday forenoon will have "My Juniors and Some of Their Methods," Miss Elizabeth Eubanks; Reports from all officers and committees; "A Model Auxiliary," Mrs. Annie O. Wilkinson.

Tuesday afternoon the men take charge. President A. S. Henry will make his address, and the board through its president and secretary, Judge Anson Rainey and G. D. Smith, will report the work of the year; then some of our evangelists will be heard. The evening session will consist in the main of an address: "What we Teach," by the writer.

Wednesday forenoon will open with further reports from evangelists, closing with the report of our corresponding secretary, B. B. Sanders. In the afternoon we will have something of special importance: "Business Men's Conference," in which three of the best business men of the state will make addresses. These men are Plummer Harris, A. D. Milroy, J. Z. Miller. Their themes are: "How to Enlist Business Men in Mission Work;" "How to Raise Missionary Money;" "How to Conduct Missionary Work." After this E. H. Kellar will tell us about "City Evangelization." The evening session will again be devoted mainly to an address: "Our Opportunities and Possibilities," by John Logan.

Thursday forenoon will bring us a single address: "How Can the Sunday-school Help State Mission Work," by R. R. Hamlin; with reports of committees. In the afternoon, "Country Evangelization" will be discussed by S. A. Leake; "How Can the Endeavor Society Help State Mission Work?" will be presented by J. M. Campbell, and a "Junior Rally," by Miss Bertha L. Johnson, will close the session. At night President R. Clark of Randolph College will close the convention with a sermon on "The Gospel the World's Great Need."

Get ready to attend. Send a card to C. McPherson or Homer T. Wilson that your home may be ready for you. Don't forget the place and time, Ft. Worth, June 5-8.

Tom Smith has held a successful meeting at Itasca. Bro. Smith is an Englishman, and his work at the old home recently was also a great success.

The faculty of Add-Ran is complete for the next session. There will be no president. Chancellor Buxton was made chairman of the faculty, and he will be acting president. J. B. Eskridge was continued in the chair of Ancient Languages and J. W. Froley in that of Mathematics. Jacob Embry was given the chair of English Literature and Modern Languages. Prof. Embry is a new man, but he is a Texan and a graduate of Kentucky University, and comes to us with strong recommendations.

Bros. Leake and Morrow have held a fine meeting at Timpson; thirteen were added, and much good was accomplished.

Mertins has made a radical departure, if not from the faith, at least from an old-time custom. They have built a new house at a cost of $1,200 and paid for it before dedication. How do you like such departures? Mertins is the home of J. K. Walling and this fact was a big factor in this result; as also was the preaching of J. B. Sweeney.

Hubbard City has paid a debt of $1,400 on her house. The church is weak in members and purse, and this meant much sacrifice. As a sample of their sacrifices, two cultured young ladies have taken care of the house for a year, and given the proceeds to the debt fund. Such people should and will succeed.

Railroad Rates to Plattsburg.

The railroad secretary is happy to announce that the following railroads have notified him that they have authorized a rate of one fare for the round trip from all Missouri points to Plattsburg: "Port Arthur Route," "Fort Scott and Memphis," "Burlington," "Rock Island" and "Missouri Pacific." I hope to be able to announce in next issue that every road in the state has done the same. With this low rate we ought to have a great convention.

Notice.

TO THE CHURCHES OF SECOND DISTRICT:—The second district at Valparaiso, Ind., was the best in our history. The report of T. J. Shuey, our evangelist, was par excellence. He is now at Wanaton holding a good meeting. The desire of the district is to retain him permanently. Have you accepted your apportionment? If not, will you not do so at once? Brethren, let us rally as one man to hold up our evangelist, whom we love for his work's sake. There is a great work for us to do. Now is the accepted time. Let us do our part in rallying 100,000 souls to Christ this year.

Yours for the Master,

Not By the Hour Yet.

There was a mistake in print in last week's issue of this paper. The statement "One baptism last hour and one confession this," should have read last week. We have had thirty-seven additions to our church since last August and one more baptism for next Lord's day, besides the number added during the meeting held by our district evangelist, still we don't count the additions by the hour.

We have just organized another mission Sunday-school four miles in the country. The Morocco church now has three Sunday-schools with three of our elders for superintendents.

Many of the young men in Central Christian College have found excellent fields of labor. Bro. J. E. Davis Wilcox, E. S. Oatman, Lone Star; Bro. C. A. Burredge, Siloam, Ia. Some have employment fer all there time, we still have room for more young men.

W. E. Bobbit is preaching full time for the Plattsburg Christian Church.

The church is rapidly increasing in numbers and spiritual life under the ministration of Bro. Z. Moore, Pres. C. C. C. One addition in the Albany church last Lord's day.

Central Christian College is in touch with the best grade entertainments, Robt. J. Burdett, Col. J. W. H. Ham, and other high grade lecturers having appeared before her students and friends this year.

A Preacher Wanted.

I closed my work April 1st at Hickory, Wis., after five years' service. Would take pleasure in helping the right man locate in that field. He should be a missionary from the word go. The field is large, the people are appreciative, living cheap, remuneration moderate. I have enjoyed the work exceedingly and should doubtless have continued indefinitely but for the death of my precious wife. During our stay the membership has been increased from 32 to 83. Parsonage and other valuable buildings have been erected and paid for. My successor will find an unusually pleasant people, no quarrels to settle, no old debts to pay or apologies to make. This is no snap either as to work or pay, but a good man will not want either work or wages.

Indiana Joint State Convention,

State Missionary and State Ministerial.

IRVINGTON, MAY 9-12, 1899.

This promises to be the greatest convention yet held by the Indiana Disciples. The people of Irvington are arranging for the entertainment of the convention on a grand scale. The churches of Indianapolis will assist in entertaining. Send your name to S. H. Creighton, Irvington, Ind., for entertainment. One and one-third round trip rates are given by the railroads on the certificate plan for all within a limit of 100 miles from Irvington. Get tickets to Irvington, if possible, but if necessary to buy at different points do so, but always take certificate. At Indianapolis get railroad tickets to Irvington, even if you take street cars. The convention will be held at Irvington, not Indianapolis, and your railroad certificate must read to Irvington. Send to W. E. M. Hackleman, Irvington, Ind., for program. Everybody get ready and come.

The Second, Third and Fourth Answers.

God has men in all the walks of life who love his cause, and the second $10 received came from an engineer on the Burlington, F. P. Allison, of Brookfield. The hand on the throttle of his engine, the face that looks out of the cab, watching for possible danger, are oftentimes grimy and black, but beneath it all is a heart that is true and a soul that is pure for Jesus' sake.

The third comes from one who, though one of the best book agents I ever saw, is too modest to permit his name in print in this connection. Neither is he a member with us, but of one of the great Methodist bodies. But he loves God, and while now living in Chicago has lost none of his love for dear old Missouri, and hence sends his $10.

The fourth answer comes from one who lives in far-away Wyoming, yet who is not unknown to our older Missouri preachers, Bro. E. A. Carter. He does not feel able to send $10, but sends half of it, and I know that this is a heart gift and is hence acceptable in the sight of God.

The case now stands: T. A. Abbott, $10; R. D. Patterson, $10; F. P. Allison, $10; A "Friend of God," $10; E. A. Carter, $5. Two more are needed. Who will be the next?

Yours in His name,

T. A. ABBOTT.

A Slight Mistake.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I noticed in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of April 20, that Bro. Barnum, under "Denver News," makes a slight mistake in reporting for the Berkley Church. He reports "Bro. Pettis" as its pastor. It should read, Bro. Frank D. Pettit. And I will add for the information of Frank's many friends that at present he is very poorly, not able to preach or even attend the services. But he has a splendid helpmeet in the person of his wife, who most ably and to the entire satisfaction of the Berkley Church, represented him in the pulpit. The Lord bless and strengthen this good woman in caring for the sick and ministering to the spiritual wants of the Berkley congregation.

Beware of Food Samples.

Quite recently in New York two deaths occurred from poisoning by the use of powders sent to the victims by mail. In Leavenworth, Kan., the other day, nearly every doctor in town was called to attend the children who had gathered up, eaten, and been made ill by samples of an article left at houses by canvassers for advertising purposes.

Alum baking powders have always been favorite articles for this sampling business. Yet there is nothing more liable to lead to danger than the practice of using the various samples of baking powder left at the door. They are presented by irresponsible parties, in appearance are not distinguishable from arsenic and indeed, in Indiana some time since one package was found, after it had caused the death of the housewife, to have been mixed with that poison.

It is safer to refuse all samples of food or medicine offered at the door. Pure cream of tartar baking powders sell upon their merits and are never peddled or sampled.

From the Field.

Next week is our district convention at Keosauqua. We hope to have the best convention in our history. Our congregation came within $35 of buying a nice seven-room house on the same lots of our church house. It was a bargain, but it is now sold to others, and we must build or rent.

Our C. E. Society will have charge of the Rescue Mission work next Saturday evening.

Last Wednesday evening we said the ceremony that made Bro. Aldis Eckard and Sister Aurora Headlund one. They are members of the church here. J. H. FULLER.

Church Extension Notes.

Our Church Extension Board recently received two special gifts of $500 each on the annuity plan. The board pays 6 per cent. semi-annually on annuity money. At a recent meeting the Board of Church Extension granted $5,000 to save the Central Church at Toledo, O., from sale for debts. Toledo has a population of 150,000 and our Central Church property there cost, including lot, $25,000. S. M. Cooper, of Cincinnati, O., will give the address on Church Extension at the joint convention of the Indiana Christian Missionary Society and the Indiana Christian Ministerial Association. G. W. MUCKLEY, Cor. Sec.

State Mission Notes.

It was my privilege to spend a night recently in Canton, and was fortunate to strike an open session of the Mathetrophian Society. The exercises were splendid all through and worthy of the school in which they were rendered and of the society which presented them. The difficulties that faced the university a short while ago have been tided over for the time being, but it is still in the greatest danger. It never will be safe till it has an adequate endowment. It is capable of doing good beyond all possible telling if placed on the right basis. I mingle with the men of other churches and speak of the greatness of our people, and the reply is often that we have a great church and a wonderful people, but you lack in Missouri one of the best elements of strength—a great institution of learning. Give this institution $100,000 and this charge shall be removed. This call is to our men of wealth. We have them. We have ten men in the state who can give and who ought to give this $100,000.

It was my privilege in the morning of the next Lord's day to be at Ashland in Howard Co. This was my second visit to this church. They had fallen behind in their last year's contribution and when I told them the needs of the field they said they would pay last year's apportionment and they did and added for good measure a goodly portion of this year's also. Bro. Hoffmann is now preaching for them and of course they will lose none of their zeal in spreading the gospel to the ends of the earth. May God bless old Ashland church for she is worthy of his richest love. At night it was my privilege to look in on the church in Sedalia for a little while. Bro. Melville Putnam is getting hold of the people there in a way that shows his power with men. His praise is upon every lip and he seems to be worthy of it all. I did not see Bro. Cook, of the East Side Church, but understand that they are building up very fast and this is what you may expect from such a splendid leader.

Over half the fiscal year is gone and only 120 churches have sent in any contribution for State Missions; this averages but little more than one contrbuting church to the county. I know you have been crowded with Foreign Missions and that now you are being asked to remember Home Missions, and you ought. It will be our shame if there is not the largest collection for these purposes we have ever raised. We can't afford to be narrow and stingy and covetous here; we must give for these great enterprises of the church. It will be an evidence of smallness if we do not. If we are a great people we must do great things. If we are a royal people we will do great things in a royal way. What shall be the answer of Missouri's great people in the jubilee call?

But now one word more. If it is a shame for any of the churches of our state to fail to make an offering for Foreign or General Home Missions it is a greater shame, a larger dishonor, to fail to support the missions in the state. This is our own territory, our home land, and we must push the gospel into every part of it or stand condemned before the living God. "State Missions to the front," is the motto of your board. We believe that every church ought to give as much for State Missions as they do for the far-off land.

Yours in His Name, T. A. ABBOTT.

Is This a Fair Specimen of the Illinois Legislature?

As secretary of the Illinois Christian Citizenship League I was working for some reform bills in the legislature at Springfield, when I ran across the following serious incident: One of the gentlemen who had introduced one of our bills was told to meet with the committee to which it had been referred and he would have a hearing on the bill. He went to the committee room and sat down in the rear. The committee was called to order by the chairman. Then one of the members said, "Mr. Chairman, this meeting ought to be opened with prayer," and the chairman said, "I think so too;" whereupon he called one of the members by name and asked him to pray, but he refused, and then on another, and finally on one who responded with a mock prayer. After this another member said, "Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a psalm sung, and I move that So-and-So sing a psalm," but the man called on refused, whereupon the chairman of the committee picked up a feather-duster and ran the man around the room pounding him and telling him he must sing a song. After this performance had been continued for a while, the man responded and sang a very obscene song. This was the introduction of prayer and singing that was given to the meeting of this committee. The gentleman who had attended the meeting in the interest of his bill and ours left in disgust and said to me, "I saw it was useless to ask of such a crowd of men anything in our line. This same chairman, when I approached him as a representative of the of the Christian CitizenshipLeague, at once began to make fun and rally on the word Christian and called up other members and said, of course in ridicule, "Here, you are a Christian, you help this man out." If it is not time that the Christian men of Illinois get together and make up their minds that this class of men will not represent them in the highest lawmaking body in the state, then I do not know what time it is. I believe we are called to such a time as this. JAMES H. SHAW,

[If the above were not vouched for by good authority it would hardly be credible. We do not see how a more disgraceful scene could have taken place in the lowest barroom in the slum districts of our cities. And yet these are men elected by the Christian people of Illinois to enact laws for that great state? Why not publish their names that they may be stamped with the infamy which they deserve? —EDITOR.]

Church Papers a Necessity.

Our work here is moving on grandly. Additions are frequent and audiences are good. Texarkana is in line for every good work. We hope the subscription list of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST may be greatly increased soon. There can be no such thing as an intelligent non-reading church membership. Ministers and teachers have accomplished much for the real and permanent good of the cause of Christ in any community when they have succeeded in inducing the church members to subscribe for and become readers of our religious literature.

I have but slight hope of doing much good for any man whom I cannot interest in our religious papers. How can any religious man live and enjoy his religion without keeping in touch with the great body of which he forms a part? And how can he keep in touch except it be through these messengers of blessing? Such is the loving work of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Every copy is a benediction. Yet many church members seem contented without this great benefit. Did they ever think of themselves as paralytics? actually cut off from the very best part of the body? It will be a bright day for the church when we all become, not only readers, but lovers of our own religious literature. T. F. WEAVER.

Missionary.

The Boston Church a Star in the Crown of the American Christian Missionary Society.

The new building of the Disciples of Christ was dedicated on Sunday, January 22nd, and it may be somewhat interesting to note progress of our work in the city of Boston.

For several years the society has worshiped in South End Tabernacle, corner of Shawmut Avenue and Madison Street, and after repeated efforts to establish a permanent work in that location and after having reached the conclusion that it was impossible to build a permanent home church which we might reasonably expect to call the mother church in Boston and from which we might hope to start missions in other sections of the city, it was decided wise in the fall of 1897 to dispose of our property at Shawmut Avenue and Madison Street and sale was finally made. After considerable careful search, we finally decided to locate on St. James Street, which is in Roxbury Highlands, and succeeded in purchasing a lot of about 8,000 feet upon which stood a dwelling house, and the location of the dwelling house was such that it did not have to be moved and therefore to-day stands as a source of income to our work. The property was purchased and sufficient Roxbury stone was taken from the lot with which to build our present chapel. The seating capacity is about 250 to 300, and immediately back of the auditorium is the pastor's study and two robiug rooms. A pipe organ has been put in which is very sweet in tone and adds much to the impressiveness of our service. The house is heated by steam throughout, the pews are quartered oak, and everything is gotten up with an eye to having a comfortable and attractive church home. The vestry, of course, is about the same size as the auditorium, with ladies' parlor, library and kitchen connected.

We built the building on the lot, so that the dwelling house did not have to be moved, and therefore have the income property which more than takes care of the small debt which we have on the property, and instead of having to raise $600 a year interest as we did on the old property, we now practically have no interest to raise, as the rent from our dwelling house pays the interest and gives us $100 to $200 per year besides. Our property stands us $16,500, and is accessible from all parts of the city.

Bro. B. L. Smith, of Cincinnati, preached the dedicatory sermon, and the American Christian Missionary Society, who have been having an oversight over this work for years and who have contributed largely toward the support of the work here, took our dedication as an occasion on which to declare this church self-supporting, and with a gift of $1,000, bestowed upon us the benediction of the society. It would be needless for us to try to state our appreciation of the efforts put forth and the substantial aid rendered by the American Christian Missionary Society during the past several years in the maintainance and upbuilding of this work, and it is now our hope that we may be able to show ourselves able to care for this work here and thus render to the American Christian Missionary Society the best and most permanent thanks possible. We feel that those who have contributed toward the American Christian Missionary work cannot but now feel that the means and effort they have contributed have certainly been wisely entrusted to the society and as people come here and visit us and go to other places where they may see the work of the Missionary Society, it cannot help but convince them that money placed with the American Christian Missionary Society is placed where it will yield the best of interest.

The sermon preached by Bro. Smith was very able and reached the hearts of the people and did us all good. In the afternoon communion service was held at 2:30 and Bro. Roland A. Nichols, of Worcester, preached the evening sermon. A short session of Sunday-school was held at 12:15, conducted by the superintendent, J. C. Spry. Junior Endeavor was held at 4:00 P. M. conducted by Rev. R. B. Ray, who has substituted for us for the last year and a half and has done excellent work among us. Christian Endeavor at 6:30 was conducted by Rev. E. C. Davis, of Springfield, Mass., and at all of the services the house was filled.

Those of our membership throughout the West where we are so strong, and where we have church buildings without number, cannot appreciate quite the feeling which we now have here in getting into our own attractive house, and it is our earnest desire that we may be able to build the work up from now on, so that much good may be done for the Master in this city.

We earnestly desire that all who come to our city shall certainly visit us in our new house at 18 St. James Street, Roxbury. Look us up, as we want to meet you. R. H. GROSS.

How Our Home Missionary Work is Done.

Our home missionary interests are managed by a board of twelve members elected by the annual convention. The members of this board reside in or near Cincinnati, Ohio. The meetings of the board are held on the third Friday of each month, at 4 P. M. Of this board J. A. Lord, editor of the Christian Standard, is chairman; L. C. Fillmore, is clerk, and it has complete charge of all interests of the American Christian Missionary Society, reporting to the National Convention each year, and subject to the directions of the convention.

The American Christian Missionary Society was chartered by special act of the Ohio Legislature in 1851. This article of co-operation permits it to preach the gospel, hold real estate or other property necessary and convenient for carrying out the purposes of its constitution, to enact bylaws which shall not be inconsistent with the constitution of the United States or with the state of Ohio, to receive bequests, and is invested with all powers and privileges necessary for conducting missions in the advancement of the Christian religion.

The chief executives of the society are two, a corresponding secretary, who is elected by the National Convention, and an associate secretary, elected by the acting board, who devote all their time to the work and who are the only officers receiving a salary.

The office of the American Christian Missionary Society is in the Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, Ohio. The method of conducting its work is as follows: The appeals come in from the various mission fields of the United States, stating the needs, the opportunities, and all details of the mission field; these appeals are read, digested and arranged by the corresponding secretaries, and together with all facts and data obtainable by them are submitted to a committee on missions and missionaries. This committee studies the whole matter and makes recommendations to the board. The board acts upon these recommendations, appropriating all the money for the year that there is any reasonable hope of receiving.

It is the duty of the corresponding secretaries to carry on all the correspondence, select the missionaries in connection with the mission fields and report with recommendations to the committee on missions and missionaries for the men to do the work in the various fields. The board always requires of a man acting under its appointment first, that he shall have a character that is above reproach for Christian living; second, that he shall be sound in the faith once delivered to the saints; third, that he shall be competent to do the work of a successful minister of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ; fourth, that he shall be acceptable to the mission field to which he is appointed. When these conditions are met, and the committee on missions and missionaries recommends the appointment, it is generally made. Another duty of the corresponding secretaries is that of securing funds for carrying on this work. The sources of income are the churches which take the offering the first Lord's day in May for Home Missions; second, the Christian Endeavor Societies which observe Forefathers' Day, studying the lives and work of the pioneers and taking an offering to advance the work for which these forefathers sacrificed so much; third, our Sunday-schools, which were asked by the Chattanooga Convention to observe Children's Day for Home Missions the third Lord's day in November each year. An appropriate Children's Day exercise is prepared which is sent gratuitously to all schools asking for it. And the fourth source of income is that of our brethren who give of their means for the advance of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Whenever any money is received at the home office from any source it is entered by the bookkeeper on the day of its reception, on the cashbook, and credited to the source from which it comes, either church, Sunday-school, Endeavor Society or individual, with the name of the remitter and the post office opposite the amount. If this amount is sent for any special purpose that special purpose is entered on the cashbook and the amount goes into that special fund. A receipt is sent on the day of the reception of the amount to the person remitting it, indicating the amount of the remittance and the fund into which it goes and the source from which it is received, either church, society, Sunday-school or individual, as above indicated. As soon as sufficient funds have been received the amount is deposited in the treasurer's hands and his receipt is taken for the same, and by him entered into the fund for which it is credited, either the general fund or special for some other purpose.

At each board meeting of the A. C. M. S. the board votes that orders be granted on the treasurer for funds needed to pay the bills; no money can be taken out of the treasury except by vote of the board, and that on an order signed by the chairman of the board and the clerk of the board. Whenever the board has voted money the orders are drawn by the corresponding secretary, signed and countersigned by the chairman and clerk of the board, and taken to the treasurer. On these orders the treasurer issues his check for the amount. The board has an auditor, elected by the convention, and this auditor goes over the books each month, auditing all receipts, comparing the total receipts with the amount received by the treasurer, and these must balance each month. The corresponding secretary is held responsible for all funds received until he can show the treasurer's receipt for the same amount; the treasurer is held in turn responsible for all funds received until he can show the orders of the board, signed and countersigned by the chairman and clerk of the board for the same amount. Then the books are sure to balance. Our bookkeeper is very careful, and it is remarkable that in all the amounts received from so many various sources that during the last year not a mistake was found in the cashbook.

It is the purpose of the board to keep the expense account down to the lowest amount consistent with doing the work. Every dollar is counted twice before it is expended, and the effort is made to get the very best service out of every part of this amount.

All these officers of the board serve free of salary or any other compensation, except the secretaries, who devote their entire time to the work. The bookkeeper is a young lady, and is of course paid for her services, as she devotes all her time to it.

We want our young people to know that on an average $300 a year will maintain a home missionary, on account of the amount that he can raise in the field. We want them to feel that every five dollars put into Home Missions results in a soul being brought into the kingdom. We want them to know that America is the ripest mission field in all the world, and that this open field when it is cultivated becomes a help to all other enterprises of the church in turn. We have neglected our home missionary work in the past; that which should be foremost among us was allowed to drop into the rear; three-fourths of the United States is dependent upon our American Christian Missionary Society for help, and yet so much did we neglect this wonderful field that the income of the American Christian Missionary Society dropped down to $20,000 a year. Then the cry went out, "Home Missions to the front." We are trying to redeem this wonderful work, and in the last three years it has been greatly improved. In 1895 our income was $20,000; in 1896, it was $28,000; in 1897, $32,000; in 1898, $41,000, and we have now the cry for "$100,000 for the Jubilee Year of the American Christian Missionary Society!"

The society was organized at Cincinnati in October, 1849, and will celebrate its Jubilee at the great convention to be held in Cincinnati in October, 1899, at which time we hope to report that we have raised "$100,000 for Home Missions." We ask your help. Every Endeavor Society giving us $5 or more will be put on the roll of honor of our great Jubilee Convention.

Bellaire, April 24.—Yesterday morning eight who were baptized the previous Lord's day were received into our fellowship. Two made the good confession and four were baptized last night. This month we have had 17 additions to our church, and in the last five months at regular services we have had 68 additions, about 90 per cent. by baptism. A number have come from other churches. The average attendance at the Bible-school during the last four Lord's days was 255. We have commenced using the Cramblet (T. E. Potwin, April 24.—I closed a pastorate of about seven months with the Potwin church, April 23. When I began work here the church was lukewarm and had a debt of $300. We have not had many additions, yet in the face of storms, but leave the house clear of debt, salary paid and the church far more spiritual and active. My wife deserves much of the credit for raising of the debt. The future is bright. Though struggling to pay off their indebtedness, they gave three times as much for Foreign Missions in 1899 as they gave in 1898. I leave here with the expectation of entering the summer school at Columbia, Mo. I expect to preach while increasing my culture.—K. W. WHITE.

Perey, April 25.—The work here promises well for the year. Ten added during April; seven by confession, three by statement or letter. We expect to preach in the country each Sunday afternoon; alternating between two good fields where we hope to organize congregations in time.—E. M. BARNEY.

Liberty, April 15.—Geo. F. Wood, of Union City, just closed a 15 day's meeting at Union Center school house with 15 baptisms.—MRS. WM. DEARDORFF.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, April 25.—For the first time in the history of this city the ear of its people have been secured for the plea of the Christian Church. The First Christian Church of Jacksonville is composed of a faithful, earnest band of workers for Christ who have never faltered in their allegiance to the cause, and while many discouragements have have been met they have hoped and prayed. Bro. S. M. Martin is with us and his congregations so far have been surprisingly large. Sunday night 500 people at least could not be seated in the tabernacle. We built it too small and are going to enlarge it during this week. It will only seat 1200 crowded. There have been six additions to date. Last night was Monday night and yet the house would not hold the people. A few tickets were given out to persons desiring to see the baptism which was in the church, after the service. We are going to write more history in the next few weeks than in the past ten years.—RUFUS A. RUSSELL.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT? For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

THE EVOLUTION OF A PASTOR; Or, Elder Brune's Experiences at Eastville.

BY A. A. HONEYWELL.

Hour after hour Elder Brune mused by the fire, heedless of the fact that the clock struck ten, eleven and twelve, successively. The storm without increased in fury, trying to keep pace with the tempest raging within his own soul. He now knew for the first time why the elders had not shown him that consideration and courtesy to which he had been accustomed—he was only their hired man.

He now knew why the usual reception had been omitted. It would not be appropriate to receive an employee with so much display. But even more humiliating to him than these was the officiousness of certain ladies in the church (doubtless disciples of the doctrine proclaimed by the elders), who sought to run him, his wife, his children and the church. Elder Brune's sensitive nature rebelled against all of this; he felt intensely humiliated. "Why," mused he, "I thought I was the servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, but I am instead the servant of earthly dictators. When I left the Methodist Church I thought I was free from the dictation of bishops and presiding elders, whose will I was compelled to obey, and have so far lived in the sweet illusion that I was free; yea, I thought I was an elder myself, but I am only a 'hireling' and Jesus says a 'hireling careth not for the sheep.' I am simply the tool of Bro. Brown. When he pulls the string I am to talk, sing, pray, call or any other work his fancy may order. Before I was free, or thought I was, I loved to preach, visit the sick, to look after the needy, and in short do the work of a pastor, but now how can I ever enter the pulpit again? I couldn't hold up my head, my humiliation would be so great. No! I never can do it! I won't do it either! I shall resign to-morrow! I'd rather dig than occupy such a position! But, no," thought he again, "I have engaged myself for a year and it would not be right to thus break my word, besides is it not my duty as a servant of Christ to exercise patience? Perhaps things may not be so bad after all." Thus as the hours sped by these conflicting emotions chased one another across his soul until completely tired he commended himself to the Father, whom he knew loved him and would overrule even these afflictions to his eternal betterment, and humbly closed his petitions with the words of his Lord, "Not my will, but thine be done."

By morning the tempest within and without had partially subsided, and partaking hastiiy of a light breakfast he started out on his errand of mercy. He called first at Widow Jones', a faithful but humble member of the church, whose husband has been dead two years, but she had industriously endeavored by various means to support her family of six children. In this endeavor she had, to all appearances, succeeded quite well, for the children always came to church and Sunday-school, and if not richly were, nevertheless, neatly and tidily clad, so that the community imagined she was able to take care of herself, and she being rather proud did not make it known, even if occasionally she suffered for the necessities of life.

This particular storm coming quite suddenly as it did found her with an empty coalbin and larder. Elder Brune took in the situation at a glance and knowing how much she prefered work to charity, he inquired if she would not come to the parsonage that very day and assist his wife. He was very desirous for her to come and bring the children also, for he knew they would be lonesome at home. No second invitation was needed, and as Widow Jones left her humble home for the parsonage she breathed a silent but heartfelt prayer of thanksgiving to God for so quickly answering her prayer for relief.

Thus Elder Brune went from home to home, or in some cases from hut to hovel, that he might learn who were in need and seeing that suitable assistance was given; nor was he alone in this task, for Bro. Brown had also found his way into many homes and made hearts glad by his comforting word and appropriate assistance, so that when they met to compare observations they discovered that whereas on other questions they might differ, their hearts were as one in this Christly work.

CHAPTER III.

Elder Brune had been in Eastville for three months. The audiences had increased somewhat but there had been no additions to the church. He had faithfully visited all members of the flock and many who were not of the fold, but something seemed to be lacking. The church had expected a large ingathering and were disappointed. Some thought the fault lay with Elder Brune—that he was not the man for the place; others that the church was not properly holding up his hands in his efforts to win the wayward from the "error of their ways."

Elder Brune himself, was conscious that his preaching and pastoral efforts did not yield the customary fruits. He was also conscious of a difference in himself. While by nature he was jovial and light-hearted, he had become morose and despondent. Whereas he had formerly delighted to proclaim the gospel and had thrown his whole soul into his sermons, now he seemed to have no soul to put into them. His words and work were not the outpouring of a loving heart and a zealous mind, but simply the result of will power and sense of duty. He was also aware of the cause of this change—the thought of his simply being a hireling, with no liberty of thought or action, but governed entirely by the will of the elders (engaged to deal out spiritual lessons in allopathic or homeopathic doses according to prescriptions received), was a millstone about his neck, bearing him down into the sea of humiliation. Even the fact that the elders had of late given him a little more liberty than usual did not have the effect of lightening this weight, for the thought still remained that he was making merchandise of the gospel by consenting to labor as an employee.

Bros. Brown and Olds were also much concerned at the lack of numerical growth in the church and had several consultations; as a result of which they came to the conclusion that they themselves were at fault in not exercising more faithfully their duties as overseers. They had in fact left things too much in the hands of Elder Brune, especially of late, and had been too considerate of his feelings, but the cause demanded a change, even if in so doing the dominie's feelings had to be sacrificed. Accordingly, Elder Brune was notified that he was to begin a protracted meeting on the following Lord's day; that is, he was to do the preaching. The meeting began at the appointed time. Bro. Brown opened the meeting by announcing a hymn and followed with a scriptural reading and prayer, calling upon Bro. Olds to lead in prayer. After the singing of another hymn Elder Brune was announced to preach the sermon—one, however, not of his own selection, but on a topic selected by the bishops.

Mrs. Olds, bishopess of the church, led the singing with a superabundance of noise and a minimum of melody; but that did not worry her, for she was leading, and that was the sole ambition of her life—to lead in everything except that part which had in it more of work than honor.

After the sermon Bro. Brown extended the invitation. Thus the meeting continued for three weeks with no visible results. Bro. Brown had stood ready to receive confessions, but there were none to receive. He was also ready to bury candidates in baptism, but there was no candidates, and so discouraged he closed the meeting.

During the meeting Elder Brune had done everything he was told to do, making no suggestions and leaving everything in the hands of the elders. Nor was he surprised that there were no results, such a mechanical affair could not be expected to produce spiritual fruitage; but this was not plain to Bro. Brown. He could not understand why some at least were not converted; he surely had done his part. Mrs. Olds was certain it wasn't her fault, so it must have been in the preaching.

In fact, the bishops had put their heads together and were seriously considering the advisability of asking Elder Brune to resign.

A few days after the close of the meeting Elder Brune remarked to his wife that he would like to invite Bros. Brown and Olds to take tea with them to-morrow if she was willing.

"I am sure I have no objections," replied Mrs. Brune. "But what is your motive? Women, you know, are quite inquisitive and like to know the why and wherefore of everything."

"Well, to tell the truth about the matter, I want a chance to discuss with them the pastor question. My position has become unbearable, but I have tried hard to keep the matter to myself as much as possible, so as not to worry you, for you could not understand my feeling on the subject, not having been in a similar position."

"Don't be too sure about that, Mr. Brune. I think I have some faint conception of it at least, for if you have been

'ruled,' so have I, or at least Mrs. Olds has tried to rule me, although I am free to confess that I am not as meek as Moses or even my lesser half. She has given me minute directions as to how a preacher's wife should do, act and dress, as to how to trim my hats, etc., to say nothing of how to clothe and govern the children; in fact, she is authority on how to bring up children. She plans my work for me, allotting me so many hours' sleep, work and visit, even telling me of your shortcomings, my dear husband, and suggesting that I might assist you in correcting them. At this point, however, my patience gave out, and I told her that it was so much easier to see others' mistakes than our own, that I could not think of trying to pluck the mote out of your eye until I had succeeded in getting rid of the beam in my own. I think she took the hint, for she has not criticised you to me since. But what do you expect to gain by discussing the pastor question with the elders? You surely don't expect to convert them?"

"That is exactly what I expect to do," replied the Elder. "I think they can see for themselves that their plan does not work well; besides, I have made a careful study of the Scriptures on the subject and I think I can show them that from the standpoint of the Scriptures their position is without authority."

"I am very much afraid you will not succeed," said his wife. "But you have my earnest prayers, nevertheless."

"That would hardly be praying in faith believing, would it?" inquired Elder Brune.

"I presume not, but I can imitate the disciples when they prayed, 'Lord, increase our faith,'" was the reply.

Their conversation was here interrupted by the arrival of Grandmother Gray, who had dropped in to see how they were getting along. She brought with her a dressed fowl (she is always engaged in such deeds), for she thought they "might relish it."

"I did so enjoy your sermon last Lord's day, Bro. Brune," said Grandmother Gray, as she seated herself, "when you was telling how we were a living temple and each of us was a living stone in that temple and as the temple grew our responsibilities were also growing, and if we didn't also grow we wouldn't fill our places. I just thought how thankful we should be to be thus honored. I know I am not a pillar in that temple, but I have a place, humble though it is, and I want to fill it well. It's so comforting to think we have a place to fill and can be of some use in the world."

"I think you fill a prominent place in that temple, Grandmother," replied the Elder. "You are always on errands of love and mercy, carrying sunshine with you."

"I couldn't be doing anything else," she said, "and be loyal to my Master. There is so much gloom and darkness in the world without me carrying it to people. Sunshine is what we all need. The warmth and light that comes from the rays of the Sun of Righteousness."

Little did she know how much of sunshine she took with her into the parsonage that afternoon.

Spring.

GEORGE B. EVANS.

Old Winter was loth to leave this year. He leans heavily lately upon his staff, and the last long breaths of this dying century are cold, chilling blasts. Perhaps he resents the recent intrusions upon the privacy and hitherto secrecy of his "summer quarters." You know Parry is even now prowling around his hermitage. It might be an argument in favor of the "North Pole Paradise" theory to note that this vespertine season of the year has a taint of that Adamic failing, nipping the forbidden fruit. He frostbit our apple orchards this trip by his prolonged tarrying. Original sin is also seen in his "evil for evil" policy. But all this aside. At least 'twas only yesterday that his hoary head of frost and snow bowed a parting benediction, and kind Sol once more loosed from the icy embrace of his cloud-clad death—the graveclothes of gloom—shines sweetly and sunnily upon us all again.

Yes, the beautiful daughter of Time, sweet, still Spring, is here. Her bluebell eyes are opened wide. Though man nods, God and Nature are always awake. Her cheery laughter rings through all the trees and fills the glens with echoed warblings, twitterings and chirpings of softest melody. With careless grace and lightsome heart she trips gayly along with her tresses streaming in the zephyrs. The forest foilage, like ostrich plumes dyed emerald, brightens her Easter bonnet, whose broad brim is heavily trimmed with the tasty lace of "green pastures" and grass-grown meadows, whose "Irish monotony" is relieved by a showy embroidery of brilliant-hued flowers. The silk twill of the milkweed is interwoven with the velvety violet, morningglory, rose and buttercup, whilst here and there are clusters of plush rosettes of variegated tints—jealous dandelions, spotless daisies, trusty thistles and smiling sunflowers. Nature is a master millinor. To tell the truth, she is a connoisseur in any and every art.

But Spring, unlike most creations of beauty, is not a mere volatile ideal, an evanescent phantasy, a tawdry bricabrac. Venus made but one such maid and exhausted her material in shaping Spring. She is the ruling princess, the Roxana of the wide, wide universe. Her throne must be earth's most exhalted pinnacle.

Like all feminines, Spring is airy, but unlike all others, her airiness is not the transparency of nothingness. She is sprightly, lithe and lively, yet not frivilous and catching after bubbles. Young she is, too, untaught in the tedious curriculum of long experience, still that ought not discount her character, since lacking the sour of a theologue, the mustiness of a sage and the glum of a philosopher, she is yet fresh, racy and versatile, flitting like a bee from flower to flower always extracting and treasuring honeyed sweets.

Spring is the very embodiment of life. Fullness is the first law of heaven. Christ came to give life and "that more abundantly." He filled the hungering multitudes; yes, he more than filled them, for we read of the seven and the twelve baskets full of remnants. Spring's economy finds paradoxical form in a surplus of spirits. Life, like the overflowing fountain, floods the brim and trickles away to water the plains of Jordan, while simultaneously it purifies its mother vessel, keeping its source ever crystal clear. The animation Spring gives to vegetation is unchecked till Autumn throttles its bounding growth. The same may be said of Spring that Dr. Holmes asserts of Nature when he represents her as having her pockets full of seeds and having holes in every pocket. Her prodigality is proverbial.

And then, too, Spring is a welcome harbinger of peace. The breath of Winter comes in fitful gasps; that of Spring and Summer is one long note of sweetest song—an Æolian harp strain. The former is the incarnation of discord; the latter a pleasing monotony of continuous concord and harmony. Spring is the anvil on which the sword and spear are rendered malleable only to be transformed into implements of peace. Nature even emulous of the Prince of Peace strives successfully to efface the scar of the iron hoof of war. In quiet June what of the once thunder-toned battlefield? All is still, asleep—those rounding mounds, once bleeding wounds to mother Earth are healed over with the balm of Gilead, the ointment of sweet-scented cloves, those grim cannons whose mouths once belched forth molten lead, are now harmless as doves, almost hidden by a troop of sentinel daisies that, unsoldier-like, are seen ever and anon nod and softly slumber, while those shamefaced battlements are mantled with the blush of pale pinks and purple violets, for feeling their incongruity with their environs, they strive to hide their black, bare ruins with that sackcloth of flora—course moss. Spring is the season of love.

"Gentle Spring! in sunshine clad,
Well dost thou thy power display.
For winter maketh the light heart sad,
And thou—thou makest the sad heart gay.
He sees thee and calls to his gloomy train
The sleet and the snow and the wind and the rain;
And they shrink away and they flee in fear,
When thy merry step draws near."

The Source of Yankee Doodle.

Lippincott's Magazine for May obtained the following account of "Yankee Doodle" from the London Telegraph:

"It may be news to most people to be apprised of the fact that the air of the American national song 'Yankee Doodle' was originally that of a Cavalier ditty, and was possibly whistled by the London street Arabs of royalist sympathies with the object of irritating the Roundheads. Only it was 'Nankee Doodle' then, an unmeaning appellation applied to no less a personage than Oliver Cromwell, who rode into Oxford with a single plume in his hat, fastened in a knot, called at the period a 'macaroni.' 'Nankee Doodle' crossed the Atlantic at a convenient time. Then the term Yankee, applied originally strictly to a New Englander, was beginning to be used colloquially, having been derived from 'Yenghee,' the Indian fashion of pronouncing 'English,' when the initial 'N' in 'Nankee' in the effusion was discontinued and 'Y' substituted.

"The tune was adopted by the Revolutionary colonists more in the spirit of retaliation than anything else. When Lord Percy's brigade marched out of Boston the bands played 'Yankee Doodle' as a mark of contempt for the inhabitants. But the colonists uttered a threat, and carried it out, that before the war was over Percy's brigade would have to dance to the despised tune, and they had to. It has been contended that in 1755 Dr. Shuckburgh wrote 'Yankee Doodle,' but the best authorities are agreed that in its original form it was composed to deride the Cromwellians. It may be noted that the late President Grant was so innocent of music that he only knew two tunes. One was 'Yankee Doodle' and the other wasn't."

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Have You Bladder or Uric Acid Trouble?

You May Be Afflicted And Not Know It.

By Special Arrangement, Every "Christian-Evangelist" Reader, to Prove For Themselves the Wonderful Merits of SWAMP-ROOT, the Great Kidney Remedy, May Have a Sample Bottle Sent Absolutely FREE by Mail.

People are apt to believe that kidney disease is rather a rare disease, but recent discoveries have proved that it is a most common trouble indeed.

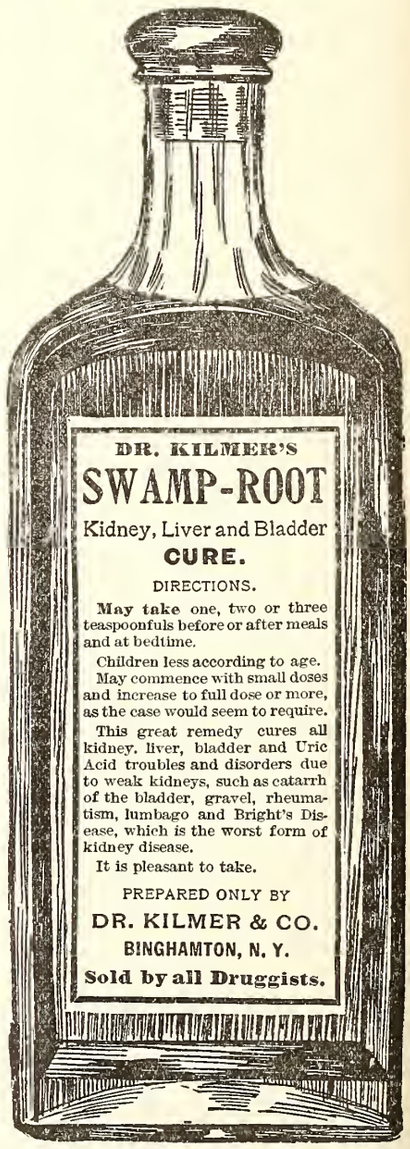
And the proof of this is, that most diseases, perhaps 85 per cent., are caused in the beginning by disorders of the kidneys.

You can't be sick if your blood is pure, free from kidney-poison and disease-breeding germs. Your kidneys should keep it so. That's what they are there for. And as long as they are well they perform their duties with thoroughness and dispatch.

You are well when your kidneys are.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, will make your kidneys well when they are sick.

Kidney trouble often comes from overwork or overexertion. From exposure to cold and other weakening influences, from lifting or a strain, from overeating or drinking. All these things weaken your kidneys and poisonous germs begin to creep into your blood.



It is at just such times that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is needed.

When your kidneys are not doing their work, you have a backache, headache, sediment in the urine, scalding irritation in passing it, obliged to go often during the day and to get up many times at night, dizziness, or irregular heart, bladder or uric acid troubles, rheumatism, neuralgia, sleeplessness, nervousness, irritability, sallow complexion, bloating, dropsy, tired feeling, loss of energy and ambition.

Swamp-Root is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of untiring effort and research by the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, Dr. Kilmer, and has truly wonderful restorative and healing action on the kidneys and bladder.

The best proof of this is a trial, and nothing could be fairer than the offer to send a sample bottle of this great discovery absolutely free by mail.

To get a sample bottle and a book giving some of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured, write to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and mention that you read this liberal offer in St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

One Half the 50ct. size—One Quarter the $1.00 size.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent or one-dollar sizes at the drug stores. Don't make any mistake, but make a note of the name, SWAMP-ROOT, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and remember it is prepared only by Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

If Christ Were Here.

Preaching on Sunday, the 16th inst., at Ripponden, near Halifax, the Rev. F. Lawrence, founder of the Church Sanitary Association, said that Sheldon, in his book entitled, "In His Steps. What Would Jesus Do?" had made little or no reference to threee spheres of life in which Christ moved—the animal world, the immediate surroundings of human life, and the death and burial of the human body. If Christ were here now he would teach the duty of showing kindness to animals. He would emphasize the obligation, incumbent upon all, of caring "as well for the body as the soul." He would proclaim that that which is commonly called death is no break in the continuity of life, and that the dead body should be disposed of reverently, innocuously and inexpensively. C. S. A.

The Library.

Give me the room whose every nook
Is dedicated to a book;
Two windows will suffice for air,
And grant the light admission there;
One looking to the south, and one
To speed the red, departing sun,
The eastern wall, from frieze to plinth,
Shall be the poet's labyrinth,
Where one may find the lord's of rhyme,
From Homer's down to Dobson's time;
And at the northern side a space
Shall show an open chimney-place,
Set round with ancient tiles that tell
Some legend old ond weave a spell
About the firedog-guarded seat,
Where one may dream and taste the heat:
Above, the mantel should not lack
For curios and bric-a-a-brac—
Not much, but just enough to light
The room up when the fire is bright.
The volumes on this wall should be
All prose and all philosophy,
From Plato down to those who are
The dim reflections of that star;
And these tomes all should serve to show
How much we write—how little know;
For since the problem first was set,
No one has ever solved it yet.
Upon the shelves toward the west
The scientific books shall rest;
Beside them, history; above—
Religion—hope, and faith, and love;
Lastly, the southern wall should hold
The story-tellers, new and old;
Haroun al Raschid, who was truth
And happiness to all md youth,
Shall have the honored place of all
That dwell upon this sunny wall,
And with him there shall stand a throng
Of those who help mankind along
More by their fascinating looks
Than all the learning of their books.

Such be the library; and take
This motto of a Latin make
To grace the door through which I pass:
"Hic habitat Felicitas!"

A Short Story of the English Language.

Did you ever wonder where the English language came from? It came from England, of course, to the United States; but where did it begin?

When Cæsar went to Britain, in 55 B. C. (and that is the first time that we hear of the Britons in history), there was no such thing as the English language. No; it is only about twelve hundred years old. And for the first hundred years or so it was a baby language! For it did not grow to look and sound at all as it does now until after 1000 A. D.

But where and when was it born?

The Romans, from Cæsar's time on, ruled a large part of Europe. Spain and Portugal and France are still called "Latin" countries, as well as Italy, because in all these regions the Latin race and the Latin language became supreme.

Not so with England. In the fifth century the Roman soldiers gave it up and left Britain. The people had adopted some of the Latin words, but the language of the natives was old Celtic. This, however, was not the mother-tongue of English; the modern forms of Celtic are Scotch-Gaelic, Irish, Welsh, Manx.

No; our English is the child neither of the Latin nor of the Celtic, but it is descended from an ancient Germanic language brought to Britain in the fifth and sixth centuries by some tribes from the shores of the Baltic Sea—the Angles, Saxons and Jutes. The dialects of these tribes were much alike, and were gradually woven into one language, called Anglo-Saxon at first, and afterwards Old English (from the most powerful tribe — the Angles).

But surely, when we study Latin and French, we find a large number of words that look like English words of the same meaning. Where did these come from? English has always been a great borrower; and just as England has colonies all over the world, so that "the sun never sets" on the Queen's dominions, so English has words taken from all languages.

We have noticed that some of the Roman soldiers' words were left in common use among the Britons of the fifth century; these were adopted, in turn, by the Anglo-Saxons; and as the Romans said strata via for a paved way, so the Anglo-Saxon said strœt, and we say "street." I wonder if Cæsar would recognize the word! In 597 some Christian missionaries went over from Rome, and many more Latin words were adopted by the Saxons — "priest," "church," "psalm;" also words for plants and animals—"lily," "pea," "lobster," "trout."

In the ninth century the Danes invaded England, and left some of their words.

In the eleventh and twelfth centuries France and England were closely united, the English king and court being for a long time Norman-French; and English then adopted a multitude of French words, which, in their beginning, had been, most of them, Latin.

And since that time English has been taking words from Greek and Latin, from French, Spanish and Italian, from German, Dutch, Russian — even from Hebrew, Persian, Arabic, Turkish and North American Indian!

For example, when we say "Amen" at the close of prayer, we are using a word taken straight from the ancient Hebrews.

When we say "telescope" we are using the words a Greek boy might have used two thousand years ago: "Tele skopeo"—"I see at a distance." When we call a certain study "geography," we are putting together two words that to the Greek boy meant "writing of the earth." When we name a certain formation of land a "peninsula," we take two Latin words for "almost an Island."

When we say "boudoir," we use an old French word that meant a place to go and "pout" in. And if we call a certain little animal a "squirrel," we are speaking also with the old Greeks, of a little creature "sitting in the shadow of its tail."

Ought we not to remember always that even for our language we owe so much to those that have lived before ourselves—some in distant countries, and many in the far-off centuries, even before "history" begins?—Jessie A. Chase, in St. Nicholas.

Kindness to Poultry.

The Church Society for the Promotion of Kindness to Animals, makes the following suggestions respecting the packing of poultry for transmission abroad: The coop should be of ample size, open at the front with upright laths three inches wide and two and a half inches apart. A drinking dish, at least three inches deep, should be fixed on the outside of the upright laths, sufficiently above the bottom of the coop to prevent the dirt from fouling the water. A three-inch feeding trough should be fixed on the outside, running the whole length of the coop, so that the fowls may put their heads between the laths and feed at leisure. The floor of the coop should be covered an inch deep with peat moss dust (not peat moss litter). A sack of mixed corn and grit, amply sufficient for the voyage, should be strapped on the top of the coop, and the words, "Please give us a drink, and a handful of corn," printed in some conspicuous place. Delight.

Miss Harriet looked from the little girl to Mr. Weston. "She said her name was Delight!" exclaimed Jennie Weston. "I wonder if she's the one!"

"Yes, I am the one," said the orphan.

"Did you get my telegram?" demanded Mr. Weston. "Have you seen the rob—the man I mentioned?"

"He is sleeping in the barn," said George. "He works for us."

"Good!" said Mr. Weston. "Now, we can't stand around here explaining things like the last chapter of a novel, because we three are starved to death. You children take off Delight's things while your mother gets ready. And Cousin Harriet, if you want to do a kind deed, fire up the gasoline stove and lay on some great slices of ham and ever so many eggs, and I'll cut the ham. And George, run to the barn and bring the rob—your friend, I mean, but don't tell him about our little friend."

While Jennie and Mildred were hovering about the strange little girl, Miss Harriet said, as she lit the burner, "Cousin, you haven't gone and adopted a child, I hope?" Mr. Weston carved off a slice of ham and patted it affectionately with the flat side of his knife. "And why not?"

"Why, haven't you enough children to raise now? And is it fair to them to bring in some stranger (who will most likely turn out bad) and keep them from a third of their property?"

"Cousin Harriet," replied the other, as he cheerfully cut off another slice, "that little waif out in the hall has saved me from complete failure; but for her I wouldn't have a cent in the world! It's a strange story and not a very long one either, but I'm too hungry to talk. Besides, I hear the robber coming. I must see if they recognize each other." Mrs. Weston was upstairs, doing something to the cinders that had lodged in her hair. The girls helped Delight off with her hat and cloak in wondering silence. There were a hundred questions they were curious about, but neither could begin. At last Mildred asked her how old she was. "I am six," said Delight, "but I will be seven next time. Every time I am one more; but the numbers on the street doors are not. At last I will be grown up and then I will find mamma's grave."

"Then your mother is dead?" said Mildred.

"Yes, she is somewhere in the ground, but I don't know where. When I am grown I will hunt for the place, and hunt, and hunt, and lay flowers there every day."

"My mamma is dead, too," said Mildred taking Delight upon her lap. "But I can't remember her at all."

"Is she in the ground, too?"

"She is in heaven," said Mildred.

"Where is that? Is it fu'ther'n New York?"

"Why! don't you know about heaven?" Jennie interrupted in astonishment.

"You see I am so little," said Delight apologetically. "They's so many things I don't know. There's hand-organs, you jus' go round and round, and the music goes out and out. But a foot-organ, you go up and down on it and it is as still unless you hit it, oh, I can play some."

"I think you must like music," said Jennie.

"Oh!" cried Delight ecstatically. "Oh, and once, one time it was a dark night; oh, ever so dark and I was hurrying home with my basket, and they was a man playing on a hand-organ, he was playing 'Ta, ra, ra,' may be you've never heard it, 'cause it's just out a few years ago, Bidgy says, and I stood and listened so long that my foot was frostbitten, that one next to the door, and then when I got home—"

"Then what happened, dear?" said Mildred, drawing her closer to her.

"Then—I wasn't going to tell that part—then they beat me and I cried half the night, my foot hurt so. But I don't care. It don't hurt now, you know. Did you ever hear 'Ta-ra-ra-boom?'"

They confessed that they had heard it.

"Oh, sing it for me," cried Delight in rapturous anticipation. "I didn't expect you had heard it off in this little place."

The girls were spared the effort by the entrance of Mr. Weston at one door and of George with his robber at another. At the same time Fup began to bark furiously without.

The robber did not enter far, and he fixed a suspicious gaze upon Mr. Weston. He did not see the child. But Delight had seen him, and her eyes had opened to their widest extent, while she began to tremble violently. She was trying to get her breath. At last she cried out, "Wash!"

At the call the man started and faced about. The next moment he started forward and sank upon his knees. Delight had slipped from Mildred's lap, and she now ran toward him with her arms outspread. He took her up in his burly arms, and she put her slender arms about his neck and kissed him. Then there was a strained silence which was broken by a curious sob that came from Washington Shaw's throat.

"It is you, Wash, ain't it!" said Delight, throwing back her head to look at him.

"Yes, little darling, it's old Wash."

"And you're jus' as dirty as ever, ain't you!"

"I expect I am, sunbeam. Where in the wide world did you drop from?"

"Out of that good man's pocket," replied Delight, pointing at Mr. Weston. "And there is candy in there, too. Wash, do you know when you left me with Fup, some people came and carried me away, and kept me shut up in a house so, so long—and did you look for me?"

"Day and night, darling."

"But I was so little and the city so big, wasn't it? They made me go at last with a basket and beg for clothes, while they watched from a corner. Or things to eat. Or anything. And they had a Big Black Man that was always listening to see if I told about myself, only I couldn't see the Big Black Man, because he could dodge so quick. But he always slipped behind me wherever I went. They told me so. I couldn't ever find the way back to where you used to be, because the Big Black Man was watching and wouldn't let me go off the street they sent me on. If I had turned down a side street, just that second the Big Black Man would of run a red hot knife right through my throat and of stuck out behind!"

"The vilyuns!" exclaimed Mr. Shaw.

"Wash, is one dog doing all that barking, or do you keep a dog show here? Oh, Wash! Is it Fup?" They opened the door and Fup bounded in with such rapidity that he stumbled and turned a complete circle about his tail. But he was up with a joyous yelp and began to dance about Wash and Delight, occasionally drawing off to one side, then rushing frantically till nearly upon them, then wheeling about with his nose close to the floor and flying madly in circles. When he had worked off the first edge of his pleasure, he came to them wagging his tail so hard that Wash caught and held it, so Fup could use it again. At least he said that was his reason.

As the lunch was ready, all went in the dining-room, where Mr. and Mrs. Weston and Delight seated themselves at the table. George presently joined them and made a comfortable fourth meal. "As we eat," said Mr. Weston, "I will explain why your mother and I went off in such a hurry and with so much mystery to St. Louis, and how Delight saved me from losing all my property—home, land—everything. And if I leave out a point, I will ask Delight to remind me, since she knows almost as much about this story as I do."

Children, do you remember, two weeks ago I couldn't use my typewriter, so had to write my article? What was the result? The printer had a dreadful time puzzling out the words. I hope none of them are sick, yet. They turned our Advance Society into the Advent Society and the Morris family in Fleming Col., they made Marris. But it was my fault. I never get the tail of my "O" just right, and you can't be too particular with tails, of course. I have received two photographs, one of Floy Popplewell and one of Gerald Dever. If you would like to see the pictures of these Advance Society members, just step around and I will show them with pleasure. Gerald Dever and his mother send their names to be announced for the second time on our Honor List. They always send the quotations they learn; here is one from Michael Angelo that I like very much: "The small things of life are the hinges whereon the great ones turn. New Honor List: Mabel Fleming, Nannie D. Chambers, Floy Popplewell, Mattie Upton.

Maurice Bragg, Shelbina, Mo., writes: "I am getting along well in the Advance Society. I have just joined the church. I have just finished reading the 'Story of a Busy Life,' by Miller. I do not expect I can make my life as lovely and as sweet as hers, but I can try, and I have resolved to try." Florence Henry, a new member from Nortonville, Kan., is eleven. Mary E. Wilkins is one of her favorite authors. Next week this page will be entirely given up to children's letters. Don't forget to write an account of one of your best vacation days. A Plea for the Japanese in America.

In the latter part of the early days when Nihon, which you call Japan, was shut and sealed, and no foreigner could come in and no native could go out, the boy Neeshima lived in a little inland village. Even yet the land shuddered at stories of the fearful persecution that had stamped out Jesuitism. No doubt some of the very old men had childish memories full of the horror of blood, pit and sword, and of a great forest where every tree was a cross that bore dreadful fruit—the tortured form of some poor Jesuit dying for his faith. Still, at every crossroads hung edicts against the despised religion. They were written in blood and said: "Let any Christian, even the King of Spain, or the God of the Christians himself, come to Nihon, and he must lose his head." The boy had heard these tales, but there had somehow come to him a single broken thought of one true God. It was one seed only, but cast upon fertile ground, and Neeshima's soul wondered as it grew. Later Commodore Perry's guns pointed over Yokahoma Harbor, and the land was opened to trade, and the youth Neeshima went to the centers of his country seeking knowledge for young samurai (military nobles), drinking learning as thirsty ducks do water. He saw the Ketojin's (hairy barbarian's) ships, and some one said to him, "In their country they worship the one true God," and Neeshima longed to go. One night, when a crowd of sampans hung about a great ship and her hold was being filled with bags of rice, two boy friends rowed him out to her. Neeshima was crouched close in the bottom of the boat among some rice bags. In the melee of shouting coolies and wavering glare of the torches, it was easy for him to make his way to the hold unseen, and hide there. Finally, the last coolie left the hold, sampans drew off, hatches were shut and the whistle blew. Then the ship steamed away, carrying the lonely boy without a cent, nor a friend, far away from the lovely Morning Land. He was leaving his family and friends to face persecution and perhaps death, and here was he alone with his hungry, crying heart. That night he fought desperately with swarms of rats that well-nigh devoured him, and when the hold was opened in the morning he crawled on deck weary unto death with the night's struggle. He fell at the captain's feet and begged by signs to be taken to the land of the one true God, and the captain agreed. Part of his ship duty was to black the officers' boots. Noble born and bred, he had never done a menial's service, and there can be no greater insult to one of Nihon's people than to touch him with your foot or ask him to carry or care for your shoes. He kept on with the unwelcome task as best he could, but one morning the mate was angry. He lifted his heel and kicked the boy, kneeling before him, square in the forehead, and sent him flying backward amid the jeers of the crew.

Neeshima rose with the blood gushing from a great circular cut in his forehead, and wild with passion ran to his room and took down his long sword. "The soul of the samurai is his sword," said the proverb, and every noble carried two, the long one to kill his enemy with, a short one to take his own life, for "death, but not dishonor," was the legend of the shining dirk.

As he started on deck a thought of the captain smote upon him. He could not trouble one so kind, but the poor Japanese boy, none would care for his life—so he lifted the dirk, a whisper seemed to fill the place, "How, then, can you learn of the true God?" He fought there the battle of his life. At last the old, proud Neeshima, the self-willed spirit, lay dead, and the new Neeshima, his foot upon his dead self, looked up in the best prayer he knew to the one true God. There was no interpreter, but the Father love could be stayed no longer and broke over him in mighty waves of tenderness and yearning. It led him until he knew the gospel and had all America could give him. It led him back to a life of holy service for the youth of his land, and a sight of the scar on his forehead served to bring to instant submission many a passionate young heart, and now he is not Nihon's but the world's hero.

He was the forerunner of 20,000 or more of his countrymen who have come to our land seeking good. Intellectually, the Japanese student is the peer of any. They add diplomas and degrees, and, Zaccheuslike, have climbed high into the tree of knowledge, hoping for a better view of Truth. Yet some who have gone back to their own country have told me they never heard the gospel in America. Many see only the worst side of life here. I was told how some Japanese brethren in San Francisco tried to save a young countrywoman from being sold to shame. They passed her from hand to hand and hid the trail for awhile, but finally ended in a mad night's chase over the roofs of houses in deadly peril of life and limb. Even missionaries feel shy and strange when they first return home, how much more must these feel so! for they come as if to a new world, and have often a living to make and an education to get, and that, too, without a friend or counselor. It is a part of his etiquette to conceal emotion, but under his calm exterior the Japanese student often carries a homesick, sorrowful heart. Suavity and kindness are a part of his national life. Ought we not give him something better when we are the best Christ he knows, and one little touch of love would seal his heart to God forever? Our colleges are able to train his intellect, but his greatest, crying need is soul-hunger, moral training, and before God our sacred charge is his soul. Then, too, it is economy of effort to convert him here. Why should we rub sleeves with him in our streets, and then cross the ocean to find him? Moreover, every Japanese student has his constituency at home who will be influenced to Christianity as he sees it in America, and so will hinder or help our work in his own land. Again, there are possible Neeshimas here, and even one will shorten our toil and bring us many strides nearer the goal. We none of us dare to turn aside from his needs as we fear to hear, "I was a stranger, and ye took me not in." Wherever these young men gather in our great cities is the best chance to help our foreign work. The material is good and the expense small, but the supreme argument in the matter is Christ's will. He alone has authority, and his command should be sufficient.

This, too, may be a chance to whip into line some who go mooning along the road to Zion with the excuse, "There's so much to do at home." Jesus testifies in their lives, "I never knew you." How could he when he never meets them in this great field anywhere? I fear these will never do the work. Nay, are they not part of our charge? Ought we not send them missionaries? How I wish we could send them some of our lusty young Christians whose lives are potent and full of service!

Up, loyal, Christ-loving hearts! The gates are open now. Are we daunted at the sight of the hungry, waiting hordes? Enter now. Just beyond there waits a Presence, beautiful beyond all we had dreamed of his beauty and gracious with the graciousness of God. He beckons to the great golden door of his house of love, and we begin, "Lord, when saw we thee a hungered or sick or naked or in prison?" He points to these and says (we had read it so many times), "Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these ye did it unto me." And the righteous shall go into life eternal.

A Striking Letter

FROM THE EDITOR OF THE "SOUTHERN POST-JOURNAL."

Memphis, Tenn., June 7, 1897.

Dr. Peter Fahrney, Chicago, Ill.

Dear Sir: An old Latin author says:

"Gutta cavat lapidem.
Non, vi, sed saepe cadendo," which translated reads:

"A drop wears away a stone, not by force, but by steadily falling."

The truth of this old saying is illustrated by the follwing: We have had a natural aversion against all patent medicines, but having read about your Blood Vitalizer in our Post-Journal, week after week for so many years, we finally came to the conclusion to give it a trial, and the first two bottles have so encouraged us that we wish to try it more extensively. Kindly send us——dozen bottles at once,

Yours truly, ZIMMERMAN & BRO.

$100.00 A Month and Expenses This Summer.

Trustworthy men and women who are honest and industrious should write and engage with The World Mfg. Co., 495 World B'ld'g, one of the largest concerns in Cincinnati, Ohio, who offer splendid inducements to sell their Quaker Bath Cabinet and appoint good agents in unoccupied territory. Experience not necessary, for the firm furnish everything and teach you the business.

This is a splendid chance to make money and the books of this Company prove that they paid their agents for last month's work $46,-834.00

The demand for this remarkable Cabinet is something enormous, as there are millions of families all over this country who have no bathing facilities. Those who have bath tubs have discarded them since the invention of this Cabinet, for it is so much superior in every way, as it opens the millions of pores all over the body, steams out the poisons that cause disease and gives the most cleansing, refreshing, invigorating Turkish, hot air, and hot vapor baths at home for three cents each. It is the best blood cleanser and system purifier known, far superior to poisonous drugs, sarsaparillas, tonics, etc. It is a regular hot springs at your home, and not only cures the most obstinate diseases, but also kills the germs, eradicates them from the system and prevents disease. A good position is offered those who mention this paper and write them at once, giving age, references and experience.

TOPIC FOR MAY 14.

GOD'S COVENANT AND OURS.

(Ps. 105:1-10.)

The close relationship between God and Israel has ever been a satisfying picture of the close relation between God and his people everywhere. The covenant with the wandering and distressed, which promised them ultimate deliverance, is a great comfort to us in that it is a picture of the covenant with us, who are also wandering and distressed.

Some there are who wander in the darkness of sorrow and pain, with the elements unpropitious. Into each life some rain must fall—and some hail and some thunderbolts. All of us at one time or another must play a part in the tragedies enacted on the stage of this world. If we have accepted the covenant of God, the bow of hope will span the heavens for us, even while the storm is on.

Some wonder in the wilderness of temptation. None are exempt. Thorns are growing and trying to choke. Human nature is weak, and the good which we would do too often is not present with us. Here again our covenant comforts, for it promises for every temptation a way of escape.

If in our work for him we are circumscribed, or lonely, or placed in untoward surroundings, we still have the comfort of the covenant, for he has promised, if we obey his command to go do his work, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

The covenant of companionship it is. Thrice is he armed whose elbow touches friends. Strong is he who feels a loved one near. Doubly strong, then, he who feels God near. If one with God is a majority, then one within God is almighty. Abide in the strength of the covenant.

It is a covenant of comfort. Blessed is the man who possesses it. He shall be like a tree near waters. Unhappy is he who is false to it. He shall find no peace for his soul. Those hours of ours which are most painful are those in which we have failed to keep our covenant with him—our covenant of comfort.

BETHANY C. E. READING COURSES.

The Portraiture of Christ.

By J. Z. Tyler, Director.

During the current quarter of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses our first-year and second-year readers in the Bible course, cover substantially the same ground. While our first-year readers are making a rapid survey of the books of the New Testament, our second-year readers are devoting special attention to the teachings of Jesus. The gospel narratives are, therefore, the chief sources of information to both classes. It is my purpose to suggest the chief aim we should have in the story of these inspired records.

While it is the purpose of the entire Bible, from first to last, to make Christ known so as to bring human souls into loving and absolute loyalty to him, this purpose is most clearly realized in the gospel narratives. While they are biographical in character, they are not simply biographies. Not one of them can claim, not one of the writers aims to give a complete biography of Jesus. They are to be regarded more as character sketches, as pen portraits of Christ Jesus. They aim so to present him, by recording incidents in his life and selections from his teachings, as will lead the intelligent reader to apprehend him as the Son of God and the Savior of men. The last of the four, in definitely stating the purpose which had guided him in the production of his narrative states also, in a general way, the purpose which had guided the other three. "These things are written," said he, "that ye may believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing, ye may have life in his name."

Reading these narratives with due regard to the intention they follow, we will look all the while for disclosures of the purpose and character and nature and method and the full meaning of Him who is the center and substance of all the narratives. While these narratives are various they are not contradictory. To borrow an analogy from the visible world about us, we may say that the first three give us divers aspects of one glorious landscape while the fourth pours over this landscape a flood of heavenly light which seems to transform its very character, though every feature of the landscape remains the same. They vary as we would reasonably expect four sketches of the same life, though each be absolutely truthful, produced by four different authors, though guided by the same general purpose. Inspiration does not destroy the natural characteristics of a writer. They differ as four portraits of the same person, produced from slightly different points of view, by four accurate artists. The four portraits give us a better all-round view than could well be given by one; just as Vankyke painted three separate portraits of Charles I. for the use of the sculptor who was to reproduce in marble the very man.

In seeking to produce in our own minds an exact conception of Christ, as he is presented in these narratives, it is of primary importance that our minds be free from preconceptions. This may not be entirely possible. During nearly two thousand years theology has been busy clothing him with the web and woof of its own weaving. On the other hand, poets and artists have made the people of our age familiar with the rather feeble, though tender and gracious character, lacking the power and dignity of the Christ of the Gospels. Ecclesiastical conceptions has given his teachings a sacerdotal and ritualistic cast which does not appear in the recorded teachings of Jesus. There we find a sweep of purpose, a depth of penetration, an ethical character suited to every-day relationships and uses largely lacking in the popular conceptions of Christ.

Bringing our unbiased minds to an earnest consideration of the portraiture of Christ made by the four evangelists, we behold a character of singular sincerity, simplicity and humility. It is also marked by a strange unselfishness and general dignity. He appears to rise above the prejudices of his own people, the bigotry of his own times, by the power of a passionate philanthropy. His conduct is marked by an unusual tenderness. He manifests affection and generosity towards those who are alien and hostile to him. The impression made on us by him is that of perfect repose; yet it was a repose consistent with a rich, deep, inexhaustible enthusiasm. He was not a recluse; his piety was not that of the seraph or the saint. He lived in sympathetic touch with nature and men. He frequented weddings and feasts to such an extent that shallow sanctimoniousness ventured to call him "a gluttonous man and a winebibber, a friend of publicans and sinners" (Luke 7:34). He was a person of action, energetic, intense. In this he seems to have surpassed, in the estimation of the people, even John the Baptist who was the very embodiment of force and vigor (Matthew 14:2). He was a person of intense feeling, yet his feeling never degenerated into sentimentality. He was a virile teacher, speaking in a gracious yet commanding way. Such, in suggestive outline, is the portraiture of the Person.

When we consider his teaching and work we find that he was guided by a definite and most wonderful aim. He spoke of his work as having been "given" by his Father (John 5:36; 17:4), and he wrought at this work as if each hour had its own definite duty and the whole task was to be developed in harmony with the clearly apprehended plan. His was a regal purpose: he came to be king over men in a divine kingdom. He undertakes to establish upon earth the kingdom of God. His plans are immense and revolutionary. His project covers ages of time. He uniformly spoke as one who had a vision of all the ages and as if the centuries before his coming were but a preparation for that event and the centuries following would mark the increase of his kingdom to the very end of time. His method is marked by astounding originality and audacity. Without the slightest touch of a popular demagogue he began with the humble poor. He set for himself and unfailingly reached a perfect standard and placed the same before others for their personal attainment. While most gracious to sinners he made no compromise with known sin. He brushed aside the shallow and ritualistic casuistry of the religious teachers of his time and called men to an ethical and robust righteousness. While he was graciously charitable, he was never laxly liberal. He was always accessible, the poor and the sinful drawing near to him unhindered and with confidence. Only deceit and hypocrisy quailed before his searching gaze. While his undertaking was so vast and the seeming success of his personal ministry so meagre, yet he never seemed anxious as to the ultimate outcome of his undertaking. It is manifest, not only in the tone of his utterance, but in the whole tenor of his life, that his vision was the vision of hope. Through the injustice, the mockery, the insult, the utter insincerity of his trial he bore himself with a forbearance of love, with a calmness and majesty that touches every thoughtful beholder with a strange awe. His utterances from the cross, praying forgiveness for those who nailed him thereto, opening paradise to a penitent by his side, marking the close of his mission of suffering by the cry, "It is finished" and commending his spirit into the hands of his Father, he impresses us as we behold him much as he impressed the centurion who conducted the execution, who exclaimed (Matt. 27:54), "Truly this was the Son of God."

Our aim in the study, not only of the Gospel narrative, but of the entire Bible should be to gain a clearer, truer, fuller vision of Jesus. Not the Book, but this Person is presented as the object of our adoring faith and ceaseless service.

ALLEN.

Spencer Allen, a brother of J. H. Allen, of St. Louis, Mo., and of John M. Allen, congressman from Mississippi, died at the old home place, near Baldwyn, Miss., Monday, the 17th inst. Mr. Allen lost a leg in the Confederate army, since which misfortune he had been a great sufferer, and which ultimately caused his death. He was about 62 years of age at the time of his demise. He had been a member of the church at Baldwyn for several years. In his severe suffering he possessed his soul in patience. He seldom murmured or complained. We laid him to rest in the hope that he has entered "the upper day" where they have no night, "for the Lord God giveth them light." Funeral services conducted by the writer. JAMES H. BROOKS.

Corinth, Miss., April 20, 1899.

ASHBAUGH.

Mrs. Harriet F. Ashbaugh died on April 10, 1899, of pneumonia at St. Joseph's hospital, Keokuk, Ia. Her husband, son and daughter-in-law and grandchild were present when she died, also Rev. James Connoran and wife, of Keokuk. She was conscious up to the last two hours of her life and fully realized that she had to leave her loved ones. She calmly called each one and embraced them and said "Good-bye, it is all right, meet me in heaven." She asked them to sing, "Jesus lover of my soul let me thy bosom fly," her request was granted. She prayed earnestly and then requested Rev. Jas. Connoran to pray, then closed her eyes upon all and the scenes of this life to awaken in the glorious likeness of Jesus Christ her Savior where parting and death never enter. Sister Ashbaugh's maiden name was Sitton. She was the daughter of Maj. J. W. Sitton. She was born and raised in Lincoln County, Mo.; she was born Feb. 4, 1845, was married to Henry H. Ashbaugh Feb. 26, 1868, one child came to bless this union and remain with husband and father to mourn her loss. She confessed her faith in Christ at Oak Ridge schoolhouse, under the preaching of Bro. W. B. Galahare, November, 1876. She had been quite an invalid for nearly two years previous to undergoing an operation, after which complications set in and ended as mentioned above. She lived a most devoted Christian life, never murmuring of her sad affliction, but was patient under all circumstances, having a strong faith in her Savior resting sweetly in his arms she passed into rest. Her remains were interred in the Elsberry Cemetery.

LOWTHER.

Anna, the youngest child of Samuel and Jane Lowther, was born Nov. 20, 1889, died April 7, 1899. Her funeral services were conducted by their pastor, A. W. Gehres, at the Cedarville schoolhouse, April 8, and her remains were laid to rest by her brother's side.

Hopedale, Ind., April 21, 1899.

MEANS.

Little Mittie Merle Means, was born Oct. 24, 1892, departed this life April 1, 1899. Pneumonia following measles was the cause of her death. On the 5th of April W. H. Means, Jr., followed his little sister. He was born Feb. 14, 1894. After they had given him up for dead he rallied and called his mother and told her he was going home to Jesus and be with Merle and the angels. He said he saw angels and his sister coming for him. With his little beckoning hands outstretched he lifted his almost lifeless form up off his pillow and in a moment was gone. Christian faith enables the bereaved parents to bear their heavy burden. MORGAN MORGANS.

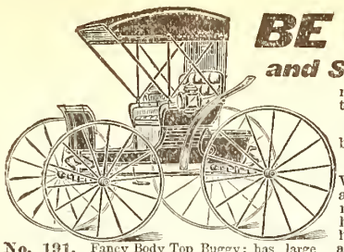
NIXON.

Mrs. Mary Wolfe Nixon died at her home near Lomax, Ill., March 19, 1899. She was born Feb. 20, 1856, married David Nixon, Jan. 12, 1880 and united with the Christian Church Dec. 26, 1896. A husband and one son are left to mourn her departure. She has placed aside the burdens and cares of life to enter into the promised rest of the children of God. Her "waiting time is over, battles fought and victories won." She can hear the Savior's welcome good and faithful one well done. The pastor, Albert Schwartz, conducted the funeral services. MRS. C. E. LOWRY.

WILLIAMS.

Died at her home near Salem Church, April 6, 1899, Mamie Williams, little daughter of Bro. and Sister M. F. and S. J. Williams. Little Mamie was five years, one month and nine days old. The funeral sermon was preached by the writer in the Salem Church. Ere sin had soiled her pure spirit it took its flight to be with him who said "Suffer little children to come unto me."



F. E. BLANCHARD.

WILLIAMS.

Elder Isaiah Boynton Williams departed this life at his home in Edinburg, Ill., April 16, 1899, aged 88 years, 10 months and two days. Bro. Williams was born in Hamilton County, Ohio. In early life he removed to Sangamon County, Ill. He was married to Phœbe Baker April 1, 1833. There were born unto them 11 children seven of whom are living and four children with his estimable wife had passed on before. He became a member of the Christian Church in early life and remained steadfast unto the end. "He rests from his labors and his works do follow him." Funeral sermon was preached by the writer.

Publishers' Notes.

Peter Ainslie, editor of the Christian Tribune, Baltimore, Md., in his paper of April 27th gives the following notice of "Men of Yesterday," whose author is Thos. W. Grafton, and which is just from the press of the Christian Publishing Company: "'Men of Yesterday,' is the attractive title of a new book of 291 pages, just from the press of the Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, Mo., by Thos. W. Grafton. It embraces a series of six character sketches of Walter Scott, Barton W. Stone, John Smith, Isaac Errett, B. W. Johnson and O. A. Burgess, with a good picture of each. It is written in that pleasing style that made the 'Life of Alexander Campbell,' by the same author so greatly admired."

The Disciples have put out many excellent books in recent years, and our own publications ought to have a larger place in our own libraries. The books are coming from our various publishing houses and they ought to be in the homes of our people. "Men of Yesterday" would be an especially good book to put into the hands of young people. The narratives are full of interest and these are men with whom the generation now growing up should have some acquaintance. The book is beautifully bound and the price is $1, postage paid.

"Aunt Maria's Saturday Talk Series" will please the children and instruct them at the same time concerning many historical characters. These series embrace six volumes, the titles being, "Little Presidents," "Little Kings," "Little Queens," "Little Orators," "Little Generals," "Little Statesmen." The children love stories that are true. In these volumes the writer, Laura Gerold Craig, has gathered true stories concerning the many persons mentioned in these six books. Each volume is appropriately illustrated, and is handsomely bound, making an attractive book to the eyes of the young. The price is 50 cents per volume, postpaid; or $2.50 for the full set.

The "Gospel Call" music books are adapted for use in church service, prayer-meetings, Sunday-schools, Christian Endeavor work and revival meetings. "Gospel Call" contains many of the standard hymns and the balance are inspiring spiritual songs selected from the best writers of sacred music of the past and present. The book complete makes a collection of about four hundred songs. It is published in parts one and two, either of which is a splendid music book. Write for prices, styles of binding and different editions. See "Gospel Call" song books before finally making your selection.

Good Alike to Renewals or New Subscriptions.

Expanding? Of course we are; we are "annexing" new subscribers every day.

Last week was "Congress week" among our brethren. The gathering was truly an "expansion" assembly. Never was the spirit of fairness and forbearance with one another so universally displayed.

We are expanding — growing — and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST notices the fact with unfeigned satisfaction.

The motto of this journal: "In faith, unity; in opinion and methods, liberty; in all things, charity," is commending itself more and more to the brotherhood.

On one point there seemed to be a unanimity of opinion, and that was that it was a good thing, if not an absolutely essential thing, to be a regular reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. The brother who entertained a negative view on this question was not to be found. We know, because we were looking for him.

"The Wonders of the Sky," that beautiful little book by W. J. Russell, can be obtained free by paying your own subscription to this paper up to 1900 and sending $1.50 additional to pay the subscription of one new subscriber.

St. Louis furnished the Congress with comfortable entertainment, a hearty welcome, fine weather and free copies of the latest CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. What more was there to be desired?

"Just think of ten officers in the church and only two taking any of our church papers," writes a good, faithful brother; but when we tried to consider the matter calmly, "it was too painful for" us. That church ought to hold a prayer-meeting for the benefit of its board of officers, and that without unnecessary delay.

Truly, we are disciples or pupils of Christ. We are studying his life and his principles. We will never, perhaps, graduate in this world, which is at best only the "grammar school" or "high school." We ought to continue to grow in knowledge and in grace.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is carrying on a school of correspondence along this line, learning itself and teaching others as best it can. You and your neighbor should take a course in this school. Tuition $1.50 per year. Pupils may begin at any time; now is preferred.

JUST BEFORE THE OFFERING.

We submit the statement of receipts to the American Christian Missionary Society for the month of April.

Our record shows a gain for the missionary year to date of $18,308.43 over the corresponding period of last year.

The signs of promise for the May offering are the brightest; we have over $4,000 in the special jubilee pledge; we have more than 800 churches pledged to take the offering that did not take it last year.

The preparations for the offering have been the most careful ever made; our papers have been most liberal in giving space to the advocacy of this great work; the orders for supplies have gone far ahead of anything ever known before in the office.

We ask our brethren to advise us early of any good news we may give to the brotherhood of their offering. We shall be glad to receive telegrams, if not sent C. O. D., that others may rejoice in your victories in this great cause.

We now plead that every lover of God's cause shall unite in earnest prayer to the Head of the church that the hearts of his people may be inclined toward the largest offering ever known for the advancement of the cause of Home Missions.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST

"In faith, Unity; in opinion and methods, Liberty; in all things, Charity."

Vol. xxxvi. St. Louis, Mo., Thursday, May 11, 1899. No. 19

CURRENT EVENTS.

The peace negotiations, which appeared for a time to be at an end on account of Gen. Otis' refusal to grant an armistice, have been resumed. The second set of emissaries repeated, with but slight change, the former request, that an armistice be granted until the Filipino Congress could be consulted in regard to the terms of peace. The meeting of the Congress has been indefinitely postponed by the American occupation of San Fernando, where it was to have convened May 1, and their latest proposal is for a truce of three months, to enable Aguinaldo to get his Congress together and get it to take action. It is unfortunate for the dictator's claims for the organization of the insurgent government, that at the hour of need it is impossible for him to put his finger on his Congress. These proposals of armistice are of course directed solely to the military commander, Gen. Otis, and he very properly refuses to consider any terms but unconditional surrender. The hopeful aspect of the case lies in the conferences which have been held between the Filipino emissaries and the President's Philippine Commission. President Schurman, a member of the commission, has been especially active in the attempt to make surrender as easy as possible for the Filipinos, to secure for them the "peace with dignity" which they now desire, and while not entering into any treaty relations with them or recognizing the existence of their government, to assure them that in case of submission, the new government for the islands would not be formed without consultation with them. Gen. Arguelles and Lieut. Bernal, representing Aguinaldo, recognize the superior force of the United States and the futility of further resistance. It is the part of wisdom now to make their recognition of American sovereignty as easy as possible, so that the exercise of that sovereignty be not abridged. The commission will recommend to the President a form of government outlined by them, in which the natives will from the first be given a part in the administration of local and provincial affairs. The assurance that this recommendation will be made is going far toward reconciling the Filipino leaders to the idea of surrender. They can discern a distant prospect of lucrative office under the government and with the true instinct of the civilized politician they are reaching out with avidity for that "white man's burden."

But while these unofficial negotiations between President Schurman and Aguinaldo's emissaries are proceeding with gratifying promise of a peaceful issue, the war still goes on. Of necessity it must, for Mr. Schurman and his colleagues have no authority to make a treaty of peace, and the Filipinos have not yet acknowledged the sovereignty of the United States, though they have admitted her superior power. The insurgents are still in rebellion against the only organized government in the island. Mr. Schurman is persuasively exhibiting the beneficent effects which will follow the recognition American sovereignty, and Generals MacArthur and Lawton are vigorously demonstrating the woes which will attend the persistent rejection of it. During the past week the advance to the north was continued from Calumpit to San Fernando, nine miles north. The latter village became the capital of the insurgent government upon the capture of Malolos. At present the insurgent government has no need for a capital. The assembly of its Congress is now several days overdue and it has not been able to get enough members together to take the oath and move an adjournment. The advance from Calumpit to San Fernando was made, like that from Malolos to Calumpit, in two columns. Gen. MacArthur proceeded straight north to the attack, while Gens. Lawton and Wheaton detoured to the east to flank the enemy and, if possible, to get behind them and cut them off from retreating into the mountainous regions still further north. Gen. MacArthur's division met severe resistance in crossing the river three miles from San Fernando, but there was no fight at the village itself, the natives retiring from the town as the Americans entered. The second part of the maneuver was not an entire success, for the insurgents escaped in a northwesterly direction from San Fernando. At the taking of San Tomas, a town five miles northeast of Calumpit, Brig. Gen. Funston, who was promoted last week for gallant conduct at the taking of Calumpit, again distinguished himself.

The Anti-Imperialist League of Boston has gone a step too far in its attempt to carry on its propaganda among the soldiers who are now wearing our uniforms in the Philippines, endeavoring to persuade them to withdraw from the service of the United States. The League has been circulating its literature for some time in this country without interference, but when information came that a consignment of its pamphlets was being sent to the Philippines there was a hasty Cabinet conference and an order was sent to stop the pamphlets at the San Francisco post office. It is charged that the sending of this literature to the seat of war is virtually an act of sedition and inciting to mutiny, and that the government has a perfectly clear case if it cares to prosecute the guilty parties. It is not believed that there will be any prosecution, nor will the circulation of the pamphlets in this country be interfered with, but all such mail matter intended for the Philippines will be stopped at San Francisco. Edward Atkinson, vice-president of the Anti-Imperialist League, is held to be chiefly responsible for these pamphlets, the titles of which are: "Criminal Aggression—by Whom?" "The Cost of a National Crime" and "The Hell of War and its Penalties." Mr. Atkinson expresses no anxiety, but declares that he is pleased to have the imperialist administration show its hand by this autocratic act. He takes his stand upon the freedom of speech which is inseparable from our republican institutions. But when the defense is made on this ground, there is another fact that must be taken into consideration. When a man writes a pamphlet here and sends it to the Philippines, that means freedom of speech, not only here, but there. But the Philippines are under martial law and under martial law many of the liberties which the individual ordinarily enjoys must be abridged. So long as Mr. Atkinson is permitted to say what he pleases to any audience he can get and to print what he pleases and send it all over the country, he can scarcely complain that there is not freedom of speech in the United States. To protest against the exclusion of his pamphlets which the administration considers dangerous, from the seat of war, is to protest against the commonest provisions of martial law.

Anti-expansionist sentiment in Chicago found a tumultuous outlet last week in the mass meeting which was held in Central Music Hall. The principal speakers were Dr. Henry Wade Rogers, Bishop Spalding, Prof. J. Lawrence Laughlin, Jenkin Lloyd Jones and Miss Jane Addams, of Hull House. These names are a guarantee of a strong presentation of that side of the case, and those who already agree with them were not disappointed. Yet it is doubtful whether one convert was made to the ranks of the anti-expansionists. Converts are not made in that way. In view of the effect of the speeches on the audience—i. e., on that large part of it which was already of that same persuasion—it can scarcely be claimed that they contributed to a more thorough knowledge of the facts of the Philippine situation or a more reasonable view of the matter. Whether or not the speakers intend to make their appeal to passion, it was evident from the demonstrations which accompanied the speeches that it was the passion and not the reason which was moved. This is equally true of the demonstrations of disapproval which came from the minority. Clearer vision of the issues and principles involved is not furthered by mass meetings of this sort on either side. No one but a fanatic would claim that this meeting represented anything but the purest patriotism on the part of the speakers and auditors, but for the most part its atmosphere, like that of any very large and enthusiastic political meeting, was not such as to encourage intelligent patriotism. This is our judgment of the meeting, quite apart from the merits of the question of expansion. The most significant remark made at the meeting was Dr. Rogers' suggestion that the United States should discharge its duty toward the Philippines "by declaring to the nations that it assumes a protectorate of the Philippine Islands against foreign aggression, and by calling upon the natives to establish their own internal government." This differs from most of the anti-expansionist speeches in that it recognizes America's responsibility in the islands and proposes a definite plan of action. Opinions may differ as to whether or not the adoption of this plan of action would bring immediate peace, but there is no doubt but that the pacification of the Philippines will be facilitated by giving them some definite assurance of a large measure of self-government. This is just what Mr. Schurman, at the head of the President's Philippine Commission, is now doing and we are hoping for peace as the outcome.

Current history is sometimes presented as accurately by the cartoonist's pencil as by the editor's pen, and almost always more vividly. In a recent number of Puck, the artist illustrates the saying, "Politics makes strange bedfellows," by a picture showing a German-American and an Irish-American startled from their side-by-side repose in the "anti-Anglo-American-alliance" bed, by a fearsome nightmare in the form of a British lion rampant, dancing on the foot of the bed. There is a great deal of significance in the picture. It is a fact that most of the opposition to the Anglo-American alliance, and incidentally to any expansion of our radius of activity which seems to point to closer co-operation with England, springs less from the traditional American habit of twisting the lion's tail than from the misguided energy of some so-called Americans of foreign birth. We believe that most of our citizens of German and Irish birth or extraction are genuinely and patriotically American. But there are others who have brought with them enough of their foreign sympathies to make them an easy prey for those politicians who play upon the antipathies which they have inherited from their fatherland. In view of the relations of mutual suspicion between England and Germany, and the ancient grudge which Ireland bears to Great Britain, the German-American and the Irish-American are ready to oppose any project which seems to advance British interests along with our own. So long as the German or the Irish motive prevails with such a citizen, he is not really an American at all. The terms German-American and Irish-American should have no significance in other than an ethnological sense. When used with a political significance, they are a contradiction in terms.

The final report of the court of inquiry which has been investigating the "beef scandal" has been received by the President. The report is a complete vindication of the subsistence department. Gen. Miles' charges are not sustained, and he is censured for making such allegations without facts to sustain them, but it is recommended that no further action be taken by way of punishment. The longsuffering public joins with one heart and one voice in the hope that the whole thing will now be considered as closed. It is to be hoped, too, that Gen. Miles will gracefully accept the verdict and will not demand an opportunity to vindicate himself before a court-martial. No vindication is necessary. His reputation is good and has not been injured by this tedious episode. Even if the court has decided that his charges were untrue, the inquiry developed enough evidence on his side to relieve him of any suspicion of willful and malicious falsification. This side of the case is still further emphasized by the President's determination to form ration boards in the several divisions of the army to have oversight of questions of dietetics. Instructions have been sent to the generals in command in the Philippines, Porto Rico and Cuba, to form boards consisting of three officers, one each from the line, medical and subsistence departments, to consider and report in regard to any desired change in the army ration, with special reference to the conditions imposed by service in the tropics.

A trust representing a capital of $1,000,000,000 is something which, undreamed of ten years ago, is now about to become a reality. Plans are far advanced for the consolidation of all the existing steel and iron trusts into one stupendous organization capitalized at one billion dollars. It is futile for anybody to try to realize the immensity of this capital. For most of us a billion means only indefinite magnitude. But at least we can realize that this trust with a thousand million back of it means the greatest aggregation of capital ever attempted by any private enterprise. This is partly the result of the successful invasion of Europe by American manufacturers, and it will probably have a further effect in that direction. Lord Revelstroke, one of the directors of the Bank of England, speaks of the trust-forming impulse as one of the points which gives America her advantage in her competition with European manufacturers in European markets. English capitalists must learn the art or lose the race, he says. Perhaps so, but we cannot yet give up our faith in the somewhat hackneyed statement that these combinations are a great menace. That they embody the spirit of the age, in so far as they represent the tendency to consolidate and co-operate, we cannot deny; and we cannot expect that the world of commerce and manufacture will ever revert to the atomic condition in which each workman, journeyman or master-mechanic worked independently with his own capital. The trust represents the spirit of consolidation as applied to capital; the trades-union represents the same spirit as applied to labor. Perhaps what is needed is not a war against either (for a war against the spirit of the age is always futile), but a fuller and farther application of the principle in a higher synthesis which will include both labor and capital.

Speaking of trusts and combines, sometimes one can point to a definite result which one of them has accomplished for the good of the race, or a part of it. For example, it is announced that a syndicate of New York and Philadelphia capitalists has bought out Mr. Yerkes' street railway lines in Chicago, and that that gentleman is to shake from his feet the dust of the city which has for years been his prey. In spite of the most strenuous efforts on his part, during the past two or three years, Mr. Yerkes has not been able to get his franchises extended on the present favorable terms. He now gives up in disgust. The new syndicate which has bought him out proposes to make sweeping changes and railroad improvements in the system, including the abolition of the trolley and the equipment of all street cars with a new automobile storage system.

The agreement reached between Great Britain and Russia in regard to their relations in China may be regarded as putting an end to Salisbury's attempt to realize the "open door" policy. The details of the agreement have not yet been made public, but in general Russia agrees not to interfere with England in the valley of the Yangtse Kiang, and England agrees not to interfere with Russia in Manchuria. Russia is thus left without a check in Northern China; annexation would not be much better from the Russian point of view. England has other rivals in the Yangtse Valley, but all fear of trouble from Russia is now removed. Germany must come in with her claim promptly or be left behind. Lord Salisbury is credited with a great diplomatic victory in avoiding trouble with Russia and guaranteeing peace in the East, but the agreement is a death-blow to the open-door policy which he has been ardently advocating, and a complete acceptance of the sphere-of-influence policy which Russia has favored. Salisbury himself draws attention away from this point by remarking that the fact that an agreement has been reached is more important than its particular provisions. Immediate friction between Russia and Great Britain is prevented, but the way is opened, more clearly than ever before, for the partition of China.

A Cabinet crisis has occurred in Italy as the outcome of a division of opinion in regard to the policy pursued by the movement in China. The sending of warships to San Mun and the attempt by Italy to establish a sphere of influence there has been severely criticized, and it became evident that the government would be supported in this policy by a very narrow majority if at all. Hence the resignation of the Cabinet to avoid an adverse vote. Gen. Pelloux, the former premier, has been instructed, much against his own will, to undertake the formation of another Cabinet. In the interim, the old ministry remains in power, and it is suspected that it may take advantage of the delay to embarrass its successors by ordering the immediate occupation of San Mun.

Sensational stories continue to reach this country concerning the declining health of Admiral Dewey. It is gratifying to learn, however, from Dr. E. Page, Assistant Surgeon, U. S. N., and Surgeon on the flagship Olympia for the past year and a half, that the Admiral is in "perfect health." He, no doubt, feels the effect of the enervating climate of the Philippines, and a change would doubtless do him good. The fact that Commodore Watson has been appointed to take command of the Asiatic squadron to relieve Admiral Dewey, when the latter feels that he can be spared, indicates that it is his purpose to return home as soon as the situation there permits it.

OUR NATIONAL POLICY IN THE PHILIPPINES.

We print elsewhere, under the title of "One Dark Spot," a criticism of the course of this paper in relation to the war with Spain and the issues which have grown out of that war. While we thank our correspondent for his candid and courteous criticism, we must say that he does not seem to understand our attitude toward this subject nor the attitude of the government. This grows out of the fact that he fails, we think, to occupy the proper point of view. We submit a few considerations in defense and explanation of our position.

In the first place, we cannot consider the Philippine question apart from its relation to our recent war with Spain. It is a part and, as we believe, a necessary part of that policy which the government entered upon when it notified Spain that this nation could not permit an indefinite prolongation of the war in Cuba with its attendant consequences, both to the people of Cuba and to our own country. The result of that declaration was war with Spain, which resulted in not only driving the Spanish out of the Western Hemisphere, but in bringing the Philippine Archipelago under our control. This latter result came about without any previous intention on the part of this government. It was an unforeseen result of the war.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST believed at the time and still believes that the nation was justified in taking the firm stand that it did after long and patient waiting in reference to Spain's treatment of Cuba. Nations can no more isolate themselves from the care of weaker and dependent nations and peoples, and disclaim any responsibility for their welfare, than individuals can isolate themselves from their neighbors who are in distress, and claim that they are not their "brother's keeper." By every consideration of national honor, of devotion to the principles of our government, of unselfish regard for the welfare of the starving and oppressed Cubans, we were bound to take the position we did. We do not doubt that the verdict of history will justify that policy and mark it as the beginning of a brighter era for Spain and her once dependent colonies, and for the United States as well.

It may be said, of course, that having driven Spain out of the West Indies we were under no obligations to demand the cession of the Philippine Islands. This was the problem that the Peace Commission had to deal with at Paris. Perhaps the majority of the members of that Commission at the beginning were not in favor of making this demand, but there were considerations of the gravest import which seemed to leave no other course open for the government. So weighty were these considerations that so conservative a man as Senator Gray, who went to Paris opposed to the policy of demanding the cession of the Philippines, was compelled to change his mind, along with others who thought with him on the subject, until the Commission was of one judgment as to the necessity that was forced upon them.

About the time, or a little before the ratification of this treaty, which included the cession of the Philippines, the Filipinos, acting under false ideas and following the advice of unwise men, attacked the United States forces at Manila. What could the government do under these circumstances but seek to quell this insurrection and restore peace? It had made itself responsible to the civilized world for maintaining order and enforcing justice among the people of these islands, since it had taken the right to do this away from Spain. If critics of the government would put themselves in the place of the administration and ask themselves what they would be compelled to do if they were in authority, they would often look at these questions in a different light. In our judgment, the government has been doing the only thing that it could possibly do, with honor and self-respect under the circumstances, namely, it has instructed the commander of our forces in the Philippines to enforce the authority of the United States, and has sent a Commission of able men to explain to the Filipinos the purpose of the government to promote the welfare of the people of these islands and not to exploit them in any way for our own gain; that we are there to help them to establish such a measure of home rule as the interests of the people require, and as they are capable of exercising.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has not condemned this policy, because we do not see anything else for the government to do. If we believed, as our correspondent does, that this nation was waging a "most cruel and selfish" war against the Filipinos, we should condemn it unsparingly. On the contrary, we understand that the war is being conducted on as humane principles as is possible, and from wholly unselfish motives. If we believed that the ultimate aim of this government was to hold these islands for its own gain without respect to the rights of these people to self-government and without granting them participation in the administration of their government, we should not hesitate to express our strong opposition to such policy. We do not believe that this is the purpose either of the administration or of the people of the United States.

For these reasons we do not find ourselves at all in sympathy with the radical utterances of a portion of the secular and religious press, and some of our college professors and politicians. Until it becomes apparent that our operations in the Philippines are not for the best interests of the people of these islands, but are prompted by selfish motives, we can but feel that such utterances are unjust to the government and calculated to work injury among the people whom we are trying to help forward to a better civilization and a better government. At the earliest possible moment, that is, as soon as these misguided people shall lay down their arms, they should be instructed and guided in the formation of such a government as will insure domestic tranquility and their peaceful progress along all the lines of civilization.

When peace shall have been restored, and when these people, under the tutelage of this government, shall have learned the art of governing themselves and shall be sharing with us the priceless boon of both civil and religious liberty, in the light of these better days, we can better understand and interpret the events which now seem so grievous to us all. Until then let us seek to be patient and just to those who are burdened with these great responsibilities. It is for Congress, not the President, to say what sort of government will best promote the peace and progress of the people of these islands until such time as they are able to care for themselves. That the interest of the Filipinos will receive the first consideration we do not for a moment doubt.

While we regret to have incurred the displeasure of so good a friend as our correspondent and others like him, we must, on this subject as on all others, be true to what we believe to be the best interests of our country and the kingdom of God. It is hardly necessary to add, we hope that our judgment is in no way influenced by partisan considerations, and our statements are not to be so judged.

SOME REAL DANGERS TO RELIGION.

It is a great point in military or in spiritual warfare to know where the enemy is located or the source from which danger is to be expected. The physician who makes a mistake in diagnosis is sure to make a mistake in his treatment of disease. There are good people who manifest the deepest concern lest the earnest investigations now being carried on in reference to the questions of the date, authorship and composition of the different books of the Bible may inflict a dangerous if not incurable wound on the cause of religion. They regard the chief danger to religion to-day to be the tendency to subject the Bible to the same critical investigation to which other ancient literature is being subjected.

Now, that there is some danger attending the process of passing everything through the crucible of investigation no one will deny. Biblical criticism is an art in which all do not succeed. Comparatively few have the necessary scholarship for original investigation. Others, who have the requisite scholarship, lack that even balance of judgment, reverence for truth and the spiritual insight necessary for such work. Some men are naturally extremists, and they carry their critical views to an extreme from which they have to recede. Others are mere apologists for existing theories, and engage in the work of criticism with their conclusions already formed and unalterably fixed. In this conflict between extremes the traditional faith of some—the only faith they have—will be overthrown, and all of these may not succeed in reaching a more rational basis of faith.

But to think of this process as being the most serious menace to religion is to miss the mark widely. The process itself is absolutely essential to all healthful progress in religious knowledge. Given sufficient learning and a sincere love of truth, and especially the truth concerning the Bible and religion, and the literary and historical criticism of the sacred Scriptures is inevitable. This is what is going on, and to be alarmed about it is the idlest of fears, while to make war against it is a most unfruitful, not to say injurious, expenditure of energy. Not only is this investigation inevitable, but the results of it, as all history has shown, are most beneficial to religion.

The real danger to religion is to be looked for in a different direction. Dogmatism, which denounces as moral treason every effort to attain to larger and clearer views of truth, and every assertion of the liberty to think and speak freely on these great problems, is a far greater foe to religion than the spirit of investigation. The state of mind which is content with the knowledge it has of the Bible and of the great subjects it treats, and which assumes an attitude of inhospitality toward the results of all investigations, is far more dangerous to religion than even the untempered criticism which reaches extreme conclusions. Religion suffers much more from stagnation than from storm; far more from indifference to Bible questions than from wrong conclusions concerning them through an earnest investigation. Many of us have magnified unduly the dangers attending the scholarly investigation now going on concerning the Bible, while we have overlooked much greater dangers to religion growing out of indifference to Bible knowledge and hostility to biblical investigation. This is the same sort of error in the doctrinal realm that we have been guilty of in the department of practical administration, when we have been more willing to see churches die for want of proper care than to adopt some simple expedient for caring for them not specifically authorized.

We suggest, therefore, that the time has come to turn our attention to the real dangers to the cause of religion. Some of these are (1) the presentation of views and theories concerning the Bible which have been outgrown, and which constitute insuperable obstacles to faith in the minds of many; (2) the theory more or less widespread among men of the world that the church is afraid of its theology, afraid to have the Bible investigated, afraid to have religion subjected to the crucial investigation to which every other human interest must submit; (3) the spirit of intolerance that still survives in the church long after the martyr fires have been extinguished and the guillotine has ceased to do its bloody work; (4) the traditional nature of the faith of many who, without any personal investigation, have accepted such ideas of the Bible and of religion as have been handed down to them; (5) the perfunctory character of a great deal of our religion, which fails to fashion the character and mold the life of men, and to influence their conduct in the various relations of life; (6) the lack of brotherly love and unity among those who claim to be followers of Christ, and their devotion to creeds and to party politics more than to the Master Himself, so that instead of presenting a united front against the liquor traffic, municipal corruption, the social evil, industrial strifes, their divisions prevent them from exerting any effective resistance against these gigantic evils.

Here are some real dangers. It would be difficult to overestimate their magnitude. Would it not be well to turn our attention in the direction of removing these dangers? Isn't it high time the Church of God should close up its divided ranks and present a united front against these perils which are threatening our homes, our institutions and the cause of religion itself, even though, in so doing, some of our theological subtleties be neglected or even forgotten? This, it seems to us, is the imperative duty of the hour.

Every noble life leaves the fiber of it interwoven forever in the work of the world.

Hour of Prayer.

WHAT IS ESSENTIAL TO A TRUE PRAYER?

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, May 17th.)

(Matt. 26:36-44; Luke 18:9-14.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The prayer that prevails with God must be made in the spirit of submission to the divine will and in humility.

Very different is the picture in which Jesus is presented in the first of the above passages from that in which He was set forth in our last week's study. There He was in the peace and quietude of the home, holding converse with those He loved and those who loved Him. Here He is in the deep shadows of Gethsemane, wrestling with unseen foes and burdened with inexpressible agony. Such is the contrast in our human experiences—joy to-day and sorrow on the morrow. But whether in joy or in sorrow, the great matter is to be right with God and to be in communion with Him.

This scene in the Garden touches our hearts as scarcely anything else does in the Bible. Here we see the "Man of sorrows," who was "acquainted with grief." He is bending, agonizing under the weight of the world's guilt and woe. Taking his three trusted disciples into the Garden, He left them a little way and fell on His face, not willing that even His nearest disciples should witness the unutterable sorrow that was breaking His heart. But listening in the stillness of the night, they heard Him saying: "O, my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass away from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." Thrice was this prayer repeated, the Master returning each time to speak a word to His waiting disciples who were unable to enter with Him into the deep and dark experiences of that hour.

The "cup," of course, refers to the impending death and suffering which, if it were possible, He prayed might pass away. It was an awful cup of humiliation, of shame, of agony and suffering. And yet He added: "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt." If in the Father's plans and purposes it was necessary that He should pass through this dread ordeal, then He would meekly bow to the will of the Father. O for submission like that!

This is true prayer. This is the spirit of submission which is essential to all real prayer. Moreover, it is an element of prayer which we sometimes forget in our eager desire to have our own way. When the petition we make is for some cherished desire, how hard it is to say, "Nevertheless, not as I will, but as Thou wilt!" If the life of a loved one is hanging in the balance, it is hard for the almost breaking heart to make its request on the condition that it is in harmony with the will of God. But whether it be hard or easy, it is essential to true prayer. Nor would it be so hard for us to add this conditional clause to our prayers, if we but realized that God not only knows better than we what is best, but that He loves those for whom we pray better than we love them.

The familiar parable of the Pharisee and the publican who went up to the temple to pray, enforces the necessity of humility as another element of true prayer. The Pharisee congratulated himself on his piety and devotion, being full of spiritual pride. The publican was deeply conscious of his unworthiness, and petitioned for mercy. The condition of heart that recognizes one's own unworthiness and need of divine mercy is an essential condition of obtaining God's favor. A true knowledge of ourselves is all that is necessary to make us feel our unworthiness, for who that compares himself with the divine ideal given us in Christ can fail to recognize how far short he falls of that ideal?

It is a good time, in this midweek prayer-meeting, while the subject is under consideration, for us to resolve not only to pray more, but to pray better. Let us cultivate the spirit of submissiveness to the divine will and seek continually to be and to do whatever that will requires of us. The earnest effort to do this will be certain to result in a proper humility that will make us recognize our own deficiencies and save us from spiritual pride.

PRAYER.

O, Thou Lord and Master, who didst teach Thy disciples to pray, Thou hast also taught us how to pray by Thine own example. But we have been slow to learn the great lesson of submission to the divine will. Help us, we beseech Thee, O Lord, to make all our requests in the spirit of that thrice repeated petition of Thine in Gethsemane: "Not my will, but Thine be done!" Enable us, we pray Thee, to avoid all spiritual pride and to be filled with the spirit of humility, so that our prayers may be acceptable to our Heavenly Father. Make prayer more real, more vital, more joyous to us, so that under its transfiguring influence we may be at last brought into Thy likeness and be with Thee forever. For Thy name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

The Easy Chair, though crowded out last week, is still in the mood, superinduced by the late Congress, of meditating on the significance of that event. It is now about ten years since the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST had a leading editorial on the importance of a Congress among us to discuss a class of questions that could not properly come before our missionary gatherings. There were a few here and there that responded to the sentiment, but evidently the feeling was prevalent at the time that there was no great good to come from meeting and comparing views on questions about which there would be differences of opinion. Perhaps the time had not fully come for such a meeting. From time to time the suggestion has been renewed by various brethren, but the idea never crystallized into definite form until last year at Macatawa Park. The Congress may be said to mark the growth of two ideas among us: One is the value of many of those subjects which we had been accustomed to regard as speculative and impracticable, and the other is, that there should be the fullest liberty for differences of judgment concerning these questions. After all, as we have come to see, there is a great deal of practical value in clear thinking and in correct theories concerning the living questions of our time. Coincident with this discovery, or with the better realization of this fact, there has come the conviction that we can make no progress in the direction of clear thinking and correct theories on these questions without the fullest freedom of thought and discussion. The Congress marks the recognition and acceptance of these two ideas more fully than they have ever been recognized or accepted before among us.

Speaking of the liberty we have in Christ Jesus, and the right of every man to express his deepest conviction of truth, the point has frequently been made, and was made during the Congress, that men who exercise this right fully in expressing their own opinions, when criticised by others in the same spirit of freedom, sometimes complain of the lack of freedom of discussion and liberty of thought. There is probably something in this, but it should be said, in fairness, we think, that it is not the criticism of those who hold new views that is complained of, but the spirit in which it is often done. A group of ministers was standing in front of the church during a recess of the Congress, talking over this point, when a venerable brother said: "As for my part, I enjoy being criticised, and I do not care how many brethren reply to any article I may write for our papers." Another replied: "That depends. I could reply to one of your articles in a way that would make you justly indignant. I could insinuate that you were seeking, clandestinely, to introduce a revolution in religious thought that would overthrow faith in the Bible, discredit our own religious movement, and play havoc generally with all that believers hold sacred. I could single out certain words and phrases, and hold them up to ridicule, and point out the unsuspected heresy that lurks beneath them, and raise a warning cry to the brethren to beware of these veiled attempts to overthrow the faith once for all delivered to the saints." "Of course," responded the elderly brother, "if you were to do that, I would feel that you were trying to restrict my freedom of thought and discussion." It is that sort of thing, of which we now and then see a manifestation, that reminds us of what this spirit did in the olden times, when it had free course.

It is clear that the liberty which is to serve the cause of progress in religious thinking must not be a one-sided liberty. It must mean, not only the liberty to advance new ideas and new theories, on the part of those who honestly hold them, but the liberty, also, of those who do not accept them to attempt to show wherein they are untenable and why they should not be accepted; but in neither case does Christian liberty carry with it the right to excite prejudice by the use of epithets, or the violation, in any respect, of the rules of courtesy or the law of kindness. It was illustrated at different times during the late Congress how the presentation of a subject from different points of view gave us a fuller and completer view of the subject than we would have had with a single view. The unfailing courtesy with which these different views were presented put every one in a frame of mind for giving them the most favorable consideration. Therein lies one of the advantages of a Congress for the discussion of these questions over newspaper discussions. When brethren come together, face to face, and give their reasons for the faith that is in them, they are more likely to treat each other, and each other's views, with proper consideration than when they use the medium of a newspaper, even a religious paper. This ought not to be the case, perhaps, but experience shows it to to be true.

It is a good thing, however, to remember —and it was remembered in the late Congress—that there is something better than even liberty or freedom of thought, and that is brotherly love. This does not mean that the former should be sacrificed on the altar of the latter, but only that it is to be exercised under the influence of the latter. Truth, it is often said, is the chief thing to be sought. This is, no doubt, true, but it must not be forgotton that a part of that truth, and a very important part, is that each man must serve his brother, and seek to build him up. It is the remembrance of this fact that begets and keeps alive the spirit of courtesy and brotherly kindness in all our discussions. The highest wisdom is needed, both in our method of presenting new truth, and in our method of antagonizing what we believe to be error, and this wisdom will be found to be in perfect harmony with the recognition of the bond of love and the obligations which grow out of it. Knowledge puffs up, but love edifies. Now abideth liberty, knowledge and love; and the greatest of these is love.

Questions and Answers.

If it be true that remission of sins is the result of obedience to the gospel as taught by Christ's apostles, namely, faith, repentance, confession and baptism, which is observed by the Church of Christ to-day, is it consistent for members of said church to assist in persuading persons to go to the altar of prayer in meetings of the denominations to pray and be prayed for to obtain forgiveness of sins? What should be the duties of elders of said Church of Christ, and what action should they take?

J. T. R. Ladd.

We do not like the form of expression that "remission of sins is the result of obedience to the gospel," etc. That smacks a little of a mechanical conception of the gospel which is not in harmony with the New Testament. The remission of sins is the result of God's amazing grace manifested to us in Jesus Christ, and is offered freely to every one who seeks it through faith and obedience. We should say, however, that it would not be consistent for those who hold this view of the gospel to persuade persons to go forward in revival meetings, as they are usually conducted "to pray and be prayed for to obtain forgiveness of sins." It is altogether right to pray, and it is entirely proper to ask the prayers of others, but the method of modern revivalism is not in harmony with the New Testament examples or teaching. The believing penitent is there taught to go forward in obedience, "calling upon the name of the Lord," instead of tarrying in disobedience, waiting for some miraculous manifestation or ecstacy of feeling. No action of the elders is needed in such cases except their kindly efforts to teach these members the way of the Lord more perfectly.

A member of the Roman Catholic Church in this city asserts that the Campbell and Purcell Debate, issued by the Christian Publishing Co., is incorrect; that there are two editions in existence, one of which shows that Campbell went out on the eleventh night of the debate and never returned, thus giving Purcell the best of the fight. Will you kindly advise me if this is correct, and can you give me the name of any living person who attended the debate?

C. H. Naylor.

Palestine, Tex.

This, we take it, is a piece of pure fiction. We do not know of but one edition of the work referred to, unless the Catholics have issued a garbled edition. Mr. Campbell was not the kind of man to run away from a theological contest. He fought it out to a finish with Mr. Purcell, and to the entire satisfaction of everybody except the Catholics. If any of our readers attended that debate, we should be glad to hear from them on the point raised by our querist.

In your issue of the 6th inst., I see that Bro. Tyler has raised the point as to the time of the beginning of the Christian era, and places it at the resurrection and not the birth of Jesus and says, "John the Harbinger and Jesus the Messiah both lived and died under the Jewish theocracy." Did the theocracy then close, or did it continue till the downfall of Jerusalem? W. H. T.

The Christian era, by common consent, began with the birth of Christ, but the Christian Church as a living organism, indwelt by the Spirit, with its meetings, its ordinances and its worship, began on the Pentecost following the resurrection. The Jewish worship did, indeed, continue at Jerusalem until the downfall of that city and the destruction of the temple, but the new dispensation had begun earlier, and the old order of things only continued because of the inability of the religious leaders of the time to understand the significance of Christ's mission to the world and the true character of the kingdom which he came to establish.

In John 14:12 Jesus said to his disciples: "He that believeth on me the works that I do shall he do also; and greater works shall he do, because I go unto the Father." Does this apply exclusively to the apostles or Christians in general? E. W. Knapp.

Irvington, Ind.

We think the language applies to all believers who avail themselves of the spiritual gifts and graces made possible by Christ's return to the Father. The "greater works" referred to cannot be miracles, because the apostles wrought no greater miracles than Christ wrought. They must refer to the spiritual results which would follow the administration of the gospel in the power of the Spirit. The awakening of a soul that has been dead in trespasses and in sins to new life, under the preaching of the gospel, is a greater achievement in the sight of God than the raising of a dead body, or any other physical miracle. Christ's ministry was preparatory to these "greater works" that should follow after his death, resurrection and ascension to the Father.

Would it be right for a sister to conduct the communion service if there was no brother present who would agree to do so?

Sadie Gray.

Duncan, Ariz.

Certainly, it would be altogether right. The universal priesthood of Christians and the absence of any other sort of priesthood in Christianity, makes this conclusion inevitable. In Christ Jesus there is neither male or female.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

SECOND DECADE.

EDUCATION IN THE DECADE BEGINNING WITH 1850.

B. B. TYLER.

Education and evangelization go hand in hand. With the organization of the American Christian Missionary Society a new era in the history of the Disciples began. Every part of the body was revitalized. The purpose of the Society was the systematic evangelization of men in our own and in other lands; but the cause of education received an impetus that is felt to this day.

The prime movers in the nineteenth century effort in behalf of Christian unity and union, by a return to the Christianity of the Christ as it is described in the New Testament, were educated men. They were Presbyterian clergymen—trained as such men usually were and are. Their desire for a visible union of God's people was in order that men might be led to faith in the Christ; hence their evangelistic and evangelical zeal. They would naturally connect with this zeal an abiding interest in education—in college education—as a means of preparing men for the gospel ministry.

Bacon College was established in Georgetown, Ky., in 1838. Bethany College was founded in 1841—the charter was granted by the Virginia Legislature in 1840—at the village of Bethany, Brooke County, Va. Alexander Campbell, its founder and first president, said: "Bethany College is the only college known to us in the civilized world, founded upon the Bible. It is not a theological school, founded upon human theology, nor a school of divinity, founded upon the Bible; but a literary and scientific institution, founded upon the Bible as the basis of all true science and true learning. . . . .We are indeed the only denomination, or people, that could introduce the Bible into a college and daily teach it, inasmuch as we care for nothing that is not recognized by every party in Christendom." As to the relation of Bethany to Bacon College, Mr. Campbell said: "Well knowing that Bacon College could not answer the purposes I designed, I obtained a liberal charter for Bethany College, and founded it at once upon the Bible, as the only foundation of real learning, human philosophy, and moral science."

In November, 1849, delegates from thirty-one churches in Ohio met and agreed to establish an institution of learning, such as might meet, in the character and scope of its instructions, especially its moral and religious instructions, the wants of the brotherhood in that part of the world. This was the beginning of the Western Reserve Eclectic Institute, now Hiram College, located at the village of Hiram, in Portage County, Ohio. The Western Reserve Eclectic Institute was a school of academic grade. A. S. Hayden was the first president; James A. Garfield was the second. The institution became a college in 1867. Its founders thought that the Bible ought to hold a prominent place in the educational system, that it was the only proper foundation for moral and ethical culture, and consequently that it ought to enter into the education of our young people—substantially the views which controlled Alexander Campbell in the founding of Bethany College.

Definite action was taken by the Disciples of Christ in Indiana, in their state meeting October, 1849, to found, in Indianapolis, the Northwestern Christian University, now Butler College, the college of literature and arts of the University of Indianapolis. The charter of the Northwestern Christian University was granted by the legislature of Indiana January 15, 1850. The first session of the institution began in November, 1855. The inspiration of the founders was a belief, on conviction, that the prosperity of New Testament Christianity, in our age and country, is intimately connected with the cause of education. The two were believed to go hand in hand. The Bible was, almost as a matter of course, adopted as a text-book, and so continues to this day. The charter of this institution required that both sexes should be taught in the same classes and graduated with the same honors.

Bacon College, after a varied history, in 1858 became Kentucky University—located first in Harrodsburg, and later in Lexington, its present abiding-place.

The Kentucky Christian Education Society deserves to be mentioned in this connection as indicating the growth of interest in education among the Disciples of Christ.

This society was organized in 1856. Such men as William Morton, John T. Johnson and Philip S. Fall were leading spirits in its organization. It furnishes only such financial assistance as is necessary to enable a student to obtain a college education at the cheapest rate of living. This noble society has assisted in the education of five hundred young men, at a total expenditure of $100,000. Until recently the money was a gift; now it is a loan without interest. Many of our most efficient preachers, college professors and writers were assisted in obtaining an education by the Kentucky Christian Education Society.

The Kentucky Female Orphan School was founded at Midway, Woodford County, Ky., in 1849. It was at first a home rather than a school. Fifteen girls were admitted when its doors were first opened. John T. Johnson, L. L. Pinkerton and J. W. Parish were the principal men in the inauguration of this good work. The expense of the buildings and furnishing the same was borne, principally, by the Disciples residing in Woodford County. The women were foremost in this enterprise, aiding it with brain, heart, tongue, hand and purse. Into the Kentucky Female Orphan School a good moral character and the ability to receive an education are the essential conditions of admission. The aim is to make of the orphan girls self-supporting women. Only orphans are admitted; and these must be so situated that without the assistance of this school they would probably not receive an educatlon. The graduates are so wisely and thoroughly trained as to be in special demand in the state as teachers. The property is valued at $50,000. There is an endowment, well invested, of $150,000. The expense per annum is $15,000. The patronage is so large that additional buildings are needed in order to properly accomodate the pupils.

The legislature of Illinois, in 1855, granted a charter to Eureka College, to be located at Walnut Grove, in Woodford County, Ill. The town of Eureka grew up about the college. This institution was the outgrowth of the Walnut Grove Academy, founded and conducted by Prof. A. S. Fisher. The spirit out of which Eureka College grew is shown in the language used by J. T. Jones, president of the board of trustees of Walnut Grove Academy: "We propose to educate gratis all indigent young men who will pledge themselves to preach the gospel. And we hope to be able, at some future period, to train up, free of charge, indigent orphans. One of our cardinal points will ever be to induce more of our young brethren to embark in the proclamation of the ancient gospel, and to render it possible for them to be qualified with the necessary education.

Abingdon College, in Illinois, was founded in 1855. It was preceded by Abingdon Academy. P. H. Murphy was the first president of this college. In the course of time Abingdon College was incorporated with Eureka College.

Christian College, an institution for young women, located at Columbia, Mo., was founded in 1852. John Augustus Williams was the first president of this still flourishing institution. The same year the legislature of Arkansas granted a charter to Arkansas College. Robert Graham, "a graduate of Bethany College," was "for some years before this the principal of an academy in that state, and it was through his energy, talents and learning," to use the words of Alexander Campbell, "that this institution has been incorporated as a college, and himself created president." About the same time the Disciples in Missouri established Christian University at Canton. To this decade also belongs the founding and failure of Berea College, at Jacksonville, Ill., through the heretical teaching of Walter S. Russell, its president. Oskaloosa College received its charter from the Iowa Legislature in 1857. This institution came as a result of organized effort on the part of the Disciples of Christ in the state of Iowa. They resolved in their state meeting in 1855 to establish an educational institution of college grade.

Persons who can contribute facts concerning education among the Disciples in the decade to which these papers belong are requested to address B. B. Tyler, Colorado Springs, Colorado.

As we tie a tender tree to some other tree that it may not be broken by the winds, and cast anchor in a storm to fix the ship that it may not be driven by the tempest; so ought we to join and apply our weak and faint hearts to the firm pillar of God's word, and fix the ship of our souls by the anchor of hope, that it drift not.—John Arndt.

MEMBERSHIP OF CHRISTIANS IN SECRET SOCIETIES.*—II.

RELIGIOUS BENEFITS.

It is said that Masonry presents a broader ground for brotherhood. I suggest, the truth is, that Masonry nor any other secret society has ever been established on a universal brotherhood. The conditions of membership are such as to comprehend only such as are of a certain age, and excludes all who are not able to pay their dues. The fact that these societies exclude the young, the old, the halt, the lame, the blind and the outcast, eternally settles their claim for universal brotherhood. I again suggest that man's brotherhood depends on God's Fatherhood, and when the Christian gets this great law fixed in his mind, to control action, all else will naturally fall into line.

If I am a child of God, the man or woman with all their wants are my brother and sister as much as the one born of my earthly parents. "Jesus says he is my brother." "For inasmuch as you have done it unto the least of these my brethren, you have done it unto me."

I here and now affirm that the Fatherhood of God has entered into the organization of all the churches of Christ; for upon this conception of Christ's relation to God, and our relation to God through him, was the church founded. God's Fatherhood and Christ's Sonship—this is the natural order. Now if what we call churches had been organized on this law, no such thing as a lodge would have been possible.

The very idea of organizing an exclusive, selfish, narrow-minded, little-hearted clique and calling it a fraternity would have met only what ridicule it deserved.

Just think of sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty getting together and drawing up a constitution and bylaws under which no black man can be admitted because of the color of his skin. No invalid or sick man can be admitted because he is not well. No poor man because he cannot pay his dues. No one less than 21 nor over 50 years because the former would need counsel and the latter help.

We are a brotherhood of white-skinned, healthy men, able to take care of ourselves, and pay our quarterly dues and monthly assessments. We want our families taken care of after death. Yet we are in no way responsible for the support of the families of the poor and sick. We are not such fools as to take upon ourselves these unnecessary obligations. Who, I ask, can call that thing a brotherhood, much less a universal brotherhood?

In the name of the church I protest against it. I would not object to the terms association, or co-operation, or mutual insurance society. But to call it a universal brotherhood is a misnomer.

Now if the Church of Christ were to grasp the real teaching of Jesus regarding God's Fatherhood, and organize in harmony with it, it would not be ten years until no such society could exist, and no man who now stands associated with such order would be found to say one wsrd in their favor. They are all parts of our selfish system, which force each man into an unholy struggle for existence.

When we believe in Christ and shall be willing to trust our Heavenly Father for support, we will then seek the kingdom of God for ourselves and others. Then shall we realize what is best for us and for all men. Man's brotherhood depends on God's Fatherhood, and can be established on no other law. Get this idea into human life, and with it you can settle all the labor, financial, political and religious questions of our time and day.

If this be true, it only remains for us to compare the Church of Christ with all other institutions, for man's good and God's glory.

The affirmation of all Scripture is that Jesus founded the church (Matt. 16:15-19). To Peter he delegated the right to make the law for receiving citizens into his kingdom. From this law there is no appeal. On the mount of transfiguration Moses, the author and founder of the Jewish economy, confirmed the statement of the Spirit: hear ye him. When the fullness of time was come, "God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons."

Societies are of human origin. The one honored more for its age than for any good it ever did the world, can not date back farther than the 17th century. It has been overlaid with fiction and absurdity, partly from an exaggerated estimate of its importance in architecture, and partly from a wish to connect mediæval Masonry with an institution that passes under the same name in the present day.

Jesus the executor of the Father's will said, "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on him may have everlasting life, and I will raise him up at the last day." This is a divine proposition with promises worth every effort in life to secure. All societies are based on a human proposition with no promise that reaches beyond the landmark of time.

The church acknowledges the authority and wisdom of God in giving an expressed or implied law which covers the individual and collective condition of all men: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be, perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. 3:16, 17). This law demands every energy of an active life; hence Paul said, "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God" (Rom. 12:1, 2). Societies tacitly reproach God, and his law of love in the mission of Jesus for man's present good and future hope. The church unites our time, talents and money. Societies waste our time, divide our talents and spend our money for a selfish purpose.

The church breaks up the selfish crust of our nature, and in the language of the Spirit says do good unto all men (Gal. 6:10). Societies say do good unto some men. The one cultivates our generosity; the other our selfishness. We are born into the one and initiated into the other (1 Pet. 1:22, 23). The members of the body of Christ are known by their badge of love. "A new commandment I give unto you, that you love one another as I have loved you. By this shall all men know that you are my disciples, if you have love one for another."

Members of societies are known by the grip, sign or ribbon.

The church cultivates the mind, purifies the heart and saves the soul.

Societies claim no such honors, but formulate from the Bible all of any value in them. If any one or all these contrasts be true, what is the preacher's duty? Has he any right to become a member of such associations? Have they any time, money or influence for which they are not responsible to God, and which he does not require them to use in and through the church—the only divinely authorized institution of benevolence for the good of men here and his highest hopes hereafter? Is the obligation of secrecy enjoined by those socicties consistent with the spirit of candor, frankness and mutual confidence, which is but the natural and legitimate effect of the gospel on good and honest hearts, which should characterize all the members of the one body? Does the preacher compromise principle and sell the truth in courting the favor of these institutions, in order to have them play tail to his kite and give dignity to his audience? There is nothing invidious in these remarks. My interest in this matter is the only apology I have to offer for asking questions that may elicit truth. Men have been and may be sacrificed for telling us the truth. He who tells us the truth to save us is a greater benefactor to mankind than he who flatters our vanity and perishes with us.

Our long-felt need, as Disciples of Christ, is less fidelity to organic bodies of men based upon a human proposition, and more fidelity to the Church of Christ, based upon a divine proposition, for all benevolent work. This and this alone will enable the church to supplant all other institutions for the good of men here.

Why is it that the gospel has not long since triumphed everywhere? It is not because of any unwillingness on the part of God or of Christ to give an expressed or implied law to cover the individual or collective condition of all men. It is not owing to any defficiency in the gospel scheme of salvation which God has so wisely and perfectly adapted to the wants, capacities and circumstances of all men; but it is simply owing to the fact that we (the church) have failed to do our duty. It is because so many of the professed followers of Christ have turned aside in the vain delusion that their benevolent works are more effectual through human societies than through the church. In this we tacitly reproach God and his wisdom when we do not make the church the medium of all our active benevolence. Make her our alms society; yes, our temperance and missionary society. Let her constitution be our only policy of insurance; let her social meetings be no longer forsaken for the honors of the lodge or any other secular institution.

If the Pharisees by their traditions freed children from their obligations to parents, and merited the stern rebuke of Jesus, are not societies culpable when they say to the church, It is corban? "By whatsoever thou mightest be profited by us, we shall be free."

*Delivered by J. H. Lemmon at the Preachers' Institute, Normal, Ill., April 15, 1898.

Have we any time, money or influence for which we are not responsible to God, and is not the church the only authorized channel through which all benevolent work may be done?

If the "church of the living God is the pillar and ground of truth," then the apostle's admonition to do good unto all men is limited to our opportunity. This is the true rule about doing good. It is not that we are to do it when it is convenient, or when it will enhance the interests of our party, or when it may contribute to our fame. The rule is that we do it when we have the opportunity. No matter how many objects of benevolence are presented; the more the better; we need more self-denial. If we can reach and benefit a man who lives in other lands, whom we have never seen in this world or in the world to come, still we are to do him good. "Such is Christianity." And in this and in all other respects it differs from the narrow and selfish spirit of clanship which prevails all over the world.

It does not relax the ties which binds us to our country, our family and our friends. It makes them more close and tender, and excites us more faithfully to discharge the duties which grow out of these relations. But in addition to that it excites us to do good to all men.

Our needs are many; we must remove all embarrassments which are intended to drive us from the field, and with the vigor of our youth and the wisdom and influence of our riper years; with our remaining powers when enfeebled by age; with the last pulsation of life here must we be committed to the everlasting service of doing good, as far as we may have opportunity in the kingdom of God.

Brethren, let us arise and build. Let us concentrate our forces, let us unite our energies, and press an aggressive warfare in the name of Jesus, until from city to city, from one end of the rivers to the other, the message of salvation shall be wafted upon every breeze, and the redeemed world offered as one common revenue to the glory of God through our Lord Jesus Christ.

SOME TRACES OF HALF-FORGOTTEN SERMONS.

The Reign of Grace.

GEORGE PLATTENBURG.

It is to be remembered that these papers are written under the general title of "Some Traces of Half-forgotten Sermons," and are supposably based upon a scriptural text. The ground of this paper is Rom. 5:20, 21, which is given in the parallelistic arrangement of Forbes—

"The law came in besides,
That the offence might multiply.
But where sin multiplied
Grace did exceedingly abound;
That as sin reigned
In death,
Even so might grace reign thro' righteousness
Unto eternal life
By Jesus Christ our Lord."

Countless volumes, leaving countless readers "in wondering mazes lost," have been written upon this profound passage and its context. The centuries have been cumbered with the debris of endless theological wranglings, and as inscrutable as endless. The world has been darkened by nebulous metaphysical quiddities to the verge of despair. For this lumber, now "phosphorescent with decay," we need care nothing. The undisputed facts of the passage are sufficient for us. Look at these tremendous words in their asserted order of sequence: sin, death, grace, righteousness, life. Augustinianism and Pelageanism, with their divergent and many-colored phases, do not concern us; but that sin is, with its bitter reign, with its universality, with its self-propagating power and its awful retributive consequences, is to us matter of infinite import. The passage shows a sharply defined purpose, historically unfolding itself through the ages of Old Testament life. First, the reign of sin. It reigned in death as its sphere of action. When completed it brings forth death (Jas. 1:15). Then the law was added (Rom. 5:20) that sin might multiply by its revelation in the consciousness as sin. For without the law sin was dead (Rom. 7:8), but it sprang into life by the commandment. As we know the measure of the obliquity of our movements by comparison with a right line, so by law comes the knowledge of sin (Rom. 8:20). Before the law sin was latent, unrecognized, and law entered that "sin might appear sin" (Rom. 7:13), and so be "multiplied." Was the law sin? No, it discovered sin (Rom. 7:7); it awakened the conscience, created a consciousness of sin as guilt, aroused the desire of deliverance, and so brought about a preliminary step for the introduction of the reign of grace. This was true, for law's specific function was to convict, and could not therefore acquit. This created a necessity of a new way of acquittal.

I. The Reign of Grace.

Much metaphysical hair-splitting and theological absurdity have been perpetrated on Paul's statement that "by grace are ye saved." The use of divinely supplied means (2 Pet. 1:3) of salvation have not only been discredited, but even pronounced sinful and rebellious. I have before me a book, widely known in its day (1840), in which I find that "to tell a sinner that he must use the means of grace" is a false comfort." To urge him to "any act conducive to his salvation" is to "comfort him in his rebellion," "to keep him from Christ" and "to do what God abhors." Such teachers speak of "the grace of faith," "the grace of repentance," as if they were substantial entities, which God in some inexplicable way dropped into a man's brain to make him willing to be saved by the motions of some "special and prevenient grace."

The real effect is to lull a man into the hopeless coils of a fatalistic apathy. Our author asks: "What is the sinner's use of means but rebellion against God? What has the sinner to do with using means?" and much more of the same sort. How much of this baleful rubbish now obtains I cannot say.

There was a point in the historical unfolding of the divine purpose in which "the grace of God that bringeth salvation appeared to all men" (Tit. 2:11). At the time of this "appearing" "both Jews and Gentiles were under sin" (Rom. 3:9); "the were none righteous, no, not one" (Rom. 3:10); "there is none that doeth good, no, not one" (Rom. 3:12); all had "sinned and become guilty before God" Rom. 3:19, 23). The introduction, then, of a remedial system was not conditioned upon any good seen in men. And as the fuction of law was to convict and not acquit, a new method became necessary.

Paul, in view of the sinful condition of all men as described by himself in speaking of the appearance of grace, could but say: "Not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he hath saved us" (Tit. 3:5). The appearing, then, was conditioned upon no merit seen in men, "for there were none righteous, no, not one." Tnere is no occasion to deny that the introduction of a redemptive scheme rested wholly upon grace, mercy and the philanthropy of God. This does imply, however, that the reception of the benefits of this gracious appearing is not conditioned upon the voluntary snrrender of our faculties to God (Rom. 6;13) in the use of means, for while we have "sin unto death," we have also "obedience unto righteousness,"and"righteousness unto holiness," the end of which is "eternal life" (Rom. 6:16, 19, 22). This we shall now see.

II. The media through which grace reigns.

There is here what Lange designates as "the material and personal" media.

1. The material medium—through righteousness. That salvation is the gift of God by grace through faith (Eph. 2:8) is not disputed. But that there is any disagreement between this fact and that other fact, that man obtains it by the use of means, is denied. That grace reigns by or through (dia) righteousness is simply asserted in our passage. Through (dia) "is connected with the idea of means;" it "signifies the instrument as something through wnich the effect is produced;" "something which lies between the volition and the effect" (Winer). "Through righteousness," then, is a means to an end; and that end, in the Scripture at the head of this paper, is "eternal life." Is this in harmony with the general trend of the New Testament? At a point to which the song and prophecy of the Old Testament moved, and to describe which the splendor and opulence of Oriental imagery was all but exhausted, the calling and conversion of the Gentiles, Peter announced this great and fundamental law of the divine government: "Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons. But in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him" (Acts 10:33 35). We now turn to John, that man whose conception of Christianity is possibly profound beyond that of all others. We ask this question: "Who is born of God?" "Every one that doeth righteousness is born of him" (1 Jno. 2: 29). I have no faculty for hair-splitting and care nothing as to the priority of the members of this statement. Who is righteous? "He that doeth righteousness is righteous" (1 Jno. 3:7). In the same chapter, verse 10, we have what Neander calls a "special mark" of "a generic distinction:" In this the children of God are manifest and the children of the devil; "whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God." It ought to suffice that John here differentiates these two essentially opposite classes by doing and not doing righteousness. This may be called by some a superficial view of religion, as outward and legalistic; still, it is John's conception, stated clearly, and what does the objector propose to do? There is no real union with Christ that does not reveal itself in what the apostle here styles "doing righteousness." The attempt to divorce "inward fellowship of nature" from doing righteousness as its outward manifestation, is to divorce what heaven and reason have joined together. The fact that doing righteousness is vitalized by our being in Christ does not change Paul's assertion that the reign of grace is realized through righteousness leading to eternal life.

2. The personal medium — "through Jesus our Lord." "Through (dia) shows the primary or first cause, author" (1 Cor. 1:9; Rom. 1:15)—Winer. This needs no discussion. One passages suffices: "No one cometh to the Father but by me" (Jno. 14:6). He is the way.

III. The goal is eternal life.

This does not simply mean endless existence. It stands for incorruptibility, for light, "efflux divine" and ever-during beauty, for the imperishable fruitage of hope realized, for the abolition of death and night and sorrow, for an inheritance "which fraud cannot filch nor waste destroy," for a joy unspeakable and full of glory, an age out of which shall be taken every unclean thing, and which shall be crowned with "infinite perfection."

THE FUTURE OF POETRY.

W. J. RUSSELL.

There is a magic charm and subtle power in poetry. It belongs to a large and lovely division of the world's best literature. Whether we call it, with Aristotle, "imitation;" whether we say more worthily, with Bacon, that "it was ever thought to have some participation of divineness, because it doth raise and erect the mind by submitting the shows of things to the desires of the mind, whereas reason doth buckle and bow the mind unto the nature of things;" whether in more modern times we define it, with Shelly, as "the best and happiest thoughts of the best and happiest minds;" or say, with Matthew Arnold, that "poetry is simply the most beautiful, impressive and widely effective mode of saying things;" and again, that "it is to the poetical literature of an age that we must in general look for the most perfect and most adequate interpretation of that age;" whether we say with the greatest poet of the last generation, that "poetry is the breath and finer spirit of all knowledge, the impassioned expression which is in the countenance of all science;" or whether we say with Steadman, that "poetry is rhythmical, imaginative language, expressing the invention, taste, thought, passion and insight of the human soul;" whether it comes under one or all of these definitions, poetry, past, present and future, is that branch of the literature of power, which Coleridge defines as "the blossom and fragrancy of all human knowledge, human thoughts, human passions, emotions and language."

It would be difficult for us to overestimate the value of the poetry which has come to us as a legacy from the past. It is part of our history. The true poet has been a historian as well as a prophet and a guide to men. Homer, Dante, Vergil, Shakspeare, Milton, Goethe and Tennyson have impressed the world with their own personality in a way to stamp indelibly upon human thought their conception of its nature and its higher issues. Each represents the highest spirit of the society to which he belongs, what is best and most vital in it and with a wonderful completeness of interpretation. And this interpretation is twofold. For in the words of Matthew Arnold: "Poetry interprets by expressing with magical felicity the physiognomy and movement of the outward world, and it interprets by expressing with inspired conviction the ideas and laws of the inward world of man's moral and spiritual nature." This makes the poets the interpreters and historians of the great times to which they belong. To be conversant with them will be to maintain a living contact with the salient and significant points of human development to understand man at his best, and the progress of man in its ordered and fateful connection.

But this essay is not upon the past or present of poetry, although that would, indeed, be a fruitful theme for our consideration. We may, of course, glance at the present existing condition of poetry, but our distinct purpose is to speculate concerning the poetry of the near future. For some years the question has been asked, What of the future of poetry? This cry of foreboding soon arose after the death of Bryant, Longfellow and Emerson. When Tennyson, "the sweet historian of the heart," passed away, the same question was repeated and in the same pessimistic tone. A period of decline was predicted. And that there has been a pause in the progress of poetry will hardly be questioned. But the poetry of earth is never dead. Out of the periods of decline there comes the periods of efflorescence. Thus age succeeds to age, and still Poesy,

> "Blazoned as on heaven's immortal noon,
> . . leads generations on."

It is Matthew Arnold who says: "The future of poetry is immense." But how immense it will be, either in quality or quantity, it is not easy to prophesy. Poems, like men, must come of age before they can acquire a legal status. Almost all of our greatest poets began in a struggle against contempt or compassionate toleration. Byron, for social reasons, was almost the only one who had a fair hearing from the first. But Wordsworth, Keats, Tennyson, Browning—at the outset of their work they were looked upon by the public as unpractical, useless men, with a certain literary turn. Tennyson was called "Miss Alfred." Christopher North in Blackwood's Magazine referring to the poem entitled "The Owl" which is found in the volume under the title of "Poems Chiefly Lyrical," says: "Alfred himself is the greatest owl; all he wants is to be shot, stuffed and stuck in a glass case, to be made immortal in a museum." Tennyson was called by some of his critics a "new prodigy of genius, another and a brighter star of that galaxy or milky way of poetry of which the lamented Keats was the harbinger." If Tennyson had been a weakling, or if he had been dependent upon his pen for a livelihood, his career would probably have come to an end. But he was not a weakling and he did not have to earn his bread by his pen, so he persisted. He wrote and wrote and waited and waited, until ten years were past, during which time he won an honorable place among writers of song, and he was encouraged to write other poems which brought him a distinctive reputation. It makes one tremble to reflect how narrow an escape from distinction Tennyson and some of his predecessors underwent at the hands of the critics, and there is no telling how many Miltons have been kept mute by unwise repression of their noble rage.

But why should there be so much criticism against those who are beginning to write poetry? It is true that Tennyson, Bryant, Longfellow, Whittier, Holmes and Lowell have gone away from us and left the world lonely because of their absence. But why should the critics take their revenge for this spiritual orphange by abusing the fledglings and young birds of song as though they were to blame for the lack of these master-spirits named. Poets come about as do other choice products; there must be many in order to produce one; the whole choir of birds must be suffered to warble in order to secure the nightingale and the lark. And the careful reader of the current poetry of to-day will discover, if not great qualities, at least a fine sense of rhythm and much delicacy, subtlety, intensity and range. These are qualities to be encouraged, for they are prophetic of a larger and a diviner spirit which the future will hold. For if we do not look for a new star to suddenly arise, may we not expect that an existent one will burn brighter?

The new age of poetry may be, for all we know, on the threshold now. The poet of the near future may be sending his manuscript to the printers or he may be playing with his coral in the cradle. But meanwhile we have little to complain of and no cause at all for pessimism. There are several poets, fledglings, young birds of song, who have already begun to pipe melodiously, and we are enjoying their songs to-day. We believe they have something better and richer for the coming age. Take Mr. Rudyard Kipling, for instance, who stands for some of the highest qualities of the English race, for its virility, its readiness to accept responsibilities, its tremendous energy, its faith in itself. His poem, The True Romance, more than any other, gives the key to the interpretation of his work in general and displays its controlling aim. This poem begins:

> "Thy face is far from this our war,
> Our cell and counter-cry,
> I shall not find thee quick and kind,
> Nor know thee till I die;
> Enough for me in dreams to see
> And touch thy garments' hem;
> Thy feet have trod so near to God
> I may not follow them."

This poem gives assurance of better work to come than any which Mr. Kipling has yet achieved. For as with every man who holds to a high ideal, pursuing it steadily, each step is a step in advance, so is it with the poet. We are not sure that Mr. Kipling has yet written any message for future ages. But what he has written is prophetic of what he will be able to produce hereafter. In "The White Man's Burden" we find the quality which made the best literature of the age of Elizabeth so powerful and so contagious. Mr. Kipling is but a young man of 34. We should listen to him for more than a generation to come, and it would be impertinent to hint at the great things he should, by all laws of comparison, achieve.

The future of poetry is as certain as the future of anything else; but the poetry of the future—to that we cannot give a date or description. At any moment some poet may by a lucky stroke reveal an unsuspected pocket of golden ore, and the world will be richer for it.

Rushville, Ind.

Our Budget.

—Beautiful May!

—Who isn't glad to be living?

—That is, if you took the offering.

—If you didn't you are probably miserable, and you ought to be.

—The flowers are making their offering of beauty and fragrance, and so are the trees and the young grass. Will you allow nature to outstrip you?

—Echoes of the Congress are coming in, and they are all true to the key-note sounded during its sessions—liberty, loyalty, unity and fraternity.

—It is going to take the Jubilee Missionary Convention at Cincinnati, in October next, to overshadow the Congress. Everybody seems to be laying plans to go to that great convocation.

—But how would it sound for the committee on enrollment to report ten thousand delegates present, and the secretaries of the Home Missionary Society should report only $50,000 raised for Home Missions! Wouldn't that "throw a coldness over the meeting?"

—But that must not be, and will not be, if every church that has not yet made its offering will see to it that it does make it during the month of May, and if each member be called upon personally, for an individual offering to this work.

—We are glad to announce to our readers that during the coming summer we will publish a series of illustrated letters of travel from Prof. W. E. Garrison under the title of "Wheeling Through Europe." The degree of favor with which his former series of letters, entitled "Wheeling Through England," was received leads us to believe that our readers will anticipate with pleasure a similar series over a more extended route, including Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Italy as far as Florence, Western Austria and Germany. He will carry his kodak with him and send us such pictures as will present to our readers the most interesting views of places visited. These letters will occupy about three months, including July, August and September. We mention the matter thus early for the benefit of our agents and other readers who are interested in extending the circulation of the paper.

—The Christian Oracle of last week was the first issue under the new editorial management. According to announcement made a month ago, Arthur O. Garrison, the managing editor, retires, and J. J. Haley becomes editor, with George A. Campbell associate editor. These editorial changes follow some changes in stock ownership. In securing the editorial labors of two such men as Bros. Haley and Campbell, the Oracle has given assurance of its purpose to occupy a leading place among our religious journals. The paper had already, under its recent management, made a fine reputation as a bright, sparkling, wide-awake and up-to-date paper, and it is to be confidently expected that under its present management it will steadily rise to greater heights of excellence. Chicago is a fine center for such a paper, and there is no doubt but that these brethren, with the able corps of helpers they will call to their assistance, will produce the kind of religious journal that is needed. In his introductory article Bro. Haley assures his readers that if any of them expect the paper to go sky-rocketing off into the doubtful realms of Higher Criticism, they will be mistaken. It has a much more practical mission. The character of the paper can best be judged, he says, in the light of his twenty-five years of experience in editorial work, in Australia and in this country. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST gives the Christian Oracle the right hand of fellowship and bids it Godspeed in its mission.

—We regret exceedingly to learn of the death of Francis M. Bruner, of Des Moines, Iowa, though the event was not wholly unexpected, for our brother has been in poor health and a great sufferer for several years. The funeral services occurred at the Christian Church of University Place, Des Moines, on the 5th itst. D. R. Dungan, of this city, delivered the funeral address and directed the services. Bro. I. N. McCash, University Place Church, of Des Moines, has prepared a suitable notice of Bro. Bruner, which we shall publish next week. Bro. Bruner was born in Kentucky in 1833. He was a graduate of Knox College at Galesburg, and studied two years in Germany and France under the great teachers in those countries. He was a scholarly man, and devoted most of his life to college work. He was a preacher of fine ability and spoke with great power. He held a captaincy in our Civil War and contracted a disease while in the service of his country to which he has at last succumbed. Gur sincere sympathies are extended to his bereaved wife and family.

—The Northwestern Christian Advocate of May 3 contains a somewhat extended and very complimentary review of the "Mystery of the Golden Cloth," by J. S. Hughes. This is but the latest of a number of denominational papers to give Bro. Hughes' book their recommendation.

—The article which we publish in the Historical Series, this week, from B. B. Tyler, will be the last of his articles to appear in the paper. Others will appear in the volume which it is designed to make of this historical series. Other writers may be compelled to do the same thing, condensing their matter for the paper and elaborating for the volume. We continue the serial next week by giving the first of some very interesting articles by W. T. Moore, covering the war period. Our readers will find much to interest and instruct them in these articles, as in those which have preceded them.

—J. E. Lynn, pastor of the church at Springfield, Ill., reports that their missionary canvass is just about completed and that the pledges taken will aggregate at least $700. The one hundred and seventy-five young women in the church enjoyed a very unique reception recently, given under the direction of the pastor's wife.

—We should have made mention last week of the conclusion of the meeting held by H. A. Northcutt with Beulah Church, St. Louis. Eighteen were added to the congregation, and some misunderstandings, which had handicapped the congregation, were cleared up and settled. All feel grateful to Bro. Northcutt for his earnest and successful labors.

—A large section of the Christian Publishing Company, namely, W. W. Dowling, editor of the Sunday-school series, with two members of his family, F. M. Call, the business manager, Ed Calkins, foreman of the printing office, and Miss Greasley, an employee of the company, are recuperating at Eureka Springs, Ark. W. W. Hopkins, assistant editor, is demonstrating what he knows about gardening at his country home near Kirkwood. The rest of us are "midlin' well," thank you, and the business goes right along by the force of its momentum and what little push we can give it.

—It is hardly probable that any newspaper since the invention of printing ever succeeded in getting more mendacity, abuse, indecency, misrepresentation and "cussedness" on a single page than appears on the editorial page of the Church Progress (Roman) for May 6, 1899. And it was a fair average issue, too.

—The Rev. John Alexander Dowie, "General Overseer" of the "Christian Catholic Church," who made something of a stir in Chicago a few years ago, and who is still holding forth in that city, is about "played out." The Religious Telescope gives an account of one of his "sermons," which consisted of three hours' abuse and anathematizing of Dr. Gray, editor of the Interior, and one or two others who had criticized the "General Overseer." Many good people have been duped and deceived by Mr. Dowie. If we remember rightly, there is a standing offer of $5,000 to Mr. Dowie which he can secure if he will demonstrate in a single instance his ability to cure, by his method, curvature of the spine, consumption or cancer. Is God able, through Mr. Dowie, to cure some forms of disease and unable to cure others?

—D. R. Dungan, pastor of the Mt. Cabanne Church, this city, was a delegate to the International Sunday-school Convention at Atlanta, Ga., and will give our readers a report of it in our next issue.

—We learn from the Christian Guide of the death of Rev. J. S. Kendrick, pastor at Danville, Ky. He had been ill for several months. Bro. Kendrick was a man of lovable character and high ability, who will be greatly missed.

—You should have attended, last Sunday, to the offering for Home Missions, but if for any cause you neglected it, the next best thing will be to see to it next Sunday.

—A few weeks ago we were in a small city where we have no congregation, and so attended services at a "sectarian" church. The pastor announced—casually and not at all boastfully—that the congregation had contributed, during the past year, an average of $1.05 per member for Home Missions. The church is not a wealthy one, either. Did your congregation do that well, or half that well, last Sunday? If not, why not?

—It took the editorial representative of the Register-Review to detect a strong Unitarian tendency in the late St. Louis Congress. No one else, so far as heard from, discovered this streak of heresy. That shows the importance of having all kinds of theological olfactories represented in such a meeting.

—"Controversial theology is a back number except in the backwoods," said J. J. Haley in the Congress. But the backwoods theologians of all "persuasions" revel in it. It is their meat and their drink to overthrow the other man's theology and "prove" their own quite orthodox by apostolic blows and knocks.

—The church at Stockton, Cal., T. A. Boyer pastor, dedicated its new and beautiful house of worship on April 30. R. L. McHatton, W. H. Martin and other visiting preachers assisted the pastor in the exercises. From cuts of the building, published in the San Francisco papers, we judge that the house is one that is a credit to our Stockton brethren.

—"Shem: a Story of the Captivity," the new story by J. Breckenridge Ellis, is just published. It is a historical romance, woven around the life and work of the prophet Jeremiah. While not heavy, it is instructive, and will be a valuable addition to the historical series by this author.

—We give our readers an excellent picture this week of Jabez Hall, dean of Butler Bible College, Irvington, Ind. In the absence of data, for which we have written and which we have not received at this writing, Bro. Hall is to us like Melchizedec, "without beginning of days," but we judge him to be a man of sixty years, hale and well preserved. He has held lengthy pastorates at Cleveland, O., and Richmond, Va. He is a scholarly, studious man, a fine speaker, courtly and courteous in his bearing, an ideal Christian gentleman. Two years ago he was called to the head of the Butler Bible College, which position he now occupies. The institution has grown in strength and capacity for usefulness under his headship, and commands the confidence of the people of Indiana and the brotherhood in general. He is a man of too broad and symmetrical culture to permit any lop-sided theological development in an institution over which he presides.

—The climax of Capt. Coghlan's offense, it appears, was his recitation of "Hoch der Kaiser," with its reiterated rerain—"Meinself —unt Gott!" Wilhelm was mightily outraged at this, on the principle, we suppose, of "the greater the truth, the greater the libel."

—We do not wish to seem hypercritical, but we venture to suggest that if the editor of the Appeal to Reason, Girard, Kan., would project his astral self about twenty feet from his material self, and take a good look thereat, he would do a slightly different kind of editing. "Whatever is, is wrong," is a worse motto, even, than "whatever is, is right."

—Henry Ward Beecher used to tell a story of a dog that once chased a chipmunk into a crack in a stone wall, and for a year afterward, when he had nothing to do, he would sit down in front of that crack and bark at it. Strangely enough, we were reminded of this anecdote while reading some of our exchanges.

—Our Cumberland Presbyterian brethren hold a Sunday-school encampment each year at Pertle Springs, Mo., at which Prof. Willett has given a series of lectures. Referring to the next encampment the Observer, of this city, pays Bro. Willett the following compliment:

We shall all greatly miss Dr. Willett, whose profound learning, eloquence and manliness won all who heard him. He has spent the winter in Germany, and must be at his post in the University of Chicago at the time of the encampment. Although he is known as a Higher Critic, yet he is so conservative and so loyal to Christ that none can for a moment doubt his piety or his Christianity. During his two years at Pertle Springs all classes, high and low, were drawn to him for spiritual counsel and light.

Dr. Willett would hardly call himself a "Higher Critic" in any technical sense, though he is, of course, a student of what the Higher Critics have said, and accepts such of their conclusions as seem to him to be clearly proved. All who have Mr. Willett's lectures will agree with the Observer as to their scholarly, conservative and helpful character.

—We are all beginning now to see that our recent war with Spain was a gigantic blunder that might have been averted if reason instead of passion had prevailed in the councils of the nation.—The Observer.

The Observer, we know, has been consistently opposed to the war with Spain from the beginning. We are surprised, however, to see to what extent the editor has allowed his own feelings to influence his judgment. As a matter of fact there is and has been the most remarkable unanimity among the people of the United States touching the necessity and righteousness of our war with Spain, and time only confirms this almost universal conviction. Quite a number have doubted, and some have violently opposed, the efforts of the government to suppress the insurrection of the Tagals in the Island of Luzon, now happily nearing its end, but only a small handful of the American people, relatively, have dissented from the government's course in liberating Cuba. When the facts are all in, and the smoke has cleared away from the battlefields, devout students of history, we believe, will see that a Power greater than Congress or the President, has been shaping our national policy.

—Our church is anxious now to secure the services of a preacher who can and will hustle if necessary. Only such need apply. Address P. O. Box 223, Abingdon, Ill.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST just to hand reports so favorably the papers and discussions of the late Congress in St. Louis that many of us desire to know more of it. Let us all have some of the good by publishing its papers and discussions in pamphlet form.

H. RYAN.

By a vote of the Congress, the readers of the various papers were requested to turn over the same to the committee for such use as they might think best to make of them. The committee has not yet received all the papers, nor has it had any consultation as to the practicability of publishing them in a permanent form. This matter will be considered and acted upon soon. Meanwhile we should be glad to know something of the extent of the demand for their publication.

—The reports in this week's papers of the first Congress inspire me. "But what must it have been to be there?" Let me vote, with both hands, please, for Bro. Hodkinson's article to be put in tract form. That ought to be scattered far and near. An experience like that, so frankly and interestingly told, is worth much more than the best fiction.

C. A. FREER.

Columbus, O.

—Sunday morning at the Christian Church Rev. L. W. Morgan tendered his resignation, and asked that it take effect at the end of his year, June 11. For four years Mr. Morgan has ministered to the people of the Christian Church, and we believe no other person is done an injustice when we say that no other Atlanta minister has ever done better or more successful work. Young, energetic and active, not afraid of work, a good speaker and an earnest Christian man, the results of his labors are seen in the church, which was never in so strong and flourishing a condition. Mr. Morgan has planned to take a much-needed vacation, which he will spend in a European bicycle trip. The church and community will part with him with regret, but will wish him a pleasant journey and safe return.—Atlanta (Ill.) Argus.

—Mr. W. T. Stead, the English writer, says the following in his new book, "The United States of Europe:"

The Old World has rudely been made aware of the fact that the earth is getting smaller, that there is not enough to go around, and that America is going to have her share regardless of consequences. The result is a greatly increased respect for America's success France within six months changed from an attitude of hostility and resentment to one of "there is nothing too good for America." The French authorities made some of their neighbors move on, and told the American commissioner to help himself to space in the Paris Exposition. But this was after the naval battles of Manila and Santiago. France, when she saw America knew how to fight, suddenly turned a complete somersault in appearance of sentiment.

The Germans, much slower than the Frenchmen, saw Sampson and Dewey do their work with a sort of indignant surprise. The Intelligence Department of the Germans is believed to be the best in the world. What the Germans don't know is not knowledge. The German naval expert glibly demonstrated that America stood no sort of a chance against Spain on the seas. Every German had the utmost contempt for the American soldier "With forty thousand men," it used to be said, "we could invade America." They spoke of the improvised army of American volunteers as a "rabble," and it was "treason" to depend upon such material. But when these soldiers began to win battles, these cast-iron military experts who know it all began to scratch their heads in dismay. Something had gone wrong in the constitution of the universe. Like a drowning man they were dazed. They grabbed at straws, and one of these straws was the Philippines, to which a German fleet was dispatched with the hope of securing this flotsam and jetsam of the war. Then Uncle Sam suddenly said, "Hands off!" The Germans as suddenly recollected that they had never thought of such a thing. The German is a practical man, and since the conclusion of peace has been pulling himself together and thinking how to act toward America with the least trouble for himself.

—All interested in the promotion of Christian education in Illinois among the Disciples are invited to meet in Springfield, May 15, to consider all questions that may arise on this great theme. No one factor in our state means more to our progress and growth than the education of our preachers and leaders. Our position logically puts us in a leading educational position. If we fail here it is to our dishonor. In the multitude of counselors there is wisdom. Come in the fear of God, prayerfully to consider this part of our King's business. J. G. WAGGONER, Field Sec.

Eureka College.

—The authentic announcement, made in this issue of the Herald, that $60,000 in new buildings will be placed upon Christian College campus means much to Columbia. Christian College is nearly half a century old. It has always held high rank among the educational institutions of the state. The present announcement means the enlargement and growth of the institution and its permanent pre-eminence. It adds immeasurably to the advantages of Columbia as a residence town and school community.

A striking feature of the announcement is contained in the statement that two accomplished and cultured women, Mrs. W. T. Moore and Mrs. L. W. St. Clair, will be principals of the greater Christian College. They will be financially responsible for the improvements and will carry out in fullest fashion the preliminary announcement which the Herald makes to-day. In this great work they deserve the cordial co-operation of every citizen of Columbia.

Greater Christian College, which its friends say will now become "the Wellesley of the West," means another step towards Greater Columbia!—The Columbia (Missouri) Herald.

This stroke of enterprise in one of our Missouri institutions is as refreshing as it is exceptional. While the brethren are halting and hesitating and doing nothing, these two heroic women propose to go ahead and achieve success. And they will succeed. Success waits on such enterprise. Is there any hope that this spirit will prove catching in Missouri?

—Bro. Harvout, who has recently given another thousand dollars to Drake, made us all rejoice yesterday when he made the generous offer to erect the much-needed church building here provided the congregation would furnish it. In less than fifteen minutes at the evening service $870 was pledged and the rest was guaranteed by four of the brethren. This will give us at least a $5,000 building. Work on the plans will begin at once.

In His name,

J. B. HOLMES, JR.

Panora, Iowa.

—Your Home Mission number is not only very beautiful and suggestive on its title-page, but full of strong, stimulating, exhilarating food and drink upon the inside. Surely, our enterprising papers will arouse and awaken this great brotherhood to the grandest offering ever made to missions. E. A. COLE.

A Loss to St. Louis.

F. G. Tyrrell, pastor of the Central Christian Church in this city, preached his closing discourses at the Central last Lord's day to a crowded house, morning and evening. In neither discourse did he trust himself to make any reference to his leaving. His morning theme was, "An Unseen Force," followed by an offering of about $650 for Home Missions, which will probably be swelled to $700. In the evening his theme was, "A Conquering Faith." After receiving two persons into the membership of the church the benediction was pronounced as usual. At this point the large chorus choir began singing, rather softly, "God be with you till we meet again." The great audience stood in silence, many weeping, until the hymn was concluded, and at its close passed down the aisles slowly, silently, clasping hands with more feeling than words. The relation between the retiring pastor and the church is most cordial and affectionate. Not the Central congregation alone, but the people of the city, greatly regret his leaving. His more than eight years' service in the Central Church has given it a prominent place among the churches of this city and of the brotherhood. He has shown himself to be a preacher of remarkable versatility, freshness and power, who has always commanded fine audiences; a pastor who knows his flock, and tenderly cares for all its interests; a Christian man without a blemish on his reputation; a friend to every good work, a foe to evil, a brother-man whose hand is outstretched to every one needing sympathy or help. The Board of the Children's Home Society of this city sends us resolutions of regret at his leaving, and appreciation of his services. Many another institution in the city will miss his aid and sympathy.

At the earnest request of the brethren in Chicago, the Central Church releases Brother Tyrrell a few weeks earlier than was originally contemplated. St. Louis suffers a real loss in the departure of Brother Tyrrell. We shall miss his ardor and his eloquent advocacy in every worthy enterprise. But St. Louis' loss will be Chicago's gain. They will find him no uncertain or neutral factor in the moral and religious life of that great city. If they will give him sea-room, and do not attempt to hamper him with too many conventionalities, he will do a great work there for the advancement of the kingdom of God. He expects to spend July and August on the Pacific coast, returning to his work in Chicago about September 1st. The love and prayers of the St. Louis brotherhood will follow Brother Tyrrell into his new field of labor.

Cause of Resignation.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—I wish to correct the impression that my resignation as national superintendent of Christian Endeavor was caused by ill-health. At no time within the last three years has my health been so good as now. But I have found, through ample experience, that there is a limit to the working power of a perfectly well man. During my superintendency the Christian Endeavor movement among us has grown to such magnitude, and the demands for its still further development are so great, that it is impossible for even a well man to render the service which should be rendered this very important movement and, at the same time, to do all that is justly required in the pastorate. Each position ought to receive the full time and the undivided attention of at least one man. My health is all right; but I decided to no longer attempt the impossible task of doing the work of two men. That's all.

I wish it understood, also, that my resignation as superintendent of Christian Endeavor affects in no way my relation to the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses. These courses will continue their good work of spreading among our young people a knowledge of the Bible, of missions and of our plea for the restoration of New Testament Christianity. Definite announcement of handbooks for the third year will be made in due time.

Truly and fraternally, J. Z. TYLER.
Cleveland, Ohio, April 29, 1899.

Departure of a Venerable Saint.

Mrs. Jane M. Yates, of Ionia, Mich., departed this life in the 83rd year of her age on the 19th of April. Sister Yates and her husband were among the first converts of Isaac Errett during his labors there in 1857. She was the grandmother of Herbert and Arthur Willett and aunt of Frederick P. Arthur. During a visit to Ionia a year ago last summer we met Mother Yates and her daughter, Mrs. G. A. Willett, walking near their home, and when Sister Willett introduced us to her mother we said: "Ah, this is Grandmother Lois and Eunice." It was delightful to talk with Sister Yates and note her deep and intelligent interest in all that related to the welfare of the cause with which she had been so long identified. Bro. C. A. Preston, of Ionia, who by request of the deceased, spoke a few words at the funeral, said: "The grace and dignity that so well became Sister Yates and was a part of her seemed almost a heritage of past generations of culture and refinement. She was as perfect a lady of the old school as any of the granddames of the Colonial period; and if her life had been spent in centers of society, she would have graced a court with as much ease and dignity as when entertaining her friends in her Ionian home." It would not be right to mourn over the departure of one who was so ripe for heaven and who had filled the allotted period of human life. Let us rather treasure the memory of such a noble, Christlike character, and seek to make our lives more replete with the grace which adorned hers. The influence of her life will rest on the church at Ionia like a heavenly benediction for long years to come, and being dead, so far as the earth-life is concerned, she will speak to generations yet unborn.

PERSONAL MENTION.

H. A. Denton late of Clarion, Ia., has located at Onawa.

Wm. Roe, of Manchester, is preparing to move to Des Moines.

J. O. Snodgrass, of Drake University, has located with the church at Scranton, Ia.

J. M. Hunter, formerly of Portland, is now laboring at Forest Grove, Ore.

W. T. Maupin leaves Omaha, Neb., for Oregon, Mo.

Chas. Laycock changes from Camp Point to Jacksonville, Ill.

W. H. Scrivner may hereafter be addressed at Erie, Kan., where he has gone from Newton.

David C. Peters, late of Versailles, Mo., has accepted a call to the pastorate at Holden, Mo.

J. H. Hammond, Decatur, Mich., is at liberty to engage in evangelistic work during the next few months.

D. A. Wickizer, Iowa state evangelist, reports the Central district convention at Bondurant the best that district has ever had.

W. J. Lhamon visited DesMoines recently and preached for both pastors, H. O. Breeden and I. N. McCash.

Bro. A. G. Alderman is doing good work at Ridgeway and Blanchard, Mo. He is one of the successful teachers in Central Christian College.

F. F. Grim is doing a good work in Montana. He reports preparations nearly completed for a convention in June of the churches and brethren in Bitter-root Valley.

The Ministerial Alliance of Clinton, Mo., adopted very flattering resolutions on the departure from that city of Rev. J. K. Speer, pastor First Christian Church.

Pastor H. O. Breeden went to Waterloo, Iowa, to dedicate the new Y. M. C. A. Building. A. M. Haggard and Prof. Ott filled his pulpit at the Central Sunday.

L. Harvuott, of Panora, Ia., has promised to build for his home congregation a new church house if they will furnish it. The total cost complete will be $4,000 or $5,000. Pastor Holmes is very happy and so are all.

Joseph Dyer, a son of the Iowa pioneer preacher, H. P. Dyer, has a fine lecture upon Robert E. Lee. The students and citizens of University Place, Des Moines, heard it recently and pronounce it scholarly and eloquent.

J. B. Buxton, late pastor at Fairbury, Neb., and recently elected president of Add-Ran College, is in Des Moines for a few days. He presented a fine lot of books to the Drake University library.

Thos. E. Jones, the great evangelistic singer, has returned to Chicago from Philadelphia where he was assisting J. S. Myers, and is now at liberty for evangelistic work. His address is 9 Lane Place, Chicago.

T. T. Thompson, a student of Drake University, and preaching for one of our Des-Moines churches, was slugged or sandbagged recently while doing slum work in DesMoines, Iowa. Our cities are Foreign Mission fields, at least in certain quarters.

Arthur O. Garrison, late managing editor of the Christian Oracle, by way of bridging the chasm between journalism and the medical profession, into which he has decided to enter, is "subbing" for Bro. Hopkins, during the latter's absence on vacation.

Mrs. Geo. F. Hall, the much-beloved wife of the Tabernacle pastor, at Decatur, Ill., was recently the recipient of an elegant dinner set of 113 pieces, the gift of the ladies of the congregation. Bro. and Sister Hall are now on their sixth year of successful service with these enthusiastic people.

On April 28th at the residenee of Dr. J. W. Talbot, of Texarkana, Texas, a reception was given Bro. T. F. Weaver and family by the members and friends of the church. Between one thousand and fifteen hundred people came during the time, 3 to 11 P. M., to form their acquaintance and bid them a most cordial welcome.

Chancellor W. B. Craig, Pastors H. O. Breeden and I. N. McCash, Prof. O. T. Morgan and W. W. Williams were the Iowa contingent at the St. Louis Congress. They were delighted with what they saw and heard. They rehearsed to the DesMoines churches and to the college students at Drake University some of the good things of the Congress.

Information concerning the whereabouts of one Wm. M. Alphin, colored Christian preacher, thirty years of age and married, is wanted by his anxious, aged mother, "Aunt Fannie," Ardmore, Indian Territory, who last heard, eleven months ago, that her son was in Kansas City, Mo. E. B. WATSON.
Ardmore, I. T., May 3rd, '99.

Rev. Allen B. Philputt has just completed his first year as pastor of the Central Christian Church of Indianapolis. There have been 150 additions to the membership and over $13,000 raised for all perposes, about half of which was applied on the church debt, almost wiping it out. The use of the individual communion cups begun recently has proven universally popular with the congregation.

On Friday night, April 14, 1899, at the Christian Church in Murphysboro, Ill., the members gave their pastor, Rev. W. H. Willyard, and his bride a most cordial reception. The edifice was well filled with members and their friends. The welcome address was delivered by Mr. T. H. Phillips, followed by Hon. A. B. Garrett and Miss Daisy Eakin, select reading and recitation, after which the evening was very pleasantly spent in social intercourse.

H. L. Willett, who has been spending several months in Germany, sailed for home on the 29th ult., and has at this writing, no doubt, arrived in this country. He gave a series of Bible lectures at the West London Tabernacle, in passing through, on the occasion of the first semi-annual conference of our churches in England. We are glad to welcome Bro. Willett back home, and only regret he did not arrive in time to enjoy the Congress, for the success of which he did so much before leaving this country.

English Topics.

OUR GREAT REVIVAL CAMPAIGN.

As this letter will in great part relate to our own English work it should be of particular interest to all who in America have at heart the welfare of this section of the great reformation. It cannot be doubted that we on this side are not yet understood as to our difficulties and our needs by the vast majority of our American brethren. I heard J. A. L. Romig last night say that he had come to the conclusion that England is the best field in the world for this movement. For certain reasons this is actually true. It is the position of Britain in relation to the rest of the world which makes it absolutely essential that our new Reformation should be solidly planted here. If you secure England, then you must dominate the earth. But you have to persevere for years with the preliminary preparations before you will see the great outbreak of the inevitable results. May I impress upon the minds of my American readers the record of a simple fact? Romig is evangelizing. With what effect? Well, he has been five months in the field and as yet only worked in six churches, but up to this moment there have been in consequence 150 baptisms. This may not take by storm the imagination of an American reader, because in your country this work is so very much more advanced; but think of the wave which has been set rolling! If I could get the ear of every American sympathizer with the Lord's work in dear old England I would say, "Do something to help us to keep this young evangelist in the English field, and send us more such men to sustain an apostolic mission up and down the land. In a few years you could thus secure such a reformation in our old country as you do not even dream of. You have done nobly, dear kind friends in America, to sustain this enterprise as you have done. The churches which have struggled into existence now furnish a fulcrum to which you can apply your lever, if you will, with tremendous power. At this moment Bro. Romig and Bro. Hanna, his fine young singer, are on their campaign at West London Tabernacle. Fine meetings are being held. They next go to Cheltenham. Before long an attempt is to be made to find some fresh pastures for exploitation by these two brethren, and the eyes of our board here are being directed to some of the great manufacturing towns in Yorkshire. If possible, new soil is to be opened up at once. A large number, any number indeed, of new missions might be planted and new churches formed, if we had the men free to put in the field. Our preachers are, of course, tied up to their churches, or every man amongst them would long since have started a branch mission.

PREACHERS IN RETREAT.

We are this week meeting in a preachers' conference, which is to be repeated every spring. Any other workers besides preachers are cordially welcomed and a goodly number are attending, with manifest delight. Every minister among us has come to London for this occasion and we are enjoying a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. We have in London at this moment Brethren Willett, Wharton, from India, and Hunt from China. The great feature of this "retreat," as the High Churchmen in England would style it, is the memorable course of a lecture each morning and evening of the two days, from Dr. Willett, who has been spending a year in Germany and who is resting for a brief spell in England before coming back to your shores. This brilliant and learned young lecturer is giving us a feast which will long be remembered. His course of four lectures is an impromptu condensation of extension university lectures at Chicago, on the glorious topic of the "Beginnings of Christianity." I with others am sitting at his feet with profound delight. His main thesis is the Triunity of Early Christianity. There were three apostolic phases, the Petrine, the Pauline and the Johnnine, which had their respective centers at Jerusalem, Antioch and Ephesus. Each of these was progressive in its development of the larger and larger liberty from Judaism. Each was a grander departure from the position of the Hebrew Christian Church which was controlled by the personality and influence of James. Peter represented the strong will, Paul the mighty intellect, John the profound love of the Christian spirit by which the world has been revolutionized. Dr. Willett, in a masterly historical excursus, showed us how these three phases of the spirit of Christianity are evermore repeated in the evolution of human progress as related to religion. The Roman and Anglican tendencies are in the Petrine spirit of dominant power—of course exaggerated and distorted. The Puritan dogmatic and doctrinal movements have been essentially Pauline, but these tendencies have been again too exclusive and hypertrophied. Then the great evangelical revival of the last century, under Whitefield and Wesley, was Johannine in its profound emotional strength and passion; but each of these movements has given too much predominance to one of the great phases, to the almost entire exclusion of the others. We should like to keep Dr. Willett in England as America has kept our English Professor Moulton. But we are very happy in our occasional feasts from such great brethren in transitu, and we are gratified that they so fully understand our appreciation of them, that they invariably seem sorry to leave us and want to come this way again. More and more are Englishmen and Americans coming to know and love each other. Thank God for real rapprochement, for surely the days are at hand when the world's liberties are to be flung into the crucible of deadly conflict before the despot militarism of the "Beast Powers" is broken. China is about to break up in the East and Austria in the West. In each continent there is to be a gathering of the eagles about a doomed carcass, and the end of this earthly polity will be that the eagles will fight to the death themselves. In a few short years Britain and America will seem welded into a sublime confederation against the whole world besides, and then may God defend the right!

HELL IN AERICA.

England is being increasingly concerned with the fate of millions of the native races in Darkest Africa. As usual, the white man who takes to these aboriginal his Bibles and sends them his missionaries, by the same ships dispatches to them his gunpowder, his gin and his measles. The sad old story is being repeated in Africa, on that romantic territory divided into the strips called the Golden Coast, the Ivory Coast and the Slave Coast. Parliament has been brought face to face with the question of "gin-soaked Africa," and Mr. Chamberlain, the able secretary for the colonies, has, in his own energetic way, taken up the case. He has informed Parliament and the nation that the British government is about to send delegates to the conference about to be held at Brussels on this important matter by the European powers which have been partitioning Africa. A great and influential deputation has waited on Mr. Chamberlain. Mr. Mark Stewart well told him that nothing less than total prohibition would satisfy the awful necessity of the position; but the Bishop of Sierra Leone did what bishops nearly always do. He needlessly gave away the case by giving his opinion that prohibition was hopeless. But Rev. James Johnson, a native clergyman of Lagos, did much to repair this lapse when he declared that the liquor trade was even more injurious than the slave trade. Our grandfathers maintained that prohibition of the slave trade was impossible, but our fathers, instead of inheriting all the stupid fallacies of our grandfathers, found out that "where there's a will there's way." Mr. Chamberlain at once frankly took his stand on the right side, against the hell-makers who are pouring execrable gin and rum into Africa. He gave the deputation some interesting facts on his own account. He soon showed that as a statesman he is no friend to the wholesale poisoning of Africans. His opinion is that the abolition of the African drink traffic is demanded, not only by philanthropists and missionaries, but also by the worldly and substantial interests of British trade. Natives who buy gin can very speedily buy nothing else. Dahomey has been drenched with liquor since the French conquered that region of blood and cruelty. The British Government has already established prohibition in New Guinea by clapping on a duty so great as to render it impossible to import strong drink, and it is a happy augury that Sir William Macgregor, formerly governor of New Guinea, is now the governor of Lagos. How many of us in England welcome any approximation to prohibition! This country of ours is also a gin-soaked land. Here the Bible and the beer-barrel jostle each other, and the church and the drinkshop stand side by side, like doors to heaven and hell in juxtaposition. The idea of prohibition has not yet entered into the average English mind, but it is about to do so. Then we shall have the beginning of a new social revolution. Prohibition was born in America, and it will be our next American importation.

A vivacious woman's fan can freqnently speak in more eloquent language than any known to the tongue of man. It can invite or repel, sigh or smile, be meek or haughty, tear a passion to tatters or humbly seek forgiveness.

It can also tell the story of health. A woman who suffers from weakness and disease in a womanly way sits in sorrow and dejection while her healthy sisters enjoy themselves. She may be naturally beautiful, naturally attractive, naturally interesting and animated and witty, but the demon of ill-health is gnawing at the very vitals of her womanly nature, and she soon becomes a withered wall flower in comparison with her brighter and more healthy sisters. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a wonderful medicine for women who suffer in this way. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in wifehood and motherhood. It tones and builds up the shattered nerves. It restores the glow of health to the pallid cheek. It gives springiness and trip to the carriage. It makes the eyes sparkle with returning vivacity. It imparts animation to the mien and gestures. The fan that long lay listless and idle in the lap of an invalid again speaks the eloquent language of a healthy, happy woman. Thousands of women have testifed to the marvelous merits of this wonderful medicine.

"For several years I suffered with prolapsus of the uterus," writes Miss A. Lee Schuster, of Box 12, Rodney, Jefferson Co., Miss. "Our family physician treated me for kidney trouble, and everything else but the right thing. I grew worse and worse. My body was emaciated, hands and feet clammy and cold, stomach weak, with great palpitation of the heart. I would suffer with nausea all night. I began taking your 'Favorite Prescription' and I began to improve right away. I have taken three bottles and now I am very nearly well and am very happy and thankful to you."

Keep your head up and your bowels open. The "Golden Medical Discovery" will put steel in your backbone, and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets will cure constipation.

New York Letter.

The Rev. Prof. Charles A. Briggs can no longer disturb the Presbyterian fold, for the simple reason that they cast him out, but now he is the occasion of trouble in the Episcopalian camp. Bishop Potter announced some time ago that he would ordain him to the priesthood at the historic old church of St. Peter's in the village of Westchester, on May the 14th, but Dr. Clendenen, the rector of that church, has just written the bishop, not only asking that Dr. Briggs be not ordained in his church, but that he be refused ordination to the priesthood altogether. In justification of his protest, Rector Clendenen cites voluminously from Dr. Briggs' books to prove that he is a dangerous heretic. This protest is not to be looked upon lightly for two reasons: (1) St. Peter's is one of the oldest and wealthiest parishes in the bishopric of New York, and (2) Dr. Clendenen is a man of considerable influence, both on account of his ability as a minister and his high social connections, having married the daughter of Horace Greeley the famous founder of the New York Tribune. There is no question that the protest will have weight with Bishop Potter, but what the result will be is not yet known. Dr. Briggs says he is willing to wait till the autumn to be ordained. Many of the "clergy" of New York have expressed their approval of the course of Dr. Clendenen and say they propose to support him in the fight; others take sides with Dr. Brigg's and Bishop Potter.

The second annual dinner of the Disciples' Club of New York was held at the Union Square Hotel on Tuesday evening, April the 25th and was a delightful, social, intellectual and gastronomic feast. President John L. N. Hunt, LL, D., presided with his usual grace and dignity. The Rev. Dr. W. C. Bitting, of the Nt. Morris Baptist Church, delivered the principle address, "The Bible and Recent Discoveries." He exhibited a number of interesting objects which had been taken out of some of the excavations in Bible lands. He said no man could properly preach the Bible who does not make a critical study of it. This doubtless is true, provided it is a constructive and not a destructive criticism he makes. Among the others to speak were J. M. Philputt, Dr. James Butchart, H. S. Butler, W. C. Payne, F. M. Applegate and Bro. Marsden, of England. At the next regular meeting of the club, May 23rd, Bro. R. C. McWane will read a paper on "Martin Luther." Some of the papers presented at the club are worthy of a wider hearing than they get in this limited association.

The late Col. John B. Cary, of Richmond, Va., was very much interested in the principal questions that are to come before the Philadelphia Conference, especially those of evangelization and education. In a conversation with him on these matters, a short time before his death, he made a liberal offer toward the support of a general evangelist, if only others would join him in the effort. And now his daughter, Mrs. L. C. Daniel, writes to say their family stands ready to do all this good man of God purposed in his heart to do. We sincerely hope this generosity will inspire others to liberal giving for the support of an evangelist to take oversight of the work in the Eastern States of the North Atlantic. The territory of this conference is, all things considered, the greatest mission field on the face of the earth. Herein are about 26,000,000 people and we have, comparatively speaking, nothing adequately to set forth the pure, full gospel of Christ. There is no section of our great country that promises such rich returns for the labor expended toward the planting of the cause of Christ as this one. If we will turn the East to the Lord it will in turn become the means in God's hand of sending the gospel to all the nations of the earth. It seems that American influence is destined to dominate the world. And that the East is the most influential section of our country commercially, socially and politically is not questioned by any well-informed person. Let us therefore determine to enter this field with something like an adequate force and plant Churches of Christ all over this part of the country. In our next letter we hope to be able to report that the Disciples of Christ in the North Atlantic states have entered with determination upon this glorious work. If such shall be our happy privilege the Philadelphia conference will not have been in vain.

Bro. C. M. Kreidler, of Troy, N. Y., reports the work at that point as prospering. State Evangelist J. M. Morris has just held a good meeting at the Lansingberg mission where they organized the 49th Church of Christ in the Empire State. The outlook for the Master at Troy is full of blessed promise. E. M. Flinn, the good pastor at Haverhill, Mass., is pushing his work forward to success. Bro. W. C. Payne expects to close his pastorate at the 56th Church the 31st. J. H. Banton, a lawyer of New York, and an active member of the First Church, is one of the principal speakers at the Texas C. E. Convention this year. He was also sought for an address at the General C. E. Convention to be held at Detroit in July, but had to decline. Bro. J. R. Tolar, Jr, having closed his work at Rochester, N. Y., is stopping for the present with his father at Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn. Some good church should seek him at once. He is a worthy young man and should not be allowed to remain out of the pulpit long.

"One Dark Spot."

Editor Christian-Evangelist: — For ten years I have been a weekly reader of the Christian-Evangelist, and have learned to love the paper next to the Bible. I believe it to be the sweetest-spirited and in many respects the ablest paper in the brotherhood; and my partiality to it has blinded me to its faults, if indeed it has any. There seems to be, according to my way of thinking, one dark spot on its pure, soul-inspiring pages; that is its advocacy of what I conceive to be a most cruel, selfish and unscriptural prosecution of the Philippine war. I cannot think that any nation, civilized or barbarous, struggling for independence, should be invaded by a foreign power and reduced to subjugation wholly against their will. Expansion of territory at the cost of innocent blood and broken homes, with millions of treasure, is in my humble judgment a scheme of national selfishness as cruel as it is unscriptural. To take human life even in self-defense may be questionable, but to invade the homes of a foreign people who have done us no harm, but who for years have been struggling for freedom from an oppressor, is to my mind one of the greatest crimes of this century, and wholly antagonistic to the Spirit of Christ.

The American pulpits favoring the war no doubt see in it open doors for missionary effort, but if we must wade through blood even to the point of extermination, as some of our papers put it, in order to open new fields for missionary enterprise, it does seem that those doors had better remain closed. Besides, if the poor Fillipinos must be exterminated in order to be subjugated, what would be left to evangelize?

It ought to make every Christian heart swell with gratitude to God to see the great and increasing efforts of the American ministry, and especially the Christian brotherhood, to evangelize the whole world and convert the nations to Christ, but to use powder and ball as a forerunner of the gospel of peace is, in my judgment, a huge and inexcusable crime. From the commencement of the Spanish-American war I felt pained at its endorsement by the Christian-Evangelist.

The Christian-Evangelist is not weak in resources to defend any position it ever takes; and as I am probably not the only reader who dissents from its position, will you kindly set forth in a special article its position on the war, and if in favor of our government's present policy of expansion, give scriptural reasons therefor? Such an article cannot fail of good results. If I am wrong in my position, no one is abler to show me my error than the editor.

I may mistake the position of the editor-in-chief, but am sure I do not some of its contributors. The political press is divided on this question, looking at it purely from a commerciai point of view. Our great religious papers must look at it from an entirely different view point, and there seems to be no reasons for division. The Bible must settle it. If it can be shown by any example of parallel cases that the present proceedings against these semi-civilized people are in harmony with the spirit of Christianity, or would meet the approval of Christ if he were on earth, then no one ought to condemn the policy of the administration.

But without direct scriptural proof Hannibal in Italy or Napoleon in Egypt were not more conspicuous in crime, according to my humble way of thinking, than McKinley in the Philippine Islands.

International S. S. Association.—I.

Several other gatherings are candidating for the attention of the public: the labor men and the annual decoration of the graves of the Southern soldiers as well as some smaller gatherings. Many people were on the march on the 26th of April in honor of the heroic dead. The oration was eloquent, but would serve to keep in memory the spirit of the early sixties, which it would be better to forget. The labor men are a hopeful and earnest lot, and if they could be directed aright would help along the car of civilization.

The Sunday-school convention has a delegation of about fifteen hundred, as given here by those in authority. But if they were counted, the number would be reduced somewhat, perhaps. The large number of visitors swell the atiendance to several thousand. But their interest in the cause seems to vary; they are going and coming all the time.

Atlanta is the most beautiful city of the South; indeed, it is doubtful if our whole country can furnish a more delightful city in which to live, and certainly not one where a convention like this could be held with greater profit or pleasure. The true Southerner is always hospitable, but the people of Atlanta are hospitable Southerners. I have the honor of being the guest of Mr. W. A. Hemphill, business manager of the Atlanta Constitution, a very excellent daily. It is a most lovely home; it could not be improved upon. I am writing this article in his office, and on a typrwriter with which I have no familiarity. Already we have had a few misunderstandings, but I think I shall get on presently.

I find but few of my own brethren in this convention, and am ready to say something to them about the neglect of which we are guilty; indeed, I would say it here and now, but for the fact that this is the first one, and I fear some one would ask me about it.

I am reminded very much of our own great conventions except that I know so few, and have not been tapped on the shoulder once to be told that some one had read "On the Rock" and had been converted by it, and that they felt that it was proper to give me the encouruging thought that I had done a right down good thing when I wrote that book. The convention was welcomed by the royal statesmen and the welcome was responded to by the eloquent divines who had been appointed for that purpose. These speeches were not only eloquent, but thoughtful; furnishing not only the wit and pleasantry fit for such a time, but full of great purpose. Christianity alone can furnish the world with such a convention of noble men and women. It is a pleasure to be associated with them. They are workers and know how to work. We ought to be here in large numbers, and make ourselves felt for good. We know more about how to study the Scriptures than any other people in the world, and yet we are putting our light under a bushel as if we were afraid some one would learn the way of life and be saved! To this it may be said that we never have a position offered us when we do attend. True, perhaps, and yet we have not earned the right to be heard. If we stay away and wait till they send for us, we never will be represented among them. It is quite evident to me that I shall not have an office or place on any committee, but they will treat me better when they know me better. And I must attend after this, so that they will know what they have missed by not calling on me before!

Celebrated singers are here in abundance, and smooth up the atmosphere in a most delightful way; they are nearly up to the St. Louis singers, and that is saying very much.

Sectarianism has no chance in a convention like this. The interest in our common cause overtops everything else. Very much of the meeting has been given over to business, but it is interspersed with good things which are competent to help those who need instruction in the best methods of work.

The Home Department is receiving a great deal of consideration, and it seems now that it is to be a prominent feature of Sunday-school effort in the future. This is work for the Christian Church especially. Why can we not get a large number of our people to read the system of lessons and send in their papers for review. It seems as if we ought to have as many doing this kind of work as now attend the school proper.

The Lesson Committee have had a hard time to satisfy themselves as to the correctness of the plan on which they have proceeded. That their course has been full of blunders, all I have seen on that subject fully believe. No one claims that the method used in this system of lessons has ever been proposed as a method of studying anything else. If a man studied history or anything else in the loose manner in which these lessons are given out he would need to be four hundred years old in order to graduate in anything. Of course some one will say: "Well, I have learned more by these lessons than I ever did before." That may be, and yet a better system would have been worth twice as much. Such a person, however, has rather learned in spite of the system than by its aid.

And yet I believe that great good is done by the international lessons. The people are had to read and think on the same religious topics once a week; not only do they think on the same subject, but they think alike on these subjects, and, thinking alike, they feel alike, and, feeling alike on the subject of religion, they wish alike, and, wishing alike, they will soon come to act alike. Whatever tends to the unity of God's people ought to receive a welcome by us. I do not think that they will come to understand unity as we do for many years yet, but they are on the road, and they are traveling in the right direction; and I believe we ought to smile on them while they are coming our way.

"Organization," "Education" and "Evangelization" have been well discussed. The educational feature of this work, we know well, but in organization and in wise plans for evangelization we are very deficient. I believe that any one of our preachers or superintendents would be greatly benefited in the work by diligently studying the methods here presented.

All the pulpits here are to be filled on Lord's day by those in attendance upon the convention. Of course there will be just a little pulling for the great men, after a sectarian sort, and yet they do not do worse in such matters than that same number of churches in any one denomination. Perhaps we would charge such things up to human nature, of which some people seem to have a great deal.

And now, after twenty-seven years, since this work began, the color line has been crossed, and the negro is to be permitted to sit in the same convention, yet they will sit together. Well, that will be good; they will get knowledge in that way which they would not get in any other.

As to the names of the great men who are before the people, it is not in order to write. They are from England, Canada, Australia, South Africa and from all the states and territories in the Union. The next meeting may go to Toronto, Canada, or it may go to Denver. I cannot say at this time. D. R. D.

Lyman Beecher Lectures at Yale—III.

Prof. Smith, of Glasgow, continues his course of lectures with discussion next of the "Hope of Immortality in the Old Testament." His main position was that immortality of the individual does not stand out clearly in the Old Testament, but it was Christ who "brought life and immortality to light." The individual was secondary to the nation. So, many of the psalms which speak in first person were written in behalf of the nation.

Then comes the message of Jeremiah, which was molded by the consciousness of his own unique relation to God—that of an individual. But it was enough for Israel to know that God is omnipotent and faithful—out of that springs the hope of immortality.

Prof. Smith claims that the Semites never dealt with the individual, but with the tribe—that the preservation and continuation of the tribe was their great concern. To them God was not the God of the dead, but of the living. There is abundant material in the Old Testament for present-day doubt and despair—experiences through which men passed then similar to our own time. They are the records of the heart's hard experiences and struggles for hope and life beyond.

On "the prophets" just a word or two. Contrast between prophets and apostles—the former were citizens and statesmen; the latter, "strangers and pilgrims," teachers of religion, etc.

It would have been far better if theologians had gone to the lives of the prophets—as Jeremiah and Hosea—as examples of vicarious suffering, as prototypes of Jesus—rather than to the animal sacrifices. The doctrine of vicarious suffering grew out of human experiences; it was not handed down as a dogma from heaven. Suggests that Isa. 53 was outgrowth of the suffering of such men as Jeremiah.

He made a strong plea for a return to a more general use of the prophets; therein are the fullest and brightest teachings of the Old Testament. They have been resorted to by all preachers who have brought a living message to their age.

In the closing lecture Dr. Smith showed the practical material stored up in the wisdom books — the Proverbs, etc. Many lessons needed for this age.

Of course these reports are very fragmentary and unsatisfactory—must be from short space allowed the reports, but it is hoped they may be the means of arousing an interest in the forthcoming lectures which are to be published, where the reader may find a full discussion of many of the questions raised here. Large audiences were attracted to these lectures, and the lecturer has made many friends in America. B. W.

"Jubilee City" Letter.

The "Jubilee City" is busy with preparations for the reception and entertainment of the ten thousand delegates expected next October. Another mass meeting will be held the evening of may 2nd in the Central Church to plan for the support of the great task in hand.

RAILROAD RATES.

Already the Central Traffic Association has granted a round-trip rate of one fare besides allowing for excursions at farther reduced rates, of which many cities will take advantage. Louisville will come by hundreds via the river. It is expected that other passenger associations will soon make like concessions.

THE HOME OFFERING.

The home office is a busy place these days. Besides the two hard-working secretaries, three stenographers are busy early and late attending to the vast mail pouring in, while the outgoing mail goes by the sackfull. Never in the history of the society has there been such demand for supplies nor so many words of encouragement from pastors, all of which prophesies success in the effort for $100,000 as a jubilee offering.

There are three certain churches in the brotherhood whose conbined offerings on the first Lord's day in May will be close on to $2,000, and there will be surprises from many others.

TWO OFFERINGS IN ONE.

Let us not forget in presenting this cause to to the churches that we are really to take two offerings in one. The convention decided to merge that of Negro Edacation and Evangelization into the regular Home offering in order to cut down the number of calls made during the year, and calculations in each church should be to enlarge in this one both of the old calls.

TWO NEW PLANS.

Two new plans are inaugurated for this special Jubliee Year. One is for individuals to make subscriptions of twenty-five, fifty and one hundred dollars or more, and give it through their churches. Nearly $4,000 has already been subscribed in this way and, as she should, the Jubilee City started the roll with about one-third that sum. The other is that churches giving one hundred dollars or more may honor their pastors by receiving for them a life-directorship, or, by giving fifty dollars, receive a life-membership in the Home Society. Many congregations have signified their intentions of responding to this privilege. Both of these funds are in special gratitude for the 2,186 churches organized and the 87,000 people baptized by the missionaries of the Home Society.

THE "APRIL-FOOL" PASTORS.

Four of our pastors were jokingly referred to as the "April-fools" upon the occasion of their presenting their annual reports on April 1st, each concluding a milepost in their pastorates on that day.

Bro. Geo. Miller, of the First Church, Covington, completed his fifth year, and is the oldest pastor, though not the oldest man, in the Ministerial Association. During his ministry 339 have united with the church, and there has been a net gain of 250 in membership. During the past six years they have paid over $19,000 on their church debt besides raising almost as great a sum for current expenses.

Bro. A. M. Harvout, of the old Central, Cincinnati, concluded the third year of work. There have been 380 accessions all told during that time, and notwithstanding the transitory character of a down-town membership the membership has made very material increase.

Bro. E. K. VanWinkle likewise concluded his third year with the old historic Chathage Church, where Walter Scott was for eight years pastor. The old church has rallied under Bro. Van Winkle and increased her membership by one-third. Bro. Van Winkle has presented his resignation which will be accepted only with protest.

Last of these four is the writer, who finished the first year of the new Norwood Church, with a pastor. This mission has trebled in membership and is now independent of the district board. Better even than the numerical increase are the missionary offerings for the year which amounted to $200, not one dollar of which came from a wealthy person, but was shared by the entire membership.

THE LOST CHORD.

"I do not know what I was playing,
Or what I was dreaming then,
But I struck one chord of music,
Like the sound of a great amen.

I have sought, but I seek it vainly,
That one lost chord divine,
That came from the soul of the organ,
And entered into mine.

It may be that death's bright angel
Will speak in that chord again;
It may be that only in heaven
I shall hear that grand amen."

—Adelaide Anne Proctor.

An easel, a canvass, and the outlines of a picture. A pen and a partly written song. A mallet and a chisel at rest and a partially freed angel still in the marble. A cemetery, a grave and a broken shaft.

Her imagination was vivid, the right combinations of emotion came, the spirit of the poet was lifted to its greatest powers and out from infinite depths she heard the great amen.

We cannot explain those deep and powerful inspirations in our natures, which seem to carry us out far beyond ourselves, but they impress, color and fascinate all of our future years. At such moments we quiver as if under the magnetic touch of a superior hand and the continuity of our ordinary lives is lost in our sudden exaltation.

It seems as if we had received a foretaste of things divine and been lost in a delirium of mingled awe and delight. We often see and hear strange things along that border line where our being seems to end in lights and shadows as the day fades into the shadows of night. Just as the day is going we catch the gleam of the nightly stars. Possibly as we stand at the borders of our being we catch some entrancing gleam from the great lights which lie beyond and upon our ears fall enrapturing strains of music, which are floating away from some angel choir. To the poet that was a strange chord which she lost, but it was a familiar chord in the rich music of God, which shall yet fill her with rapture and adoration, when immortality shall have enlarged the boundaries of her being.

There will soon be a new face smiling at the gateway of the centuries. To Him with whom a thousand years are as a day, a century will be but a few hours, while to us it stretches out over the lives of three generations of men. From the garden to the cross our sinning and suffering race was plodding along for forty centuries. The philosophy of man's history during that time will never understand until we catch the deep and far-reaching meaning of the Master when he says: "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear."

The Almighty may take centuries to lift that blade through the crusted earth and grow a stalk on which the full corn will hang, but when his great time is filled, an abundant harvest will vindicate his infinite wisdom. All centuries are God's and through them he can project our broken lives and unfinished ideals for our completion in the eternal world.

My wife and I first met the poet and preacher, Henry Schell Lobengier, in Kansas City, in the fall of 1885. He was on his way to California in pursuit of health, and we invited him to stop and rest with us in Denver. A few days afterward he came to our home a stranger, except the meeting at Kansas City, and what we knew of his splendid reputation, and yet he was so cheerful, companionable and loving that we soon felt that we had known him for years. He was very adroit and delicate in the use of those little touches of nature which stir our affinities. We were impressed with the fineness of his organization and the chasteness and beauty of his thoughts and language. His mind was clear and strong, and the poetry of his heart was ever throwing its charms over his every-day life.

Mature had given to him superior literary abilities and with his fine education, if his life had been spared, he would undoubtedly have won distinction in the world of letters. The evening before he left we went to view a sunset. One hundred and fifty miles of the snow-covered range was in sight. Seventy-five miles to the north Long's Peak soared thirteen thousand and three hundred feet above the level of the sea; seventy-five miles to the south Pike's Peak lifted its broad summit to the same altitude and between them hundreds of other lofty peaks stood in grand array. I began to point out to him the various peaks, mining camps, parks and the canon through which he would pass on his journey, but he did not hear me, for he had caught the poet's vision and was watching a large, fleecy, golden cloud which was floating over a range of hills to the south. He soon turned and followed the mountain summits toward the north. The sun was at the crest of the mountains and their purple shades were falling along the foothills. Slowly the sun sank behind the mountains and their crest glittered as if it had been touched by the hand of God with crimson and gold. He was entirely absorbed in the poetry and sublimity of the scene. That evening his restraint was more than ever removed, and he held us in his charm as he talked of Philadelphia, Chicago, New York City and Richmond, Va., where he had labored, and the noble friends whom he had met.

Above all rose old Bethany, dear to his heart, blessed in his memory, loved as a mother, and there was vividness, pathos and eloquence in his words as he led us on through his college days and the lives of his college friends. His voice trembled, he wept, and for a few moments we sat in silence until his strong emotions were passed, when in the calm and brave voice of an heroic soul he spoke words of holiest love and affection for his mother and his wife and children whom he had left behind. We did all that we could to cheer him with the hope of regaining his health in California and being again joined by his family. In the morning he bade us farewell. His visit was a short one, but to us it is a blessed memory to have been touched by a spirit so kindly, so pure, so exalted, so poetic, so brave and God-trusting as it was entering the shadows of the great unknown. In the following spring, at the age of thiity-seven years, he turned from his uncompleted shaft, and with the calmness of a prince answered to the summons of death. After his death we read his work, The Man in the Book, and from it received higher and broader views of his intellectual powers and spirituality. He chose his themes from the poetic side of the life and work of Christ. The field is an infinite one, and from it the author returned richly laden with glorious things from the Captain of our salvation. Read that book when you feel that you would like to contemplate some of the most exalting and inspiring subjects in our religion. By and by we shall see a perfected picture, a completed song, an angel freed, a finished shaft and the poet hearing that grand Amen!

Alabama Notes.

A law has just passed the legislature which is expected to provide enough money to establish a free school for five months in the year instead of three as heretofore. Also to increase the salaries of teachers considerably. All teachers (except those who have taught ten years on a first-grade license, who will be granted a life license) must pass a state examination. Hitherto a country examination has been the rule and it has been easy for most anybody to pass, local influence and pulls generally being of at least as much importance as ability. The superintendent of this county told me of a case of this nature. A certain community wanted a certain man to teach their school. They would have no other. He was utterly unqualified. He had to go through the form of an examination. Reading, writing and arithmetic were the studies; on a very liberal grading he obtained 20 per cent. on each subject. According to the law he had to obtain not less than 70 per cent. on all questions submitted. The twenties were added together and made 60. Ten more had to come from somewhere, and he was granted it extra on his "handwrite," and he was duly installed as instructor. This is fairly illustrative of educational conditions of the Sunny South, outside of large centers where especial laws govern. The new law properly enforced and supplemented by others will work a great change. Along with the new educational law is a movement to disfranchise all illiterate persons. It seems to me that fairness suggests that the people should have an opportunity to take advantage of the better educational facilities before they are thus treated, and that at least ten if not twenty-five years should elapse before any such enactment should go into operation. But then you see the real aim is to knock the negro out, and to do this constitutionally some reason besides race, color or previous condition of servitude must be found, and as the masses of the white people are not much better off educationally than the colored—and in some districts not so well—it hits them mighty hard. The politicians are trying to allow the whites to retain their votes without any regard to intelligence or previous condition of ignorance. For the life of me I cannot see how it can be managed constitutionally. But they promise to do it; how, we must wait and see. In Mississippi and a few other gulf states this wholesale disfranchisement has taken place, and of the legally qualified voters but one in five troubles to go the polls. In fact, this is the average in all these states, with but one in nine in Mississippi.

These are peculiar conditions in a government of the people, by the people and for the people. Better describe it as "government of the bosses, for the bosses and by the bosses." I have lived in England under a democracy, an aristocracy and monarchy; in Jamaica under a black, brown and whiteocracy; in the North under a democracy and plutocracy, but I had to come South to find a "hogocracy," backed by a mobocracy. I believe that the Federal constitution guarantees to each state a republican form of government. If there is aaything but the "form" when but one legal voter out of five votes, and when there is both a property and educational qualification for voters, I fail to see or appreciate it. After all it matters but little what particular form the government takes provided it is somewhat socialistical in its aims, but unfortunately the individualistical trend in our Southern states seems almost completely unrelieved by any benevolent or fraternal tendencies. Those who are up are kept up and boosted higher; those who are down are kept down and kicked lower. Moral and religious conditions always take their shape and coloring from the political ones. This is why it is that none of the great reform movements have yet penetrated the South. "Anti-ism" is rampant all along the line, selfishness is supreme. I would not be misunderstood here. The South has some of the noblest men and women on earth, hospitable, generous, intellectual, moral, religious, bright and shining lights, but I am dealing with the general trend of Southern institutions, and these are unaltruistical, individualistical, antimissionary, and stagnation broods over them all. The reports of the missionary societies and kindred associations will bear out this statement. I know I will be told that the South is poor, and this is true, and it is likely to remain poor, so long as it does not accept the divine dictum: "The liberal soul shall be made fat: and he that watereth shall be watered also himself. There is that scattereth and yet increases, and there is that withholdeth more than is meet, but it tendeth to poverty." Out of this situation grows the strong anti-expansion sentiment which prevails here. More anon.

Wisconsin Notes.

P. S. Olson, our missionary in Oconto County, has, since the death of Mrs. Olson, resigned his work there. He preached his farewell sermon April 2nd, and the church gave him a reception the evening of the 5th. It is a matter of deep regret, not only to the Oconto County brethren, but also to our state board, that he feels the need of thus terminating his work there, but he wants to keep his family together and it seems that could not well be done at Hickory. His work at the missions has been successful. When he began there five years ago there were but 32 members. There are now 83, and good property at Hickory. The reception tendered him was the largest gathering ever assembled in the church. Bro. Olson has as many friends as there are people in the neighborhood. He has removed to Neenah, his father's home, and may be addressed there, P. O. box 504. The car in which his goods were shipped was wrecked and its contents badly damaged.

F. N. Calvin is making things move in Milwaukee. There have been some additions since he began and they have about $6,000 pledged on the building fund. Bro. Calvin is away this week and I preached for him last Sunday. C. C. Smith, also our first pastor, visited the church and preached for us one Sunday in March. He is always a welcome visitor here.

***

J. H. Berkey reports five baptims at Twin Grove, and one more to be baptized. The union meetings at Monroe have, he says, quickened the spiritual life of the church.

Since I resurrected the church at Lynoxville and organized a Sunday-school there they have been doing well. Charles Newton, the Sunday-school superintendent, writes me that the spiritual condition of the church is better than ever before. The average attendance of the Sunday-school is 35, and increasing. We started with less than 20. He says, "Our opposing friends" (Congregationalists) "say that a tramp came along and organized us into a Sunday-school. We thank the Lord for the tramp and pray send more just such tramps." This church is going to grow.

Our state board has bills now due, aggregating over $200 and an empty treasury. We are in arrears with Bro. Olson, who should be paid up in full at once. Some churches still owe much of their apportionment. Some have paid nothing at all. Some individuals who made pledges at Pardeeville are in arrears. These payments should all be made at once. Send the money to E. M. Pease, treasurer, Richland Center.

Jubilee Notes.

Geo. A. Miller, our secretary (P. O. box 304, Cincinnati, O.), is just back from the "Congress of Disciples" at St. Louis full of praise for the Congress and feeling that all signs point to a great Jubilee in October.

One feature of the Jubilee Convention will be a larger per cent. of business men present, ready to serve on committees and manifest their interest in our missionary work.

A conference of business men will be held on Saturday, Oct 14 at 1 P. M., likely at the Grand Hotel. We shall expect one thousand business men to be present. This movement was begun at Chattanooga where about 25 business men held a conference, etc. S. M. Cooper, of Cincinnati, was elected president and was instructed to make a special effort to bring business men to the Jubilee. The program and all arrangements are in his hands. Ex-Governor Drake will likely preside. Under Mr. Cooper's direction the writer called on Governor Asa Bushnell while in Columbus last Friday, and invited him to make the opening speech.

One of the objects of the coming convention should be to give to the world a just conception of the greatness of the people who would be only Christians.

To this end some of our mottoes should be changed. 10,000 delegates and 100,000 souls for Christ in our Jubilee Year have the right ring, but "$100,000 for Home Missions," and "$150,000 for Foreign Missions," and "$90,000 for C. W. B. M."—these cries are too small to make the music harmonious. If all reach the work it will not be half the money we can raise for missions. Last year we raised over half a million and why not raise the cry of a "Million Dollars for Missions" in our Jubilee Year? This motto is in harmony with others. It has inspiration in it and will let the world know we are trying to do something. Put down the partisan cry and merge all into one grand rally. One of the sweet and helpful things in our Jubilee Convention will be to shake hands with the many missionaries of home and heathen lands.

Several letters from state secretaries this week mark their deep interest. H. W. Elliott, of Kentucky, says: "I rarely ever make an address that I do not mention the convention. I will be glad to do what I can in speaking and writing to further the interest of what I hope will be the greatest convention." Bro. Linkletter is enthusiastic about West Virginia and promises a large delegation from that state.

The writer will attend the Kentucky state convention.

Chairman Jubilee Committee.

At Iola, Kansas.

Last Saturday I left home in Iowa for Southeastern Kansas, where I hope soon to locate. Lord's day was spent with Bro. Klinker at this place. It was a red-letter day at Iola church. For years it seems that this band of Disciples has been struggling, not only against the hatred of sectarianism, but against that other stronghold of Satan, internal strife. The clouds seem to have cleared away and the invigorating beams of theSun of Righteousness to be warming the hearts of the brethren to greater efforts in Christ's vineyard. Bro. Klinker recently moved to this field and already his labors begin to count their results. Last Lord's day, O. L. Cook, our state field superintendent, was here to formally install Bro. Klinker as pastor of this flock. In the morning his address on "the Church at Work" was well received and replete as it was with good council and Christlike spirit; it cannot fail to do good to all who listened with attentive hearts. In the evening a splendid audience was assembled to hear the sermon and witness the installment ceremony which were so ably conducted that all must certainly be impressed with the profound obligation of church and pastor working hand in hand for the salvation of the lost and strengthening of the weak.

Iola is in the recently discovered gas belt, and as a result is having a wonderful growth. The noise of saw and hammer speaks of a growth which it is hoped may be the forerunner of renewed activity and spiritual strength of the army of the living Christ. Already Bro. Klinker has found among those moving in, brethren and sisters whose help will strengthen the church for greater efforts. May God's blessing rest upon the work at Iola. A. L. CRILEY.

Indiana Items.

The church at Bedford is enjoying a season of refreshing. James Small is preaching, and so far 90 souls have turned to Christ. Brother Small held a meeting there a few years ago, and his coming was anticipated with pleasure. Bedford is one of our oldest and best churches, and is at the front in Southern Indiana. Joseph Franklin has been their preacher for over a dozen years, and the church is stronger than ever before.

The ministry of E. O. Tilburn at Washington, Ind., is not to close now. A short time ago he offered his resignation, expecting to serve a church in the Far West. The Washington people, however, would not consent, and exerted every effort and finally succeeded in retaining him. His work there has been altogether successful, and he is easily the best preacher in the city.

It is rumored that D. R. Lucas, of this city, will accept the pastorate of a leading church in Illinois in the near future. Brother Lucas has been so long identified with Indianapolis and Indiana work that he will be greatly missed, not only over the state, but from the counsels of our Indiana brethren.

Mrs. Sallie K. Jones, our efficient state organizer of the C. W. B. M., has been doing splendid work during the series of district conventions, not only in the conventions, but at various points in the several districts, and has organized a number of new auxiliaries.

The district conventions this spring have, on the whole, been the best yet held. The programs have been of unusual interest and have called out the best talent we have ever known in these conventions. There is a growing desire to utilize the talent of the several districts in these meetings. While the addresses and counsel of the representatives of our several lines of missionary work are highly appreciated, there is a growing feeling that the preachers and the workers of the district should use the greater part of the time. This is a matter of congratulation.

Prof. W. E. M. Hackleman has just returned from the Congress of the Disciples of St. Louis, where he led the music. He will lead the singing at the Christian Endeavor convention at Darlington this week. He will also conduct the music at the state convention at Irvington. E. B. SCOFIELD.

S. W. Iowa District Convention.

The southwest district of the Iowa Christian convention held its sixth annual meeting at Red Oak April 24-27.

The convention opened Monday with an address on "True Religion" by C. H. White, district president.

Tuesday was the C. W. B. M. session. It was rife with the spirit of love and growth in the Master's work.

Mrs. C. E. Hockett, of Red Oak, bade us a hearty welcome and led in the devotional services. Later in the day Bro. and Sister Hockett received word that their son was among the wounded at Manila.

Mrs. J. J. Beck, of Kellerton, pictured the condition of the work with a map of the district. She showed us that where we have a good C. W. B. M. all of the different missionary collections are remembered, but where we have no auxiliary some of these calls pass unheeded.

Miss Annette Newcomer talked to us of the needs of our state and showed us how much it took to accomplish what we are doing.

Mrs. A. R. Caudle took us on an imaginary tour of our mission fields, but brought us home in time to hear Mrs. Kelley's address on "Our Bible Chair Work."

Wednesday was the general church program. C. E. Wells gave an address on "Church Organization," which will be published by request of the convention.

B. S. Denny then talked to us of co-operation. On his map he had one county-seat in our district—Greenfield—without a Christian Church. We resolved to erase this black spot from Bro. Denny's map, and at our business session we raised $104 for a meeting at Greenfield and made Bro. Denny happy. If you were not there to have a hand in this, send your contribution to Wm. Orr, of Clarinda.

The discussion of church finance was interesting and wide-awake.

W. B. Crewdson gave an address on "Church Discipline" which called forth a lively discussion.

In the evening D. D. Burt, of Omaha, spoke to us upon Matt. 28:19.

Thursday morning we had an early prayer-meeting. Many responded to Bro. Orr's invitation to come and for a little while be "alone with God." I cannot tell you how precious that hour was.

The forenoon was devoted to the discussion of Bible-school work and the afternoon to Endeavor work. It did our souls good to hear our young men take such a decided stand for temperance. But as some one said, "Our arms are longer than our tongues, so must our deeds be greater than mere words."

In the evening D. A. Wickizer spoke to the Endeavorers. He pictured the fields white for the harvest, and urged us, trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, to "go up and possess the land."

Miss Alice Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Harrington and Mr. Landrum added greatly to our convention by singing beautiful solos and leading in song services. OLLA B. SELLARDS.

To the Dispersed Disciples in Utah.

Scattered throughout Utah and adjoining territory are hundreds of members of the Christian Church who are destitute of any religious home other than that afforded by the organizations of other religious bodies. I have a proposition to urge upon all such. It is to place their membership with the church in Salt Lake City. It is the fountain which if filled with the fullness with which these scattered members could fill it, would flow out over all this destitute region, carrying a blessing to each individual contributing to it, to say nothing of the hundreds of others who would thus be brought under under its influence. Some of the benefits flowing from such a course may be enumerated as follows:

1. It would locate these scattered Disciples so that their whereabouts would be known to some organization which, for them, is a matter of no little importance.

2. It would give them vital connection with their own people, thus keeping alive their interest in our plea for the restoration of primitive Christianity and making them active factors in the furtherance of the cause of the Current Reformation.

3. They would be doing missionary work in their own interest. Salt Lake City is the center from which must flow out the gospel to adjacent regions. He who gives to the support of the church at Salt Lake, gives for the furtherance of the gospel in all this region. As a missionary enterprise, of which you will be the beneficiaries at no distant day, become members of and contributors to the work in the capital city. This ought to appeal to every man and woman who is interested at all in seeing our cause planted in this region.

4. To be in touch with Salt Lake is to be in touch with the source from which you can receive help in your own community when you are ready to use it. Communication necessarily precedes evangelization.

5. If all the members of the church who live in Utah would become supporters of the work in Salt Lake City, it would be possible to employ an evangelist to visit outlying districts and give the scattered ones the benefit of religious instruction.

Let all members of the church under whose eyes this may fall send their letters at once to the undersigned and become members of the congregation here. In your own interest and in the interest of the cause of Christ in this destitute region you are urged to do this. Who will be the first to respond?

Missouri Mission Notes.

I am happy to say that the following railroads have granted a rate of one fare for the round trip; tickets on sale June 12, 13, 14, and good to return to your homes until and including June 16: Port Arthur Route, Ft. Scott and Memphis, Rock Island, Santa Fe, Burlington, Missouri Pacific and Wabash. I hope to announce Frisco, M. K. & T. and Chicago & Alton in the next issue. Now, then, this is the best the railroads have done for years. They have been exceedingly kind in granting the rate for which we have asked, and it was only by the making of some large promises in regard to attendance that it was done at all. Will you not show your appreciation of this kindness on the part of the railroads by rolling up the largest attendance for years? Let us have the very largest convention that has ever been held by our Bible-school and Endeavor forces. Get up a regular old-fashioned rally of all the workers everywhere.

The last board meeting showed good reports by the workers in the field. The men are taking hold of the work for this year in a way that shows they mean to make it a great one for Christ and the church. I believe that it would be a splendid education for many if they could be at one of these meetings of the board and hear the reports of these faithful men, and know how they were sacrificing for Jesus' sake. I am sure, also, that it would be helpful if all could hear the letters read, that come asking for help in the proclamation of the gospel of Christ, and certainly no man could know that to each one now we have to say, "We can't help you; our treasury is empty," without the resolution being born in his soul that he would help in this worthy and needy work.

I have just sent out a letter to each of the county superintendents, asking for their co-operation. I hope I shall get more answers than I have from the ministers to whom letters were sent. I did not know before that so many of our preachers could not write. It surely must be that, for common courtesy would call for an answer to a letter, when it was asked for. A letter to all the churches which have not paid anything to state work is being prepared, and we have strong hopes of enlisting a great many. A literature of state missions is also in course of preparation, and if you want to get full of the needs of state missions, if you want to move your people to help in this work, send to us for a supply and we will see that you have a sufficiency for each member of the congregation.

Thus we are more ready for business in state missions than ever before, and it shall not be the fault of this end of the line if we do not have the greatest year's work that has ever been done. Foreign Missions day has passed, the jubilee collection has been taken—now for state missions. Give us the right of way and help us answer some of these urgent calls.

A WORTHY DEED.

The board has just received a check for $200 from the church at Bowling Green, Mo. This makes $220 which they have paid this year. Years ago this church was helped by the state board and placed upon its feet, and they have been contributing to its funds ever since—$40 per year—but now they come in this generous way and put back into the treasury this sum to go on blessing some other place where the gospel is needed. This surely is a worthy deed, but you can expect always that generous deeds shall be done by any congregation in which are found such generous souls as Judge Caldwell and W. F. Mayhall. God knows the money is needed. There are members of churches in the state which have been brought into existence by the state mission forces, and some of them, I am sorry to say, contribute not one cent to its funds. Let this mind be in you which was also in the brethren and we shall indeed praise God.

Yours in His name, T. A. ABBOTT.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Good reports continue coming in from the Award of Merit cards, several of the schools ordering others this week, and they were very gladly accommodated.

At Rosendale, found the church in active service under that prince of men, T. W. Cottingham, and the results were a glad surprise to all, being over 40 additions to the church, with a general upbuilding of all departments, as is always the the case. Alvah Pettijohn, our Andrew county superintendent, is one that aims for success, and this year wants a report from every school in the county, and also that every school shall meet its apportionment, and he will succeed.

At Bolckow, found some of the best friends in all my work awaiting my coming, others, just as true, not able to leave their homes. J. T. Owens is their minister, and he gives time and thought to the establishment of the work where he labors, while Brethren Dunn and Woods were doing all possible under the circumstances to help him in his efforts. The younger men are coming to the front and I was glad to note it, and it should be so.

In Wright, near Duncan, is "the Sixteenth Section Church," and here my brother, E. B. Wood, has done good work, resulting in a new Bible-school as well as the congregation and the meeting house, which is to follow, and this is one of the best neighborhoods in all that country, so that the prospect is very bright for a first-class congregation, and I am glad our servant was with them.

Bro. Giddens sought to put new life into the church at Lockwood and to revive their drooping spirits, and am glad to chronicle that he did fine with them and that they will take up the work afresh.

At Maryville, for the first time, I spent a Sunday morning, looking in on the school which has so long stood at the head of the class in its offerings to Foreign Missions. They gave about $85 for the Easter offering to the Orphans' Home, and they gave $137.60 to Foreign Missions last year. Dr. Ellis is their superintendent, and busy with his immense practice as he is, his heart is so in this good work that he never fails being present if possible, while Miss Hattie A. Graves keeps the records right up to date, and everything about the school is indicative of systematic push on the part of all. E. C. Lawrence, the minister, is commander-in-chief of the army, and is leading it to wondrous victories in the Christ, and he promises that the day will come when the school will be right in the lead in our work, and I believe it. This church gives nearly as much for missions as for the home work, about $1,900 for home and $1,700 for missions.

At Cedar Springs John Giddens did more good work in a new Bible-school with 40 pupils and which they intend to push to 75 before summer.

Let me tell you of a farmer with only his farm of 120 acres and he gives $100 for preaching, his son with his little store gives $100, a brother and son owning only a thresher and wood-saw together, giving $50 each. All this is at New Point, and the men are A. Hardman, B. W. Hardman and two other Hardmans. Good kind of hardmen there, with Geo. E. Dew, who always helps me, their preacher.

Galloway is where Bro. Yokley labored and helped the brethren, while in this work, and they are now building, and yet sent an offering to our work, and I thought it right to tell on them. Will not others do us the same way?

Our aim is now 50 new schools by the June convention, and every one is importuned to help us and keep the men where this can be done by remitting all dues.

Kindly permit a voice from the West to be heard in your columns. I came to this place just four months ago from Kirksville, Ky., and found the work very much "run down," the causes for this state of affairs being several. We went to work immediately upon our arrival, and the success which has crowned our labors has been rather phenomenal. We have a membership of something over a hundred, and in this number are to be found some very faithful and efficient workers. I delight especially in the strength of our official board, six numbers of which have been elected and ordained since my advent. Our Ladies' Aid Society is also a joy, it being a well-organized, thoroughly active body, alive to every opportunity for doing good. It is largely due to its efforts that just two weeks ago our little church was completed. Be it said, however, to the credit of the entire membership, that we now have decidedly the prettiest church in Amarillo, although there are four other church buildings in town. The members of our church here are very liberal, and have a deep interest in all of our missionary and charitable enterprises. Last night, with home forces, we closed what was in some respects the most remarkable meeting we ever held. God only knows the amount of good which has been done, for the pure, simple gospel has aroused the thinking people of this place, and many have been the consequent good-natured discussions provoked. Last night after two weeks of hard preaching our meeting closed. Scores of people were turned away. We preached according to previous announcement on "the commission," and succeeded in raising our apportionment for Foreign Missions. A very happy way, I think, to have closed the meeting. We also had a very impressive communion service, and after this seven candidates for baptism were immersed, two of these having come to us from the denominations. There were eight additions in all. Every Disciple here is happy, and we predict for ourselves a bright future. I am glad I came to this field. There is especial joy in service where one knows that his efforts are appreciated. My brethren here are standing by me, and when I do or say anything which they like, they don't hesitate to tell me about it. How many are the sad-hearted preachers who go to their homes on Sunday night, after the benediction has been pronounced on the day's labor, made sad-hearted because of a lack of appreciation manifested by their congregations.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST comes to me each week, and it is always thoroughly read and enjoyed. R. B. BRINEY.

Reverberations and Echoes from the Jubilee Offering.

The returns up to noon Monday for the Jubilee offering for Home Missions are very encouraging. While it rained in many places, yet the collections as far as reported indicate a great gain, as the following reports will indicate:

Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, O.—"The offering for Home Missions is $410, with more to follow. Last year the offering was $195."—J. Z. TYLER.

Buffalo, N. Y., Richmond Avenue Church.—"Offering $105. More to follow. Canvass not completed."—LLOYD DARSIE.

Richmond, Va., Seventh Street Church.—"Offering $300. Benj. L. Smith with us. Last year the offering for Home Missions was $50."—W. G. MAURY.

Lake Charles, La.—"Seventy dollars for Home Missions—nearly treble last year."—L. A. DALE.

Frankfort, Ky.—"The day is wet and forbidding, but we make an offer of $400 for the Jubilee Year of general Home Missions, the largest of our history."—GEORGE DARSIE.

Palmyra, Mo.—"Raised $61. More to come. Yours for a great Jubilee."—L. J. MARSHALL.

Newport, Ky.—"Apportionment cheerfully raised."—RORT. T. MATHEWS.

Connersville, Ind.—"The Connersville Church has raised $100 for Home Missions. It will be more when all is in, I am sure. We had a glorious service this morning. Our church was beautifully and patriotically decorated with flags, bunting and flowers. The music was patriotic and inspiring. The collection was very general. All gave. I mean a majority gave. We are all happy over the result."—GEO. DARSIE, JR.

Durant, Mississippi.—"Inclosed find six dollars for Home Missions. We have six members here.—WALTER GRAYE HARBIN."

Allegheny, Pa., First Church.—"The offering at the Allegheny Church will reach $700, the largest offering ever taken for missions in the church. W. F. Cowden was here."

Norfolk, Va.—"We took the offering for General Missions and secured our apportionment, $50. The offering last year, for Home Missions from Norfolk was $19.26."—W. F. SMITH.

East End, Pittsburg.—"Our offering will probably reach $300. Benj. L. Smith was with us this year. Last year it was $150."—T. E. CRAMBLET.

Springfield, Illinois.—"The offering will be about $245. Last year $162."—J. E. LYNN.

Cincinnati, O., Central Church.—"The offering of the Central Church, Cincinnati, for the Jubilee of the American Christian Missionary Society was $700, $500 of this was in special Jubilee pledges."—A. M. HARVOUT.

Cincinnati, O., Walnut Hills.—"Our Jubilee Offering will reach $609, $500 of this sum was on special Jubilee pledges of $100 each. P. Y. Pendleton took the offering."

St. Louis, Mo., Central Church.—"Central Church offering $650."—F. G. TYRRELL.

Topeka, Kan.—"First Church send all you ask and will double last year's offering."—M. E. HARLAN.

Wabash, Ind.—"Our last year's offering doubled, notwithstanding very inclement weather."—EARLE WILFLEY.

Wilmington, O.—"Cash and pledges to date $28. Will probably reach $50."

Fifth Street Church, Covington, Ky.—"Raised $103 in spite of rain, and more to follow. Will continue canvass next Sunday."

"Flemingsburg, Ky., gives one hundred dollars to Home Missions this Jubilee year."—W. S. WILLIS.

Central Church, Pittsburg, Pa.—"Central's collection for Home Missions $50. Offering last year $7.45."

An Object-lesson in City Evangelization.

Lord's day, April 2nd, the Branch Chapel of the 169th Street Church of the Disciples of Christ, for which Bro. S. T. Willis ministers, was dedicated to the worship of God and the extension of the work of Christ in Greater New York. It is located on Southern Boulevard, near Howe St., a pioneer movement in a new and growing community.

The work is the outgrowth of Bro. Willis' own evangelistic and far-seeing spirit, in which he has been nobly seconded by a sturdy body of loyal, consecrated Christians. The Branch was publicly opened Dec. 15th, 1895, in a rented storeroom, with a school of twenty scholars, superintended from the first by the pastor. They have now enrolled 175 scholars, and had 150 in attendance last Lord's day. The Friday night following the opening of the school a prayer-meeting was started and has continued weekly.

About a year ago the subject of a chapel began to be agitated, resulting in the erection of the present building, on leased ground, at a cost of some $1,200, very nearly all provided for.

It is not the purpose to effect a church organization at once, but wise plan and preparation are moving toward the time when another Christian Church may be opened in this great and needy city. It is along such lines as this that the taking of the cities must be worked out. Let each self-supporting church select accessible and strategic points, one or more according to talent and financial ability, where schools may be planted, first as feeders for the home church, then as centres whence the gospel message may permeate the homes preparatory to the permanent organization, sure to be demanded when the Word has been properly taught.

The cities are not to be taken quickly or easily, but if they are systematically mined with Lord's day schools, judiciously established and faithfully fostered, the next ten or twenty years will see a transformation in our position in the great centres of population.

Our Plea and the Destruction of Anarchy.

Every patriot in our land is jealous for the perpetuity of our noble laws and institutions. No thoughtful citizen can view the growth of anarchy in our country without alarm. If the disciples of the red flag triumph, the liberty and enlightenment bequeathed us by the fathers of the nation will perish.

But the chief menace comes not from the open abvocates of anarch. Rather is it found in that large and growing class of apparently respectable citizens that disregard all laws that seem inconvenient to them. These are the people who make possible lax and corrupt officials, who violate liquor laws and Sunday ordinances. These are the ones that undermine the majesty of the law and teach their children to do so. And it is such incipient anarchy that threatens to involve our splendid republic in ruin.

Our righteous laws need to be buttressed by all the mighty sanctions of religion. The gospel of greed and self-gratification will never prompt our citizens to obey all laws for the sake of the common good. The people must be lifted to the noblest conception of the divinity of civil authority by being taught to acknowledge divine authority. When they learn to reverence the Ruler of the universe they will respect the powers that be, which are ordained of God.

Now the weak point of Protestantism is its lack of respect for authority. While professing to acknowledge Christ as Ruler, and the New Testament as the authorative expression of his will, it reserves the right practically to dethrone that Ruler and transgress that authority at its own good pleasure. It has learned to distinguish between essential and nonessential laws; it has presumed to set aside the Master's ordinances and will at the behests of convenience and common sense. In the main it is manifesting the same temper towards the laws of God that multitudes of citizens are showing in regard to the laws of the land—obedience in so far as it seems convenient and reasonoble, but beyond that, anarchy. Manifestly, such religion will develop rather than destroy the dangerous spirit that is rife in our land.

Is there not, therefore, need of proclaiming throughout all the borders that plea which calls for unquestioning obedience to all divine laws? The gospel for an age of anarchy is the gospel that makes no discrimination of laws into essential and nonessential, that obeys whether it is convenient or not, that presumes not to put individual reason above the wisdom of the Lawgiver. Surely, one of the best ways to serve our fair land, one of the most potent means to employ for the correction of all lawlessness, is the planting of a New Testament church in every community. Those taught to obey the Christ implicitly will easily learn to give like obedience to the civil rulers who are God's representatives on earth. Patriotism demands what Christ commands—the taking of this land by the pure and simple gospel. Help the A. C. M. S. to do this.

Arkansas Mission Work.

Last month, April, organized Christian Endeavor at Roe, with 32 members, an auxiliary to C. W. B. M. with five members. One confession and two additions to church. Newly organized church, new house and exerting an excellent influence.

Bro. A. G. Hubbard, now at Roe, has been mainly instrumental, with a few consecrated souls, in building up this work. Bro. Wyatt has resigned the work at Mena; it must be looked after. Bro. Freeman has taken the work at Springdale, temporarily, but we hope it will be permanent.

Brother Kincaid is pushing things at Hot Springs.

Bro. Clark is again in the field after temporary suspension on account of sickness.

Churches in Arkansas, please remember that if you do not take the collection for Home Missions the first Sunday in May, it will be in order to take it during the month and add to it any time.

The three things that Arkansas Disciples should make a specialty of during the month are large collections for Home Missions, prompt payment and increased contributions for Arkansas work, and a large, enthusiastic and business like convention at Hot Springs, June 6-8. Customary reductions (cost not more than one and one-third fares for round trip) is assured. Send name to T. N. Kincaid, Hot Springs, and be sure to be present Tuesday night. If possible, send unpaid pledges to treasurer or corresponding secretary.

UTAH.

Salt Lake City, May 1.—Two confessions yesterday.—W. H. BAGBY.

MONTANA.

Hamilton. — Seventeen added at this and other places since January; F. F. GRIM.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis, April 28.—There were two additions at North Park Church on last Lord's day.—J. M. CANFIELD.

OREGON.

Corvallis, April 26.—One confession and baptism here last Lord's day, making 15 additions since taking the work here.—L. F. STEPHENS.

NEBRASKA.

Ashland, April 28.—Just closed two weeks' meeting at Plainview; 18 additions were the visible fruits. One from the Catholics and two from Universalists.—SAMUEL GREGG.

VIRGINIA.

Danville, May 6.—I have just closed a 10 days' meeting at Rural Hall, N. C., which resulted in 19 additions; 17 by confession and baptism and two otherwise. Also dedicated new house of worship and organized a congregation of about 30 members.—F. M. ANDERSON.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Braddock.—A two weeks' meeting beginning April 7, 1899, resulted in 32 additions; 26 of these were byconfession and baptism. Eight pastors in near-by churches kindly assisted. It was a most successful co-operation meeting. We have passed the one hundred thoussnd soul line.—O. H. PHILLIPS, pastor.

VIRGINIA.

Clifton Forge.—The Lynchburg meeting is a thing of the past. The house was too small for the audiences. A move is on foot to build a new one. The church is stirred; 12 confessed Christ, two came from the Baptists, two added by statement and many were reclaimed. Pastor Lilly is a strong man and is doing a good work. This is my third meeting there.—W. H. BOOK.

IDAHO.

Payette, April 28—Meeting here starts out very well. We now have 27 who are desireous of forming an organization with no creed but Christ and no book but the Bible. We have only four or five strong churches in this state. We hope to have a good, strong church here before we leave. I am prepared to hold meetings anywhere in the United States; can furnish a singer or come alone.—LAWRENCE WRIGHT.

KENTUCKY.

Mayfield, May 1.—Meeting closed Wednesday night. Four more confessions yesterday. Baptisms 26; total added 42. W. H. Sheffer, Union City, Tenn., did the preaching.—J. W. HARDY.

Chilesburg, May 1.—Yesterday (April 30th) we had three confessions at Athens Christian Church, Athens, Ky. Our report to date from Jan. 1st is five by letter, one from Baptists and the three above mentioned; total, nine.—R. H. LAMPKIN.

FLORIDA.

Jacksonville, April 27.—The Martin meeting is growing in interest and results. It is proving the greatest religious demonstration ever known in this city. The town has been stirred from centre to circumference. The tabernacle cannot hold the people during the week nights that come to hear. The carpenters are at work to day enlarging the place so that we can take in several hundred more Sunday. The meeting has been in progress 11 days and there have been 25 additions. A glorious result seems certain.—RUFUS A. RUSSELL.

ARKANSAS.

Rogers, May 1.—Our minister, Willis F. Jordan, and Prof. C. M. Hughes, of Lexington, Ky., began a meeting here April 2. Bro. Hughes left April 21, and Bro. Jordan continued until last night. Results: 37 additions; by letter and statement 18, from the denominations 10, from the world nine. This makes 67 additions to the church here since Dec. 15, '98, under Bro. Jordan's preaching.—T. J. KELLER.

Pine Bluff, May 5.—Just home from a 10 days' meeting at Dumas, resulting in organizing a church with a nucleus of 12 members, I think of splendid material. Bro. Breedlove will preach for them monthly. Hereafter I expect our people to be first in their influence for good at Dumas.—S. W. CRUTCHER.

Christian S. S. Literature

WHY USE IT?

For the same reason that Christian Churches employ Christian preachers. Preachers are instructors, but not more so than the literature placed in the hands of the children. If first impressions are most lasting, would it not be safer to put sectarian preachers in our pulpits than sectarian literature in our Sunday-schools?

Sunday-school instruction should be in harmony with the teaching of the Bible. The literature published by the Christian Publishing Company is sound to the core, and proclaims the Old Jerusalem Gospel in all its simplicity and purity.

ILLINIOS.

Salem.—Two more added to the congregation since my last report.—G. HALLECK ROWE, pastor.

Belle Plaine, April 23.—One young man made the confession here to-day.—J. N. LESTER.

Mozier, May 1.—Begin my fifth year at Independence next month. Church there and here growing in grace and numbers. Both very happy fields to work in. Children's Day a grand success at both places annually.—J. M. BOVEE.

Benton, May 4.—Our meeting here is being well attended. C. A. Burton took charge of the work the first of the year, and is already in the hearts of the people. They showed their appreciation of him and his family last week by a donation party. I can assist church or evangelist in a meeting, beginning about the fourth Sunday or sooner. Write me here.—C. M. HUGHES.

IOWA.

Charles City, May 2.—Two by letter; two additions at regular services April 30.—F. L. DAVIS.

Ames, April 30.—We report for April, four added by baptism and five by letter. On April 19 the church gave a reception to the pastor and his wife, which was attended by a large number from town and the Iowa State College of Agriculture.—JAMES R. MCINTIRE.

Irwin, May 1.—Bro. D. H. Bays has resigned his work here on account of poor health and gone to his home in Battle Creek, Mich., leaving Irwin without a preacher. We regret very much to give him up, as he was very much liked and his work here was prospering nicely. He closed his services with a good audience, and an old gentleman 65 came forward and made the good confession.—J. W. KNIGHT.

Fontanelle. — Four added recently, F. A. Sheetz, of Drake University, preaching.

Oskaloosa.—Four added on April 30th, A. E. Cory preaching.

MISSOURI.

Rockport, April 29.—On last Lord's day several of our best workers visited the county farm of Atchison County and established a mission Bible-school, which was named "Grace Mission," in honor of Sister Grace Bartholomew, who was elected superintendent of the same. The writer will speak there twice a month in the afternoons.—S. W. GLASCOCK.

Cameron, May 1.—Three additions to the church yesterday; one in the morning, two in the evening.—S. J. WHITE.

Joplin, May 3.—My report for three months, ending April 20th, 1899, at Mena, Ark., shows: Additions 16, sermons 24, visits 252, funerals two, money for all purposes raised about $87, all services well attended, marked increase in all departments. Resigned March 22, effective April 22. Am open for engagements, either as evangelist or pastor. Joplin will be my address.—FREDERICK F. WYATT.

Columbia's Motto.

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

From Liberty's uplifted hand
New light seems shed upon our land—
New light whose penetrating rays
Reach distant shores and future days.

The lofty purpose which unfurled
Old Glory's colors to the world,
Has led that banner's conquering host
To lands that needs its message most.

Not freedom only, but the birth
Of better precepts for the earth
That message means: for all men see
How generous may victors be.

Time into triumph turns defeat,
Where progress follows victory's feet.
Across Columbia's sword is writ:
"We conquer but to benefit."

THE EVOLUTION OF A PASTOR;

Or, Elder Bruce's Experiences at Eastville.

BY A. A. HONEYWELL.

CHAPTER IV.

Bros. Brown and Olds were pleased to accept Elder Brune's invitation to tea, as it would give them an opportunity to make a few suggestions, which the condition of affairs seemed to require.

"Good evening, brethren; a pleasant evening to you."

"Good evening," replied Bro. Brown.

"Good evening," echoed Bro. Olds.

"Just take off your overcoats and hats and warm yourself by the fire; you must be cold."

"Not at all," replied Bro. Brown, "we walked so briskly from the store—we had met for a little consultation—that we have not felt the cold."

"Good evening," said Mrs. Brune, coming in from the kitchen a few moments later, where she had been hastening supper. "We are pleased to have you with us this evening, and as tea is ready we will proceed immediately to the dining room where we can spend the time in a social way as well as in here I trust."

"Yes," continued the Elder, "just come out to the dining room; our duties there will not be difficult, for my wife believes in light suppers." The conversation thus passed from weather to supper and kindred subjects until tea was over with and all were comfortably seated in the sitting room, when Bro. Brown thought best to approach the subject at hand. Elder and, Mrs. Brune had been so hospitable and pleasant that Bro. Brown hardly knew how to begin without being rude. Elder Brune however, opened the way by remarking, "I have felt quite disappointed with our recent meeting. I have been in quite a goodly number of meetings, but this was the coldest and least spiritual that I have ever attended."

"We are agreed on that point," replied Bro. Brown. "Bro Olds and myself have been discussing the situation and feel considerably disatisfied with the way things are going. In fact, we cannot see that the church is prospering any better than before we secured the services of yourself as evangelist. Somehow we very much fear that our church and evangelist are not fully suited to each other?"

"Perhaps it would have been better to have called a pastor instead of hiring an evangelist," responded Elder Brune. "I know from my own experience that I have always succeeded fairly well asa pastor, but will agree with you that as a hired man I am a failure. I think the lack of suitability is not between myself and the church, but between myself and office, or rather lack of office. Have you considered this point as well as the other?"

Bro. Brown.—Well—no—in fact we—hem—Bro. Olds and myself thought the situation required a change.

Elder Brune.—And so do I. We are all agreed that the experiment of the last four months is a failure. The question to determine is where the failure lies. It certainly is not in the gospel, for the promise is given, "My word shall not return unto me void; but it shall accomplish that which I please and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it." The purpose for which it is sent is clearly to "convict the world of sin, righteousness and judgment to come" and convincing them to turn them from darkness to light." It would be doubting God's Word, therefore, to say that the gospel was powerless to convert the sinners of Eastville. The trouble is clearly, therefore, not in the gospel.

Bro. Brown.—It may be Bro. Olds and myself are at fault, but we have tried to do our duty faithfully. I think I have never labored harder than during the last four months.

Elder Brune.—I am perfectly willing to admit that you have done your duty as you saw it in a very thorough manner while my own labors have been the heaviest I have ever experienced, but the Scriptures speak of a "zeal not according to knowledge," which is ineffective. Can it not be that the manner in which we have been laboring has been the cause of our lack of success?

Bro. Olds.—How can there be any mistake in method?

Elder Brune.—I have reference to the position which I occupy as an employee, without liberty of action. I am compelled to fight in "Saul's armor," which is not suited to my body, and I am confident that I can never do good work until I can do as did David of old. Go forth to the fight in my own accustomed way without the trappings of authority to hinder me.

Bro. Brown.—But the Scriptures speak positively of elders and we are simply carrying out the Scripture on this point. You would not have us disregard the Scripture, would you?

Elder Brune.—Certainly not, but I am sure after making a careful study of the subject that you have come to a wrong conclusion as to the teaching of Holy Writ on this theme. I suggest that we study the subject together and ascertain the truth of the matter.

Bro. Brown.—I am willing if Bro. Olds is, but I do not think you can show that we are mistaken.

Bro. Olds.—I am willing—not but what I am satisfied for my self, but I think Bro. Brune will be better satisfied after seeing that he is mistaken.

Elder Brune.—Let us begin to-night. We will take up the names elder, bishop, overseer, pastor and evangelist, and see what they designate in the Bible. We can take up our concordance and follow the references given there, or as many as we wish.

Here is a Bible, Bro. Brown,and here another, Bro. Olds. Let us turn to Ex. 24:1. Bro. Brown, will you read?

Bro. Brown.—"And he said unto Moses, Come up unto the Lord, thou and Aaron, Nabad and Abihu and seventy of the elders of Israel and worship ye afar off."

Elder Brune.—These elders were evidently officials who exercised authority of some kind as is shown in Numbers 11:16. Bro. Olds, will you read?

Bro. Olds.—"And the Lord said unto Moses, gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel whom thou knowest to be elders of the people and officers over them and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation that they may stand there with thee."

Elder Brune.—I will read the next verse: "And I will come down and talk with thee there and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee and will put it upon them and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone. Bro. Brown, will you read Deut. 31:28?

Bro. Brown.—"Gather unto me all the eldres of your tribes and your officers, that I may speak these words in their ears and call heaven and earth to record against them."

Bro. Olds.—We find in I. Sam. 16:4 these words: "And Samuel did that which the Lord spake and came to Bethlehem and the elders of the town trembled at his coming and said, Comest thou peaceably?"

Elder Brune.—Under the Jewish economy the elders seem to be officers as in the case of the seventy referred to in Num. 11:16 and representatives of the people as referred to in Deut. 31:28, whose authority is undefined and extended to all matters concerning the public weal. They also acted as local magistrates in the provincial towns where their duty was to sit at the gate and administer justice (Deut. 19:12; Ruth 4:9, 11; 1 Kings 21:8).

They retained their position under all the political changes of the Jewish nation. Under the judges (Judges 2:7); under the kings (2 Sam. 17:4); during the captivity (Jer. 29:1), and afterwards (Ez. 5:5; 6:7, 14; 10:8, 14) and even under the Maccabees, where they are sometimes described as the senate and lastly we find them at the beginning of the Christian era, where they are spoken of as a distinct body from the Ssnhedrim (Luke 22:66; Acts 22:5). We could hardly suppose that the office of elder in the church was borrowed from that office under the Jewish economy?

Bro. Brown.—No, I think not, though I think the term would not have been used unless there was some authority attached to the office. The Jewish elders were men in authority and to the Jewish Christians the idea of authority would naturally be associated with the office.

Bro. Olds.—Their authority seemed to be political rather than religious.

Elder Brune.—We had better, perhaps, learn what we can of the Christan elders and then we can compare them better.

Bro. Olds.—Yes, I think that would be the better way.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Birth of Christ.

BY GRACE PEARL BRONAUGH.

Christ was not born within a palace gate;
No cloth of purple wore he, delicate
And costly. And the glorious star did bring
The shepherds to no princely halls. The thing
Did come to pass within a stable, late
In the night watches. They who did await Sad Israel's consolation—not the great—
Only the wise and just did know their King,
When Christ was born!

Where shall His Spirit come, to what high estate?
Not to the haughty heart nor obdurate,
But in the lowly heart the angels sing
Their glad hosannas to the new-born King;
Unto the humble heart—O, happy fate—
The Christ is born!

A Coward's Heroism.

The walk to school was a pleasant one. Helen sang softly to herself as she swung along the shaded country road with her bag of schoolbooks swaying to and fro on her arm like a great pendulum of knowledge. At the corner Leonard Green joined her, as usual. That was one reason why the walk to school was a pleasant one. Helen and Leonard like one another thoroughly, and with pure schoolboy and girl frankness.

"Hello! I exbected to miss you to-day," cried Leonard. "I had to wait for Aunt Kitty to finish a letter.

"And I had to wait to wash the dishes," said Helen. "It was Mildred's turn to do them; but she began by scalding her hand, poor child, so I had to stop and finish them after I had made the beds. You know we take turns."

"My! Wish I had a brother to take turns with me!"

"Yes, but you would have to share your pleasures, too. How would you like to take turns on your trips to the city? How would you like continually to be taking your choice between some pleasure and the overwhelming blessedness of generosity? Say! How would you always like to feel you must either give up the best end of a thing or else make your brother give it up? H'm?" asked Helen, nodding her head merrily.

"Well, that would be Dobbin's choice," admitted Leonard; "but perhaps we could both go together sometimes. And a thing is alway more fun when there is another fellow along. Why! what does this mean?" For, chatting carelessly along, they had, in turning a corner, come directly upon a large sign which blocked the road:

"Dangerous passing!
This road is closed for repairs."

"It evidently means they are repairing the old red bridge that they've been talking about so long," said Helen. "But let's go on! They can't have torn it all up so early in the day, and it a mile farther around the other way.

"It'll be a mile and a half if we go clear to the bridge and then have to go back."

"But I shan't go back if there is a single plank to cross on!" declared Helen, merrily.

"Then, certainly, we would better take the other road, so you won't be tempted to run too great a risk," said Leonard.

"H'm!" sniffed Helen. "If I'm not afraid, you needn't be a coward for me! Come on!" The voice was imperative, and the tone scornful. Leonard knew it would be wiser to obey the warning on the signboard, but Helen's scorn provoked him to walk on with her.

"There!" cried the girl, when they came in sight of the old red bridge. "There are the men at work on the bridge. And see! There are plank,s all the way across!"

"Shore now, Missy. them planks ain't nothin' but ihe rotten lining," said the foreman. "I wouldn't warrant them to bear up under a cat.

Helen went up and tried the end plank boldly with a determined little foot.

"Shore, Missy, they mayn't be that strong all the way across," said the man, dropping his iron and coming toward her. "Ye'd best not try another."

For answer Helen gave a bright little laugh, and slipping away from all detaining hands, sprang from board to board as lightly as a sunbeam, until she stood on the firm ground at the south end of the bridge. Then she turned and laughed at their frightened faces.

"Now, Leonard, show your courage!"

"No, no!" cried the man, hastening to prevent, by force, if need be, this foolhardy attempt. "The lad weighs fifty pounds more. He shall not try it!"

"But the boards did not even bend or crack," said Helen. "They are as firm as they were last week when tons of hay came over—only the top planks off. Come on, Leonard, or you will be late for school, and I shall tell them all it was because you were such a 'fraid-cat.' Come on!"

"If ye step one fut on that bridge, I wash my hands of all consequences," said the foreman.

"Come on," laughed Helen, "if you are not a coward."

Leonard set his lips firmly. A dare is one of the greatest temptations a boy can meet. The boy who can be brave and strong enough to risk a dare is safe in all manner of temptations. Evil can scarcely reach one clothed with the invulnerable mail of courage to appear a coward for wisdom's sake.

"Shall I run half-way to help you?" laughed the sweet, taunting voice.

"No!" shouted Leonard. "I will not run such a risk for the mere nonsense of showing my nerve. I should be ashamed to do it. I will not come one step!"

"Yes, you will!" cried Helen, piqued now to show the strength of her influence over him. "Come, little boy!" she laughed teasingly, as she tripped lightly back over the blackened boards. "Come to school with"—

A crack, a crash! a scream of terror! The next instant Helen was hanging by her dress and one arm to the beam just below where a treacherous board had broken and let her through. She tried to secure her balance and climb back, but the catching of her dress which saved her from being plunged into the swift-flowing river below now held her so securely that she was helpless.

"Arrah! Arrah!" cried the men, wringing their hands in dismay. "Run for the ladder! It'll niver do fer any man to venture on them rotten boards, which even that light little creature couldn't go! Run for a ladder or a boat!"

"She'll drop afore ye could get either," muttered another, peering over at Helen's ashen face.

"Give me that rope!" cried Leonard, with unflinching eyes.

One of the men handed it up automatically. To obey such a spirit was instinctive.

"Shore, ye mustn't go a step onter the bridge, or we'll hev two o' ye in the fix," whispered the foreman, hoarsely.

"Hold this end! Strong now! Pass it around that tree!" commanded Leonard, and without a moment's hesitation he began to creep cautiously over the skeleton bridge. The men held their breath to watch the brave lad. Once, twice, a board cracked and almost gave way; but Leonard quickly threw his weight back, and advanced from another direction. When he reached Helen she was too exhausted to help herself; but, by the aid of a rope, they managed at last to draw her back to the safe, firm earth once more. Then how the men cheered! And how proudly they shook hands with the pale young hero!

"Shore, ye did a big thing to risk yer own life ter save hers, after all her tauntin'," said one of the men bluntly, but with honest feelings; "but, me lad, the bravest thing ye did was to refuse to run the risk fer a mere stump! I wish I had a boy o' me own wid your spirit!"

One of the men had hastened to the nearest barn for a horse and carriage, and poor, foolish littls Helen was taken home as tenderly and with as little rebuke as if the accident had not been caused wholly by her own folly.

It was over a week before her strained nerves would admit of her seeing any one. Then she called for Leonard.

"I can't ever tell you how sorry I am that I was such a little goose as to tempt you by calling you a coward," she said.

"Oh, that was all right. I suppose I really was one," laughed Leonard; "for I nearly fainted with terror the moment I touched the ground with you. If the men hadn't cheered loud enough to scare my senses back again just then, I should certainly have collapsed."

"You saved my life," said Helen; "but you would have saved it so much more easily if I had only heeded your warning. But, Leonard, honestly, I didn't think you a coward for a single minute. I admired you most of all when I was the most scornful; for the boy who can resist a dare to show his courage—and from a girl, too—is a real hero, and I knew it."—The Advance.

To find some drug, poisonous medicine or nostrum with which to nll your system with more poison, but get into one of the wonderful Quaker Bath Cabinets described in a former issue, and take a good steaming and sweat the poisons out of your system, toning every organ and nerve in your body, and you will be strong healthy and vigorous with the coming of spring and summer. This is nature's perfect method of restoring and reproducing health and beauty, and no disease has as yet been discovered which can resist the marvelous power of the thermal bath.

Every reader of our paper should write the inventors and manufacturers, The World Mfg. Co., 501 World Bld'g , Cincinnati, O., one of the largest concerns in that city, for their valuable book describing this invention and how to take these wonderful baths.

The firm offers excellent inducements to trustworthy agents, both men and women.

Hats and Dollars.

Pat Flynn had sixty-seven hats,
And wanted sixty more;
It was an odd, strange whim of Pat's,
For only one he wore;
But he would toil by night or day
To get a hat to lay away.

'Twas "hats" the first thing in the morn,
And "hats" at noon and night;
The neighbors laughed the man to scorn,
And said it was but right
To send such crazy cranks as he
To spend their days at Kankakee.

A million dollars Peter Doyle
Had laid away in store;
Yet late and early did he toil
To get a million more.
He could not use the half he had,
And yet he wanted "more" quite bad.

His neighbors praised him to the skies,
Wherever he might go;
They called him great, and good, and wise,
And bowed before him low.
Is there such difference as that
Between a dollar and a hat?

Stories of a Kitten.

In the Humane Alliance, a magazine published in New York in the interests of humanity to animals, a writer who does not give her name, writes a very long and very interesting article about her numerous pet cats. Of one of them, Czarina, she gives the following description: "Czarina, a kitten that had been bought in Paris, was, without exception, the most exquisite cat I had ever seen; small, but in perfect symmetry, with the marks of pure breeding in the highest degree; a rather squirrel-shaped face, broad and short; very large eyes, amber-colored when she was well and happy, with pupils constantly dilated, faded green when ill in mind or body; small, pale-pink ears, as thin as tissue-paper, with a little tuft at the point; very long whiskers, small paws with big boots and a ruff, very thick hair, almost as fine as cobweb, blowing about in every breeze and so long that it parted naturally between the shoulders to the end of her tail, the tail itself resembling a squirrel's and an ostrich feather. To this beauty she added extraordinary grace, delicacy and refinement, and many bewitching little airs and poses. Like Princess, she ate with singular nicety, not splashing or spattering the milk as she lapped, or pulling the meat off the plate. Although she was not much given to licking herself, and hated to be washed, she could not endure being dirty, and, as I have said, would come for a bath on her own accord. When fresh washed she looked like a bunch of fleecy white chrysanthemums. From the moment she was taken from her cage in the window of the shop, amid lapdogs, marmosets, onistitis, paroquets and lovebirds, and put into my arms, she fastened herself to me with a love that was stronger than instinct and in which her life was bound up. There was a wildness about her that belonged to a creature fresh from the savage state, and which she never outgrew altogether. Her timidity was excessive; every strange face, object or sound frightened her, every abrupt motion made her start; at the same time she was as mischievous as a monkey, and mad with spirits. One of her games was to run out of the ante-chamber of the hotel apartment and down the long corridor to the head of a staircase and back again before I could catch her; and repeat this until she overreached herself and flew back into the apartment in her excitement when a sentinel immediately shut the door and captured her. One night she got out and began this game, but instead of turning and scampering back she ran down the staircase into the dark. It was late, the servants had gone to bed, the lights were out, and after a vain search I had to give her up for the night. The next morning she was brought back so thoroughly cowed and scared that from that time forth she not only never ran out again, but when the door of the apartment opened she sprang hastily into one of the inner rooms, as if outside lay the vast unknown, which she had once seen too close. Czarina was curious about more than the "big world," however, and would swallow any timidity to see strangers, or take any pains to investigate parcels or boxes. "On one occasion," writes her mistress, "several Christmas presents came to the house two or three days in advance, and according to custom I left them in my bedroom in the wrapping paper, though Czarina coaxed and used all her blandishments to have them opened. On Christmas Eve, after being out for several hours, I went up to dress and on the landing I met Czarina, Lalla Rookh and Pigwiggin coming out of my dark room in single file, with a furtive walk and demeanor. They passed me rapidly without recognition, slipped downstairs and dispersed. On striking a light I found the paper torn from the parcels and scattered over the floor, some of the strings untied and the pasteboard boxes clawed into peepholes. They must have been at work the whole afternoon."

Wise Little Mary.

MISS LIZZIE DUNPREE.

It was a beautiful day in October. The leaves had been kissed by the frost and had blushed in return, when four little children from the city, who were now visiting their grandma in the country, thought they would go to the woods to play and gather the bright leaves.

There was Crump, Mary, Bert and Cousin Will. They were making hats and aprons of the bright leaves and having a merry time when Mary said: "Boys, what would we do if the wolf grandma tells us about were to come?"

Bert said, "I would drive it away with a stick, but I don't believe there is a wolf in the country to be afraid of."

Crump said, "I would kill it, but I am like Bert; I don't believe much in the wolf. Do you Will?"

"Oh, yes," said Will. "I have never seen it, but others have and they say that it looks like a dog, but it is not a dog. You know I have been here all summer and I have heard people talk about it so much, I know it is true. But I am not afraid of it."

As they were talking, Bert said, "Look! there is a dog coming. Let's call him and have some fun." So they called, "Doggie, doggie." But he only looked at them in a way that they thought was not a bit friendly, and lashed his tail. Then Mary said, "Oh, I believe it is the wolf; what shall we do?"

"Let's run," said Bert.

Will and Crump set up a loud cry of fright.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours: a sediment or settling indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; if it stains your linen it is evidence of kidney trouble; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back is also convincing proof that the kidneys and bladder are out of order.

WHAT TO DO.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills every wish in curing rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. It corrects inability to hold water, and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful discovery and a book that tells more about it, both sent absolutely free by mail, address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

"Don't run," said Mary, "or let him know that we are afraid of him, or he will eat us." But the boys were running at the top of their speed and did not hear what wise little Mary said.

Mary did not know what to do, so she stood still and looked at the animal and said to herself, "I believe it is a dog." Just then a man called, "Come here, Nero," and it went to the man.

Mary laughed and said, "So it was a dog, after all. Won't I have the laugh on the boys?"

When she reached home she found all in excitement, for the boys had told a wonderful story about the wolf, and they did not know where Mary was when she came in laughing and said, "It was only neighbor Tom's dog and he called it away."

The boys hung their heads and had nothing to say.

Cleanliness and Health.

The doctrine that dirt is allied to godliness has long since died out, but it has only lately begun to be understood how close is the connection between a cleanly and healthy environment and an honest and virtuous life. Nothing paralyzes a man's aspirations after good so completely as a sordid and insanitary dwelling house. The church, as she exists in this country, with the parochial system extending to the remotest parts, is the most powerful organization for doing good that the nation possesses; and, if her officers co-operate with sanitary officers, not only the public health, but also the moral well-being of the whole community will be raised to a higher level. The Church Sanitary Association, which has its chief office at the Church House, Westminster, is an agency which supplies suitable literature on this subject to preachers and teachers.

Day Break—Prophetic.

BY L. C. S.

Beyond the far
Horizon bar,
Lie Realms of unknown Story
Where distant gleam
With mystic beam
Day Stars in chastened glory.
Their paling light
Fails on the sight
No rays our pathways showing,
Yet signals are
From skies afar
Of lands with radiance glowing.

* * * * * *

Beyond the ken
Of mortal men
Lie Realms with Time Coeval.
Though signals burn
We scarce discern
These shadowed lights primeval.
'Twixt Doubt and Hope
We blindly grope
Our "day stars" yet revealing,
Beyond the ken—
Beyond the bar—
Unseen of men
Bright regions are Within God's own concealing.

How 'Tis Done.

The watering of railroad stocks is known by all to exist, but just how it is done or why it is done is yet an enigma to many people. It is the purpose of this article to answer both questions in the simplest manner possible. Let us take the following illustration: Jones, Smith and Brown organize a railroad company and build and equip a road from Salt Lake to Murray. Let us suppose that it costs them $50,000. They begin operations and at the end of the year they find they have cleared $25,000, or 50 per cent. of the actual cost of the road. Now, should the news reach the public what the company is making on their investment complaints would soon be heard that freight and passenger rates are too high.

To throw the public off their guard and make it appear that freight rates are none too high; that is to say, to make the people believe that the percentage of profit is not too large, the company issue $50,000 worth of stock. This costs only the blank paper and the printing. It now appears that the road cost $100,000, while in fact it only cost $50,000, but the percentage of profit is now 25 per cent. instead of 50 per cent. But 25 per cent. is too much, so the company issues $100,000 more of stock. Now the figures on the company's books would make it indicate that the road had actually cost $200,000 and that the profit of $25,000 is only 12 1-2 per cent. on the investment.

Again, they issue $200,000 more stock, and that reduces their percentage of profit to only 6 1-4 per cent. And so it is continued until it looks to be a losing game, while the facts are that the company is still reaping 50 per cent. on the money invested, actually less than $10,000 per mile are trying to pay dividends on $100,000 per mile. That system is what is known as robbing by law. The law permits it and enterprising men take advantage of it. No one can blame them for it. It is just as legitimate, so far as law goes, as it is to buy potatoes at 80 cents a bushel and sell them at 25 cents a peck. It is the system we are condemning and not the persons who do it.—Living Issues.

Where the "Pot of Gold" is Buried.

How many women are fretting and struggling along on a very little money when a good-sized yard or adjoining patch of ground is going to waste! Yet that very piece of ground may contain all sorts of possibilities—clothes, furniture, books, medicines, luxuries, and even necessities otherwise impossible. Clear, plow, fertilize and plant; this done, the great beginning is made, and perseverance and attention will secure the rest. Onions, tomatoes, cabbage, celery, a small poultry farm, a violet or rose farm—any of these may add several hundred dollars to one's purse every year. Small fruits, hops, tuberoses and grapes are also very profitable. With some intelligence a blooming garden can always be made a paying one; make it a principle to have no more waste in the garden than in the kitchen. If there is only a very small place, and just enough raised for one's family, try, after the table is supplied, to prepare what vegetables and fruits are left over for sale for winter use. There is always a demand for good homemade canning and preserving. Do not let a valuable scrap of ground be idle.—Annetta Halliday-Antona, in the May Woman's Home Companion.

A Curious Mistake.

Prof. Comstock, of Cornell, in speaking to his class recently of the trials of scientists, told this authentic tale of the experience of a professor of invertebrate zoology in a sister institution, which had better be left nameless. Trichinæ in pork, the cause of the frightful disease of trichinosis in human consumers, give a peculiar appearance to meat, which is studded with little cysts; it is then known to the trade as "measly pork." The learned scientist, wishing some for study, went to the butcher and asked if he ever got any measly pork. "Sometimes," said the butcher catiously, "but I always throw it away." "Well," said the professor, "the next time you have any, I wish you'd send me up some," meaning, of course, to his laboratory. The butcher stared at him, but said he would. Three weeks passed, when the professor, growing impatient, again dropped in. "Haven't you found any measly pork yet?" "Why, yes," said the butcher, "I sent up two pounds a week ago." A sickly grin broke over the professor's face. "Where did you send it?" said he. "Why to your house," said the butcher, "of course."—Special Reporter.

Customer—Are my clothes ready?

Tailor—Not yet, sir.

Customer—But you said you would have them done if you worked all night.

Tailor—Yes; but I didn't work all night.

"O, Georgie! Who opened the canary's cage?" "I did. You told me a little bird was a-whispering to you when I was naughty, so I knew there was no other little bird about. So I opened the cage and the cat's eaten him. That wot he's got for telling on me."

The Unenlightened Goat.—"Oh, my dear daughter" (to a little girl of six), "you should not be frightened and run from the goat. Don't you know you are a Christian Scientist?" "But, mamma" (excitedly), "the billy goat don't know it."

A Book on Cocoa and Chocolate.

Walter Baker & Co. Ltd., Dorchester, Mass., have just published a handsomely illustrated quarto of 72 pages, entitled: "Cocoa and Chocolate: A Short History of Their Production and Use." It contains a large amount of valuable and interesting matter relating to the cocoa tree and its fruit; the early use of cocoa and chocolate and their food value as determined by distinguished chemists and physicians. In conclusion a sketch is given of the famous house of Walter Baker & Co., the oldest and largest establishment of its kind on this continent. Some copies of rare old prints are introduced into the text, and the various stages of picking, curing and preparing the fruit for domestic use are represented by engravings from photographs taken in the West Indies, Ceylon, and at the mills in Dorchester.

A recent estimate of the total amount of crude cocoa exported from the tropical regions in which it is grown, based partly on official figures and partly on expert estimates, is about 150,000,000 pounds per annum. Guayaquil, Ecuador, heads the list of exports with about 33,500,000 pounds. The British Island of Trinidad comes next, with about 22,000,000 pounds.

In the United States the increased consumption of cocoa in recent years has been striking. The amount retained for home consumption in 1860 was only 1,181,054 pounds, about three-fifths of an ounce for each inhabitant. The average annual consumption for the three years, 1896, 1897, and 1898, amounted to 26,319,275 pounds, an increase in thirty-seven years of 2,130 per cent.

If the increased consumption of the last thirty-seven years is continued until 1934—and that is altogether probable, in view of the fact that cocoa is one of the very few articles which contain all the essentials of a perfect food—the amount of crude cocoa required by this country alone will be nearly 600,000,000 pounds. The islands over which the sovereignty, or protection, of the United States has recently been extended are all within the cocoa belt (i. e., within the parallels of latitude in which cocoa can be successfully cultivated), and we may look for an enormous development of the production during the next quarter of a century.

More Letters.

I wonder, as you read this, whether your fathers will be grumbling because the ground is too wet, or growling because it is too dry? Wet or dry, the fishing worms are ripe, and the minnows are already born that will catch good fish. One member writes, "Now that hot weather is coming on, I will not be able to keep my pledge any longer." Surely, this little girl has not learned the delight of reading a book outdoors, while the breeze grows tired of looking on the same page and tries to turn it over to the next; when you can glance up from the account of a battle, or from reading a poem, to see the sunlight shining on a pond and meadow and housetop, just as it shone before the battle was fought, and while the poet wrote his lines. When we read outdoors and hear the bees singing their one note (through their teeth), and catch the distant sound of a grass-cutter (not too near at hand), it is like eating dinner to the sound of music. You take a bite of ham or fried chicken, as the case my be, and when you swallow it, a whole bar of music goes down with it, and makes everything light and digestible down there. "My sister and I want to join the Advance Society; Rubie is 12, and I (Myrtle Snider) am 11. Grandma says, 'Send her name too;' she is a little girl of 60; her name, Mrs. Fannie N. Kellogg." So reads a letter from Rosendale, Mo. This from Richwood, Ky.: "I am ready for your Honor Roll. I kept the rules faithfully, but the night that we moved to this farm I came near forgetting the Bible verse in the confusion. Jean and I remembered our verses after we got in bed. We hopped out, struck a light and made our way down the strange stairway, found our Bible, read our verses and returned peacefully to our bed." A good thing the robber was not there, wasn't it! The letter is from Nannie D. Chambers. D. Harrold McIntire lives on a farm, Avalon, Mo., half a mile from school. He is 11. Favorite books, Little Lord Fountleroy, John Halifax, Black Beauty, Hoosier Schoolmaster. "I had a dog named Muffy, because she looked just like a muff," says Emily Belle Riley. "I had a little box for her to sleep in. I used to wash her in the big bathtub and tell her to go and lie down by the stove and dry. She would mind me. She would knock on the door with her tail and jump over a stick." "I enjoy our society work," says Grace E. Taylor, "and cannot say how I enjoy reading our page. I have fallen quite in love with George Weston. We have been learning the society yell and think it appropriate." "My uncle," says Gladys Fulghum (Mason City), "had a large black dog named Jack. He would get on top of the board fence, sit there, and watch the men plough in the field." Children, I call your attention to the picture that is painted by these few words.

"Who can tell," Gerald Dever asks, "whether this boy will be a preacher, or doctor? He went to his papa's office, filled a bottle with water and labled it thus: 'Dear Jesus is the best One of all.' Then to his mother he said, 'Take every hour.'" "Some of Millie Imbler's favorites are: Under the Lilacs, Edith's Burglar, Dottie Dimple Series, Five Little Peppers, Tom Sawyer, Maggie in the Pines, Pilgrim's Progress. Lena Collins (Benton City) walks a mile and a half to school; loves "to read continued pieces about school boys and girls," and likes funny poetry. She is 12. Stella Nichols is reading "Lost Memory," my story in Our Young Folks. She says, "I would like to correspond with some one about my age, 'way off." She is 14, and lives in Stone Fort, Ill. Here is some one "'way off," but just half her age; Dottie Standish (7), Mututse, Wyo. Maurine Bragg has secured a new member, Hattie Lorentz, Shelbina, Mo. He says, "I will tell you what our Sunday-school class is going to do: we are going to see how much we can do for Jesus, and on Sunday morning tell what we have done, and so we can help each other and try and improve ourselves the next week. Bertha Houston, Prairie Hill, Mo., writes: "I saw about your society in the Louisville Courier-Journal. I have become too much devoted to fiction, and I think the best cure is to be found in the Advance Society; so I send my name for membership." Jessie Shafer: "When I was four years old we had two shepherd dogs, John and Jane. I would go out in the yard, and if John was asleep I would lie down by him. He would straighten out and put his paws out straight. I would lie on the paw that was on the ground, and then he would put the other over me; he never hurt me. My little sister always played with Jane; if she came near John he would growl and act so naughty that papa had to sell him—it was a sad day for me." Eunice May Shafer: "I had a great big white watchdog, Fanny. When we talked to her she turned her head one side, and would draw up her lip and show her teeth and wag her tail, and we said she was laughing. She had big brown eyes; around one was a brindle ring. She would take our pet cat by the back of the neck and carry him all over the yard. But the man that gave her to us wanted her back so bad, papa said we ought to let him have her; he brought the little children when he came for her, and Fanny licked their faces all over. We hated to see her go, but we are going to see her this summer." I hope when you do, you will write and tell us if she remembered you, and if she licked your face, and wagged with joy.

R. T. Davis, Ozark, Ark., wonders what are the ages of George and Jennie Weston. He says, "I think they are very nice people. I intend printing the Advance Society rules on a large piece of pasteboard and hang it on the head of my bed, so I shall not miss a single time. I am 14, and am secretary of the the Christian Sunday-school." Kathryn McPherson obtains a new member, Birdie Morrison, Wichita, Kan., who began the new year by joining the church. "I live in Mapelton, Ohio," writes Marie Lotz. "Our church is a mile and a half out of town. I read your letters to my little sisters. They are very much interested in the 'Bugler.' I am 10." J. W. Harris, of Congress, Miss., says, "I am delighted with the children's page. The Advance Society is a grand idea. Taste for good literature is a great blessing to all, and a great safeguard to youth." By the way, that last sentence would be a very good quotation to learn. Eltah Vance, Vetura, Cal.: "It is three months since I joined the society, and I have done all required. I hope all the children have kept up their resolutions; I am 9, my sister 7; we are the only ones in school who have not missed a day." I give the favorite books of Elsie Conklin, as they are all splendid, but some have not been given before: Last days of Pompeii, Uncle Tom's Cabin, Beside the Bonny Brier Bush, The Lady of the Lake, Helen's Babies, Prince of the House of David, Two Years Before the Mast, Life of Davis Crockett, Evangeline, Elsie's Holidays at Roseland.

In the following list of members, whose names have not been given before, notice how many states they represent: Thomas (14) and Mabel Trumlo (10), Sedalia, Mo.; Garnet Hermon (10), Frankford, Mo.; Jean N. Campbell (12), Topeka, Kan.; Willard (14) and Nellie Brinkworth (9), Oneida, Kan.; Eugine (13) and Mary A. Rice (12), Virginia, Ill.; Melvin Leddin ("I am not quite 8"), Ospur, Ill.; Ruth Gorham,Hudson, O.; Vera Davenport(10), Perry O. T.; J. Ross and Mabel I. Bridgewater, Renfrow, Okla; T. Walter R. Sapp (14), Pawnee, O. T.; Carrie Allen (10), Loyalville, Pa.; Frank A. Burgess (a young man studying law), Durango, Col; Mabel (11) and Pearl Bush (14), both members of the church,Riverside,Cal.;Mabel (14) and Gertrude Minnick (10),Davenport, Wash.; Lula M. (13), William (10) and Jas. C. Scribner (11), Billfry, Minn.; Anna Irons (8), Monitor, Ore.; Jo Johnston King (12), Aussa Manston King (14) and Jeanette W. King (who "is old enough to be Superintendent of Public Instruction"), Murfreesboro, Tenn.; Willie and Isabell Donaldson, Anita, Ia.; Chester (14) and Emmet Ireland (12), and their niece, Minnie Cotes (13), Craig, Neb.; Mary Louise Roscoe (9), Julien, Ky.

I wonder if that is interesting reading to you? It is, if you are anxious to see children all over the United States determined to cultivate their minds and not let them go to weeds like some people's onion beds are, about this time (I name no names). We now have 371 members; about 60 have reached the Honor List; here are the last on the list: Mabel Gunther, Waterloo, Ia.; Edna, Gladys and Bessie Fulghum, Jessie and Eunice Shafer. Next week the continued story will tell how the little orphan saved the Westons from poverty. After that I hope to have some good vacation stories from our members.

Quaint Sayings.

It is interesting and instructive to read bright and well constructed advertisements. Messrs. C. I. Hood & Co., of Sarsaparilla fame, must have been at a great feast and taken everything home with them. They are using a bright selection of quaint old sayings and proverbs as the starters in a series of clever advertisements, wherein the proverbs are neatly turned and paraphrased to fit the subject matter. The public like this breezy advertising, as it reminds of other proverbs and opens up discussion.

TOPIC FOR MAY 21.

"THE GIFT OF POWER."

(Acts 1:1-8.)

The desire for power is the last infirmity of noble minds. Many a man who has stood incorruptible before the offer of wealth has fallen before offers of power.

"If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
Vain tongues that have not thee in awe,
Such boasting as the Gentiles use,
And lesser breeds without the law,
Lord God of hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget, lest we forget."

Many a nation that is proof against the seductions of appetite, or other ignoble influences, that proves true as steel against oppression within, may be guilty of grasping for power without.

But there is power which men and nations ought to covet, and can covet legitimately: it is power to do men good. Wealth is power, and every man should get all the wealth he can, but only to do men good withal. Knowledge is power, and each of us should gain all of it he can, but only to use it for the betterment of men. Wealth, knowledge, all power is worse than emptiness, unless used for the good of humanity, for no man is responsible for his emptiness of power, while all are responsible for every talent of strength they have.

The power that most does good for men is the power of love, the power of great hearts. Some have called this "power with God," as if it were a kind of political influence with the Ruler of all. Well, there is truth in the position; but, after all, the only source of such power is in the individual character. Let the heart be what it should, let it overflow with love, and it shall have favor and power with God and man. Let it be pure, and it shall have power to see God. Let it be strong, and it shall have power to bless men.

The surest curtailment of such power lies in wrong-doing. He who is guilty dare fling no stones at his own sin. He loses his Davidic power, he becomes a weak Goliath. Why has many a man lost his grip on his work and gone from weakness unto weakness? From some wrong he has done. Said Sir Gallahad:

"My strength is as the strength of ten,
Because my heart is pure."

THE C. E. READING COURSES.

First Things.—II.

By F. D. Power, Director.

Pentecost gives, not only the first sermon, but the first converts to Christ. Peter's sermon is full of power. Thousands are pricked to the heart by the things that they heard. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God." For the first time under the reign of Christ the momentous question, "What shall we do?" is propounded, and for the first time receives answer. Earnest speakers are here—men who wish to escape from the consequences of their guilt. So to-day men are seeking. In every great revival of religion hosts of men and women awakened and convicted ask, "What shall we do?" Do they receive answer? Are they permitted at once to know what God requires of them and to do the thing commanded, and the same day to rejoice in the forgiveness of sins and the Holy Spirit? Are there no seekers that are allowed to go away seeking, no mourners that are allowed to go away mourning, no poor, bewildered, unsatisfied souls kept on an anxious bench of doubt and despair?

How was it under the ministry of the apostles on Pentecost? "Now when they heard this, they were pricked in the heart, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, Men and brethren, what shall we do? Then Peter said unto them, Repent, and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit."

Observe the stages in the conversion of these people: 1. They hear the gospel, the great facts, "how that Christ died for our sins according to that Scriptures, and that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day according to the Scriptures." They are men and women, people of understanding and intelligence. The preaching is addressed to their reason, to their affections, and to their will. Had not Christ said: "He that has ears to hear, let him hear?" Was not the message from the beginning: "Incline thine ear and come unto me; hear and thy soul shall live?" Was it not declared: "The entrance of thy Word giveth light." "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul?" and did not our Lord say: "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free," and command his apostles: "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature?" "How can they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how can they believe on him of whom they have not heard? and how can they hear without a preacher?" "Faith cometh by hearing" and these people are not constrained by miracle; they are converted by truth, argument, testimony. They hear.

2. They believe the truth presented by the apostles. Faith is produced by evidence, by testimony. It is not a creed, but a person that is preached to them. A creed is not taught by the apostles. A creed by itself cannot long maintain the life of religion. A creed can never be a safe bond of union. All creeds tend to the multiplication of sects. The strongest basis of union is faith in a prophet, in a person. The systems of Buddha and Confucius are still active after twenty-four centuries. Moses has held together millions of Jews dispersed all over the face of the earth for three thousand years. Mohamet is the center of unity to a hundred millions of disciples. Jesus is the inspiration to hundreds of millions. He must forever stand supreme. All others must decrease but he must increase. And he must be preached, the personal Christ, as the creed of the church. And as three thousand believed on him to the saving of their souls on the same day and under a single sermon, so must men believe to-day, and so will men believe to-day if Christ alone be preached. The people hear. The people believe.

3. The people repent. Believing on the Lord Jesus Christ and burdened with the consciousness of guilt they cry: "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" The command is, "Repent." They repented. This is not mere sorrow for sin. They were already filled with the sense of sorrow. They were pricked to the heart. They are instructed to turn now away from sin to the new life in Christ Jesus.

Repentance is change of will caused by sorrow for sin and leading to reformation of life. "Godly sorrow," says Paul, "worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of." "I rejoice not that ye were made sorry, but that you sorrowed unto repentance." Judas sorrowed for sin, but instead of working repentance it drove him to suicide. Thousands of people sorrow over their sins, but they do not give up their sins; they do not turn away from their sins; they do not flee from their sins; their hearts are not broken for sin and from sin; they are unwilling to turn from sin and do works meet for repentance. That is not repentance.

These people on Pentecost "repented." They "gladly received the Word and were baptized." They turned from sin unto righteousness and from the kingdom of Satan unto God. Theirs was repentance toward God, repentance unto life.

They were baptized. Hearing, believing, repenting, acting on their own intelligent volition these first converts obeyed Christ in the holy institution of baptism.

Had they not seen Jesus, many of them, go down into the waters of the Jordan, receive baptism at the hands of John? Had they not witnessed many times the administration of this ordinance by John when baptizing in the river Jordan and at Enon, "because there was much water there?" So they accepted to-day, thousands of them, "as many as gladly received the Word, this New Testament institution, and there in the Pool of Siloam, 50 feet long by 16 feet wide; in Upper Gihon, 316 feet long by 218 wide, or in Lower Gihon, a dozen times as large, they were buried with Christ in baptism. Peter's sermon began at 9 A. M., the temple service closed at noon, and now, easily in a few hours, the 3,000 could submit at the hands of the apostles to this divine ordinance. "And the same day there were added about three thousand souls."

AUNT MARIA'S SATURDAY TALKS: Saturday Talk Series of Biographical Sketches and Short Stories for Little Children. By Laura Gerould Craig, Ph. B. Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis, 1899.

This interesting series of biographical sketches and short stories for children, just from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, will doubtless meet a long-felt want of parents, teachers and others who are pressed hard by the children for stories. The attractive title of these handsome little volumes are "The Little Kings," "The Little Queens," "The Little Presidents," "The Little Generals," "The Little Statesmen" and "The Little Orators." The stories of the boyhood and girlhood of these eminent persons are told in a most winsome manner by one who not only knows history, but who understands the child-nature and how to put facts and incidents in an attractive way for childhood. These six volumes are brought out in very handsome bindings with appropriate designs and illustrations, and will be sure to attract the attention and win the approval of both children and parents. We predict a popular run for these stories. There is no better way of teaching history than through biographies of great men, and these volumes will lay the foundation and create the desire for a wide historical knowledge. Price of these separate volumes is 50 cents, or the entire six volumes for $2.50.

THE GOSPEL FOR A WORLD OF SIN. By Henry Van Dyke, D. D. The Macmillan Co., New York. $1.25.

This is the title of a new book by the pastor of the Brick Church (Presbyterian), New York — is a companion volume to "The Gospel for an Age of Doubt." This book has the tone of a message, and gives one the impression that it comes out of life and out of one's own experience—from one who has felt the power of the world—sin—the despair of this age, and has experienced, too, its atoning and redeeming power of God's love. It is experimental and vital, written in a vigorous style, though lacking the literary finish and the close reasoning of the other volume.

Its chapters are on Sin and Doubt, The Sin of the World, the Bible without Christ, Christ's Mission to the Inner Life, The Perfection of the Atonement and the Message of the Cross.

Greater emphasis is laid on God's love than on his wrath. Yet the sterner side of God's character is in view all the while; e. g., atonement does not reconcile God to the world. It is self-sacrifice that reveals love. The book is not meant to present a theory of the atonement. He says: "The atonement is the work of God's love in its bearing upon man's sin, and further, the saving work of Jesus Christ for man as a sinner — that is what the atonement means." In his discussion of the atonement he does not attempt so much to define (which usually means to stake off or show the limits of a great truth) as to give a comprehensive view of the many-sided nature of God's atoning love through Christ. No chapter is stronger than the last one. It gives a new and deeper significance to the cross. He shows how the message of the cross falls in with three great ideas into which the world is growing. 1st. Human brotherhood, unity and solidarity of mankind. The message of the cross must reconcile man with man, as well as men with God. Its universal charter is: "Go, disciple all nations."

2nd. The conception of love as a reformative principle—its purpose for the rescue and reformation of the offender. Then the growing consciousness of the inwardness of sin—as this is deepened so his sense of reconciliation with God through Christ must grow purer and deeper and loftier to keep its place in the inner life.

This book is helpful in trying to solve the vital problems of sin, grace, God's love, etc., and practical in showing how the vital message of Christ comes to our everyday lives. It is hopeful, invigorating and suggestive. B. W.

MAGAZINES.

The Ledger Monthly for May is especially interesting to golfers. It has on its cover a beautiful reproduction in color of Francis Day's painting, "The Golf Girl," a brilliant specimen of young American womanhood. The frontispiece is a portrait of Miss Beatrix Hoyt, the champion woman golfer of America. Ian MacLaren contributes a characteristic article, entitled "An Expert in Heresy," touching with a humorous pen a foible of the Scotch character. "Every country," says Dr. Watson, "has its own sports, and Scotland has golf; but golf only satisfies the lighter side of the Scotch; the graver side of the Scot finds its exercise in the prosecution of a heretic." A new and powerfut serial, by Henry Cleveland Wood, is commenced in this number. Sir Walter Besant's delightful historical novel, "The Orange Girl," is continued. Dr. Julia Holmes Smith writes entertainingly for mothers and nurses and of the kinds and qualities of food for babies. "Warm Weather Costumes" and "Seasonable Shirt Waists," with many illustrations, fill the interesting fashion department. The price of the Ledger Monthly is only five cents. Robert Bonner's Sons, Publishers, Ledger Building, New York.

The June Atlantic Monthly will contain the opening chapters of a new serial story entitled, "To Have and to Hold," by Miss Mary Johnston, the rising and popular young author of the brilliant romance, "Prisoners of Hope," which has been so successful during the past season. Miss Johnston's work not only became immediately and unusually popular, but is admitted by the best critics to be of the highest order of historical fiction, full of vigor and interest, and yet accurate and true to life and time. Mfss Johnston's Atlantic story is placed at a much earlier period of Virginian history, that of Pocahontas and her husband, John Rolfe. It is, however, permeated with the same fullness and accuracy of historical description and detail, while the freshness and exceeding interest of the plot will hold the reader's attention from the very opening.

Robert Barr, in the first series of papers on his Travels and Troubles in the Orient, tells some stirring stories of American "guns that can speak Turkish." "Life would not be so very well worth living along these shores if it were not for the American cruisers, ... which do many things that fail to appear in the official dispatches." Just how United States naval officers sometimes deal with troublesome Turks, Mr. Barr tells in the Saturday Evening Post of May 13.

General Miles contributes to the May number of the North American Review the first of a series of papers on "The War With Spain." He reviews the events leading up to the war, and the movements of the army to the time when Santiago was invested. He describes the difficulties which had to be encountered in equipping the forces, and the preparations made for rendering them effective in the actual work on the field. General Miles makes some surprising revelations as to our lamentable lack of the munitions of war at the outbreak of hostilities.

The American Monthly Review of Reviews of May devotes considerable space to a survey of recent developments in American cities. The editor comments on the re-election of Mayor Carter Harrison in Chicago, on Mayor Jones' remarkable triumph in Toledo, on the Detroit project for municipal ownership of the street railways, and on the general situation in Boston, San Francisco, Minneapolis, Cleveland, Denver, St. Louis, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and New York. Dr. Shaw also contributes a special study of the new San Francisco charter—a remarkable document in its way, and Mr. George E. Hooker gives some interesting facts about Mayor Quincy's administration of Boston.

In addition to the complete novel, "Princess Nadine," by Christian Reid, in the May Lippincott's, there is a scholarly "Review of the Philippine Question," by John Foster Kirk, author of "Charles the Bold;" a character sketch of "Philippe de Comines," by Emily Stone Whiteley; followed by interesting papers on "The American Fondness for Movements," by Edward Leigh Fell, and "Democracy and Suffrage," by M. L. S. The poetry of the month is contributed by Clarence Urmy, Edward Wilbur Mason and Wilbur Larremore. Among the shorter fiction an unusually strong story, called "His Lack of Courage," by Adeline Knapp, must be mentioned, while "Kate," by George William and "Jacqueminots," by Edgar Maurice Smith, are well worth reading.

Mr. William George Jordan has just retired from the editorship of the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post, which he started so auspiciously on its new career. Mr. Jordan, it will be remembered, built up Current Literature, which he left a few years ago to become managing editor of the Ladies' Home Journal. When the Curtis Publishing Company purchased the moribund Saturday Evening Post, Mr. Jordan was induced to become its editor. In a short time his enthusiasm and genius quickened the Post into new life until it bristled with new ideas that rapidly made for it hosts of new friends and subscribers. Among the innovations introduced by Mr. Jordan was an editorial page in which leading writers and authorities discussed, over their names, timely questions and topics of general interest. Among these contributions those by the editor were by no means the least interesting and instructive—indeed, his personality was apparent in the whole editorial conduct of the Post, which at present is a unique weekly paper.—Publishers' Weekly.

BARR.

The little church at Marine, Ill., is in mourning over the death of one of its noblest and most faithful young members. Miss Merle O. Barr died of black measles at the home of her uncle, Mr. I. A. Barr, in St. Louis, Mo., Friday, April 28, 1899. She was the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred J. Barr, of Marine, born April 17, 1882. She graduated at the high school at home with honors and passed a most excellent examination for a teacher's certificate and expected to begin her work this fall. She obeyed the gospel under the ministry of Bro. J. E. Story, about Sept. 7, 1898. She was active in the Sunday-school and secretary of the Christian Endeavor Society. Her prayerful, devoted, but short Christian life made a deep impression on the community for good. The writer conducted the funeral services in Marine Sunday, in presence of a crowded house of deeply sympathizing friends. J. G. WAGGONER.

BRUCE.

Robert Bruce was born in Jacksonville, Ill., 1855. He came to Texarkana about 15 years ago, and engaged in the drug business. He married a Miss Moore, of this city, about 10 years ago. Theirs was a most happy life. Bro. Bruce became a member of the church when about 12 years old. For several years past and up to his death he was one of the faithful deacon, of this congregation. His funeral was preached by the writer Monday afternoon, April 24, after which the remains were accompanied to the last resting-place in Rose Hill Cemetery by a very large concourse of sympathizing friends. His mother and sister, from Jacksonville, Ill., were present. His fond yet heart-broken wife will have the sympathy of their many friends.

DUTCHER.

Levi Dutcher departed this life at his home near Barnetts, in Morgan County, Mo., April 24, 1899. He was born in New York, Nov. 15, 1821. He came to Missouri in 1842, locating in Moniteau County, a few miles south of California, where he was married to Miss Jane Kelsay, who survives him. To them were born seven children, two girls and five boys, all living except John, who died several years ago, just as he was entering upon a promising career of a preacher of the gospel among the Churches of Christ. During his illness he requested a younger one of the family to take up the ministry which had much to do in giving to the church our dear Bro. S. D. Dutcher, now of Mexico, Mo., who is known throughout Missouri and not a little in other states. Bro. Levi Dutcher was for many years a godly member of the Church of Christ. He was a man of meagre attainments and yet a strong man and a useful man and wrought well in his day and generation. We laid his body by the church house (Union) in Moniteau County, where he was a charter member about 40 years ago, and thus we go one by one to the silent land. God bless the family.

B. F. HILL.

HARBAUGH.

Florence M. Harbaugh was born May 18, 1880, and died April 15, 1899. She united with the church when but 13 years of age, and was ever found ready to do what she could in her Master's service. At the time of her death she was a member of the junior class in the Sheridan High School. Her last illness was characterized by intense suffering. She bore all patiently, and when she realized that she could not recover she calmly bade her parents and brother goodby and fell quietly asleep. Funeral services conducted by the writer at Boxley, Ind., on April 17, 1899.

HARRINGTON.

John Harrington was born in Kentucky, 1816. His early life was spent in Clay County, Mo. He came to Atchison County about 1844, settling in Irish Grove. He moved to Tarkio three years ago. He married Miss Mirida Blevins in July, 1841. Nine children and the widowed mother remain to mourn their loss. Uncle John was for more than 56 years a faithful member of the Christian Church.

HOSWELL.

Gertrude A. Hoswell was born Jan. 27, 1880, at Belle Plain, Ill. She confessed her Savior in August, '95, and lived a Christian life, being active in all church work. Lung trouble developed in the winter of '97. A change of climate was deemed best. In August, '90, she went to Trinidad, Col., and seemed to improve, but suddenly was taken worse, dying April 6, 1899. Services were held in Trinidad by Rev. Mr. Stephens. The remains were brought back by her mother, who had hastened to her side, but arrived too late to say a fond "goodby." Funeral services at the church here, April 10, were conducted by the pastor, the attendance being very large. The remains were laid to rest by those of her father, who preceded her six years.

KIRLIN.

Elizabeth Cole Kirlin was born in Pike County, Ill., and died in Hannibal, Mo., April 20, aged 59 years. At the age of 22 years she became a Christian, and was faithful unto the end, having attended services only a week before her death. She leaves four daughters and husband who are in the way of service to be prepared for the heavenly reunion. She never failed to be at the house of God except when serious sickness prevented her. She will be missed as the cheerful center of the home circle, and from her place in the church. She has triumphed.

LEONARD.

Raphiel Leonard, one of our faithful deacons, died at his residence near Eureka, after five days of suffering and patience April 22, 1899. He was the only living son of Allen and Louisa Leonard, born near Fremont, Ill., March 16, 1854. Here he grew to manhood and at the age of 19 years obeyed the gospel under the preaching of Bro. John Lindsay. His life and devotion to the cause of Christ was most worthy and influential. June 7, 1877, he was married to Miss Mary L. Matthews. They became the parents of three children, two of whom died in infancy. Howard, the son, an excellent Christian young man, is left, the comfort of his heart-broken mother. Bro. Leonard served the Antioch congregation where he obeyed the gospel, as deacon, to which office the church at Eureka also called him some two years before his death and which he honored with goldly service and devotion. Bro. Leonard was a godly, religious man full of faith and of the Holy Spirit and of wisdom. He was an industrious, honest, truthful farmer, a Christian with no guile. He leaves his parents, a most faithful and devoted wife, his son, one sister and a host of friends and kindred to mourn their loss but to rejoice in his victory. Few times has such a large funeral, been witnessed in Eureka. The church, the community, the home have suffered a great loss. The services were conducted by the writer, assisted by Bro. N. S. Haynes and Prof. B. J. Radford. "Be ye also ready" was the text. The bereaved have the sympathy of all.

MARTINDALE.

Died, at Rock, Kan., April 16, 1899, Polly Martindale, wife of M. N. Martindale. Mother Martindale was born in Hamilton County, O., Aug. 17, 1821. Her parents removed to Miami County, Ind., when she was six years of age and on Nov. 11, 1847 she was united in marriage to M. N. Martindale. In the fall of 1854 they moved to Texas and came to Kansas in the spring of 1869. Mother has been a faithful member of the Christian Church for 59 years and has been a subscriber to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST ever since the second year of its publication.

MORGANS.

I have just returned home from the funeral of my dear mother. After an illness of three months she passed away on the 24th. She was 71 on the 20th. She was anxious to go and died in the triumphs of faith in Christ. My father and seven children are left to mourn, but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. Ever since I can remember she has been a devoted Christian.

MYERS.

Myrtle, daughter of Rev. and Mrs. L. B. Myers, died April 15, 1899 of apoplexy, aged 20 years. While walking with friends she suddenly exclaimed, "Oh, my!" fell forward and expired. Myrtle was a member of the Christian Church at this place, of which her father was pastor for a number of years. Hers was a life which looked on the bright side and her sunny disposition shed a radiance which blessed not only her own life but all with whom she was associated. Especially sad is this untimely death to the family to whom sorrow has been no stranger, but they mourn not as those who have no hope.

OWENS.

Otto Lee Owens was born July 2, 1890, and died April 11, 1899. Otto was intensely religious. She was prompt and aggressive in Sunday-school. She was treasurer of our Junior C. E., having just been elected to her place of trust. Otto was faithful to the church to the day of her death. She leaves father, mother and one little brother to mourn their loss. Sometime the world mirrors itself in a dewdrop. Such was Otto to us all.

RANKIN.

J. N. Rankin, a citizen of Mt. Pulaski, Ill., but a native of Cynthiana, Ky., "fell asleep" on the evening of April 25, 1899, in his 70th year. He has worn the name of Christ for 45 years, and has served in the capacity of elder since 1868. His memory breathes an aroma of the teachings of Jesus in the community where he lived. Though dead, he yet speaks.

STONE.

John R. Stone was born in Livonia, Livingston County, N. Y., April 30, 1823, and died at the home of his son in Barnes, Kansas, January 19, 1899. He was united in wedlock May 15, 1845, to Mary A. McClintock, of Livonia, N. Y. They moved to Ionia County, Mich., the following year. Together this happily wedded pair shared each other's joys and sorrows 50 bright, golden years, around which clustered a thousand sacred memories. The fruits of this happy union were seven children, five of whom survive them—Mrs. M. R. Lippincott, of Waterville; W. E. Stone, of Barnes; Mrs. Tate and Mrs. Clark, of Greenleaf—all of Kansas, and Mrs. F. C. Allen, of Oklahoma. He was a kind, generous and affectionate father, and an indulgent, loving husband. A friend, in writing to the family, said, "I know of no man who came nearer living a perfect life." Some of his most beautiful thoughts were expressed in verse; in them he gave expression to the deep things of God and the sweet peace that filled his soul and shone out in his daily life. His constant, earnest desire was how to best please God in his Christian labors. The church and Sunday-school were his delight, and his influence still lives and will live down to succeeding generations. Our departed brother's desire for the salvation of souls was not circumscribed by the narrow limits of home and native land, for the fathomless love of the kind Benefactor had permeated his own heart, and begat in him a strong desire for the salvation of those who were in blackest night, without God or hope in the world. He was an enthusiast on the subject of Foreign Missions, and his untiring zeal and energy won for him an enviable spot in the memory of all who knew of his labor of love for the benighted of earth. His prayer was that the uttermost parts of the earth might receive the healing and reconciling Spirit of Jesus.

Aunt Maria's Saturday Talks

Are just from the press and are complete in six volumes. These talks are biographical sketches and short stories for children. The writer is Laura Gerould Craig, and she presents these stories in such a manner as to reach the undertanding of the children. She relates true stories of kings, queens, presidents, orators, generals and statesmen. These series of talks will afford the young an opportunity to acquire a large acquaintance concerning the lives of many prominent persons of the past.

Each volume is bound in high-colored cloth, has handsome side stamp and contains many appropriate illustrations. The price is 50 cents per single volume, postpaid, or $2.50 for the whole set, postpaid. In the following will be found a brief statement of the contents of each volume:

"Little Presidents"

Contains an introduction giving an outline of what may be expected in "Aunt Maria's Saturday Talks," a description and picture of Aunt Maria, why the children love her stories, and a list of the children to whom she tells these stories. Then follows instructive stories concerning the boy Abraham Lincoln, the boy James A. Garfield and the boy George Washington. "Little Presidents" is illustrated with the birthplace of Lincoln, Lincoln's Indiana Home, Lincoln's First Dollar, Lincoln's Raft of Sugar, President Lincoln; Garfield at Fourteen, Garfield as Woodchopper, Garfield as a Canal Boy and President Garfield; Washington's Birthplace, Washington's Mt. Vernon Home, Washington the Surveyor, Death of General Braddock, and President Washington.

"Little Kings"

Contains stories of the boy Frederick the Great, the boy Louis XVII., of France, a story of the why, and a story teaching who are little kings indeed. This volume has illustrations, Aunt Maria's Game, Fritz and His Cadets, the Ride to Paris, Bad Katie and Good Katie.

"Little Statesmen"

Contains stories of Robert Morris, Benjamin Franklin, Alexander Hamilton and Thomas Jefferson. The illustrations are Franklin's Birthplace, the Old South Church, a Primitive New England School, Printing the Boston News Letter, Franklin Entering Philadelphia, Franklin's Grave, Hamilton's Speech, Hamilton and the Mob and Thomas Jefferson's Picture.

"Little Generals"

Contains stories of the boy Alexander the Great, Hannibal, the boy Napoleon Bonaparte, the boy U. S. Grant, the boy Wm. T. Sherman and the boy Philip H. Sheridan. The illustrations in this volume are Alexander and Bucephlaus, Aristotle and His Favorite Pupil, Alexanders's visit to Diogenes, Crossing the Rhone, Napoleon's Grotto, Birthplace of General Grant, Riding a Wild Colt, Grant Riding Up the Steps of the Fort.

"Little Queens"

Contains stories of Maria Theresa, Maria Antoinette, Catharine I., of Russia, Elizabeth, of Russia, and Elizabeth, of England. In "Little Queens" will be found the following illustrations: Maria Theresa and the Hungarians, Picture of Maria Antoinette, The Farewell Kiss, Pictures of Queen Elizabeth and Anne Boleyn, and Elizabeth Landing at the Traitor's Gate.

"Little Orators"

Contains stories of the boy Demoshenes, the boy Cicero, the boy Daniel Webster and the boy Henry Clay. This volume is illustrated as follows: Speaking on the End of the Barrel, Reading Beneath the Oak, the Ride for Life, the Mill Boy of the Slashes and the Good Jury.

What We Plead For

The Christian-Evangelist pleads for:

The Christianity of the New Testament, taught by Christ and his Apostles, versus the theology of the creeds taught by fallible men—the world's great need.

The divine confession of faith on which Christ built his church, versus human confessions of faith on which men have split the church.

The unity of Christ's disciples, for which he so fervently prayed, versus the divisions in Christ's body, which his apostles strongly condemned.

The abandonment of sectarian names and practices, based on human authority, for the common family name and the common faith, based on divine authority, versus the abandonment of scriptural names and usages for partisan ends.

The hearty co-operation of Christians in efforts of world-wide beneficence and evangelization, versus petty jealousies and strifes in the struggle for denominational pre-eminence.

The fidelity to truth which secures the approval of God, versus conformity to custom to gain the favor of men.

The protection of the home and the destruction of the saloon, versus the protection of the saloon and the destruction of the home.

For the right against the wrong;
For the weak against the strong;
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.
For the truth, 'gainst superstition,
For the faith, against tradition,
For the hope, whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

CURRENT EVENTS.

On Thursday of the present week the International Peace Conference will meet at the Hague, Holland, in response to the call of the Czar. The American representatives made a brief stop in London, which afforded an opportunity for friendly and informal conference with the British leaders in the disarmament movement, and have now proceeded to the place of meeting. The conference is expected to continue four or five weeks. Whether or not there is any definite agreement for concerted action by Great Britain and the United States in favor of a prearranged policy, the two countries ought to be heartily in accord on a disarmament proposition. It is a singular fact, which may be explained by those who talk of the spirit of "militarism" as one of the bitter fruits of our expansion policy, that the sentiment in this country in favor of arbitration and disarmament is constantly growing. It was before the war that the Anglo-American arbitration treaty was rejected. Public opinion did not indorse the action of the Senate then, but we do not believe that the Senate will dare to reject it now. Those who feel that there is an inconsistency between our plea for disarmament at the Hague and our continuance of hostilities in the Philippines must remember that the disarmament proposed has reference only to the troops employed in foreign wars, not those required for domestic peace. The Philippine Islands are American territory, and the war there is not a foreign war. We can still consistently plead for the reduction of armaments and the adjustment of foreign relations by arbitration.

The American army of occupation in the Philippines is pressing steadily forward into the northern part of Luzon. As the insurgent army retreats from town to town before the advance of Lawton and MacArthur, the seat of the insurgent Congress is transferred successively from one town to the next, so that the line of the retreat is marked by a series of ex-capitals, the representatives of a fugitive government which cannot find where to lay its head. From San Fernando the American troops have pushed on to Balinag and thence toward San Isidro, which at present enjoys the empty honor of being the seat of a government which neither sits nor governs. The two tin-clad gunboats which have been employed for river service have been brought up the Rio Grande to Calumpit, clearing that section of hostile natives and at the same time establishing connections between Manila and the captured towns to the north independent of the railway. It is reported that 10,000 insurgents are strongly intrenched near San Fernando and a battle more decisive than any single engagement up to date is looked for in that neighborhood. While the campaign is being actively pushed during the short time that remains before the rainy season sets in, Gen. Lawton has taken a quiet step which may prove of great importance in the pacification of the Filipinos. In the captured town of Balinag he gave directions for the election of a native mayor and town council and authorized the establishment of a municipal government. The election has been held and the new administration has begun its work, so it may be said that, at this point at least, Philippine self-government is an accomplished fact. It is too early yet to predict what will be the outcome of the experiment, but the natives have been assured that so long as they conduct the affairs of the town with due regard to order and justice they will not be interfered with by the American civil or military power. The news of this arrangement is spreading rapidly among the natives and is everywhere well received by them. Thousands of fugitives are breaking through the insurgents lines and returning to the territory held by the Americans. They are welcomed and assured of good treatment so long as they behave themselves. Many of those who are destitute are being fed with the stores captured by the Americans in the several towns. The Philippine commission is at work drawing up a constitution for the government of the islands. A constitution has already been formulated for the Island of Negros and is being considered by the commission, but it is thought better to recommend to Congress a single constitution for the whole group.

Dewey is coming back. He needs quiet and rest. Everybody else knows, what perhaps his modesty has prevented him from foreseeing, that it will be a perpetual Fourth-of-July in his vicinity so long as he remains on the American Continent. Not that he is the man to be afraid of the smell of powder, but there will be other more dangerous and deadly ordeals to be passed from which a brave man need not blush to shrink. San Francisco will not have the expected opportunity to give the first greeting to the hero, for the return voyage is to be made by way of the Suez Canal. The American people do not need to be told that Admiral Dewey deserves the best treatment they can give him, but perhaps they do need to be warned against literally killing the Admiral with kindness. We know of no man who is in a greater peril from that source than Dewey will be when he steps upon American soil. He has already begun declining invitations and if he will pursue that course with sufficient vigor he may pull through. The returned military or naval hero is always liable to another danger, too, the danger that he will not know how to receive applause as well as he knew how to earn it. We have had more than one painful example of that calamity. But Admiral Dewey's friends and admirers are easy on this point. There are several distinct kinds of a fool which he will not make of himself, and we all know it; for example, the kissing fool and the speech-making fool. He is too old a man and has too much common sense along with his military genius to forfeit our respect in either of these lines. We are glad Dewey is coming home, for it will give us an opportunity to show the world two things: first, the proper way to welcome a popular hero and exhibit the affection which the people of this country feel for him; and second, the proper way for that popular hero to receive said welcome without making himself less of a hero.

The mass meeting which was held in the Auditorium in Chicago last week to indorse the policy of the administration in the Philppines, and counteract the effect of the anti-expansion mass meeting, was in many respects wonderfully like that former meeting against which it protested. It was a larger assembly; its overflow nearly filled the hall in which the anti-expansionists had met. It was even more enthusiastic, for it is possible to develop a warmer enthusiasm over a positive proposition than over the mere denunciation of something. But the meetings were alike in making their most powerful appeal through excitement, enthusiasm and esprit de corps. A careful reading of the speeches shows that the arguments in support of the administration are all there, but in most cases they were presented in the passionate way which makes its appeals to anything but the reason. The question is not to be settled by an appeal for loyalty to the President, and by grandiloquent talk about the "old flag." It is conceivable that the President may make mistakes, and the "old flag" argument can be used on both sides. We can say of this meeting, as we said of the anti-expansionist meeting, that it is doubtful whether the eloquence of the speakers made one convert. But in this case, rather more than in the other, it is probable that the speeches in print may be effective campaign documents. When read calmly and thoughtfully and judged upon their merits, the arguments presented will be more likely to reach reasonable men of other persuasions than when delivered with a heat and passion which aroused equal heat and passion on the other side. Such statements of the case, for example, as that contained in the brief letter which Dr. Lyman Abbott sent to the meeting cannot fail to be more effective than any amount of denunciation of "copperheads" and "traitors." It is not a question of patriotic sentiment. It is a question of facts and the wise way of dealing with those facts. Sky rockets and redfire, either pyrotechnical or oratorical, do not shed the right sort of light on this kind of a question. Ten minutes of dispassionate consideration is better than a whole evening of enthusiastic flag-waving, and an ounce of sweet reasonableness is rather to be desired than a hundred-weight of passionate denunciation and appeal.

The pacification of Gomez is again presenting a serious problem to the American authorities in Cuba. Never before did an individual or government experience such difficulty in getting rid of $3,000,000 as General Brooke has encountered in his attempt to disburse that amount among the members of the Cuban army. The Cuban Assembly is now out of the way, and the muster rolls, which it conceded for a time, are now in the hands of the officials. Gomez, who was removed from his command by the Assembly because he approved of the $3,000,000 proposition, is again at the head of the army, but he has experienced a change of mind in regard to the bounty and the conditions of its distribution, and is now apparently opposing the plans of Gen. Brooke. It was a bitter blow to Gomez when his proposition for the maintenance of an army of 15,000 Cubans was rejected, for it deprived him of the hope of continued leadership. He protests also against the demand that the Cuban soldiers on receiving their bounty shall deliver their arms to the American military authorities. This requirement is naturally not popular with the rank and file of the army and it seems that Gomez is trying to regain his lost prestige by becoming the representative of this protest and carrying it through to the end—whatever the end may be. From present appearances it will not be surprising if the troops refuse to accept the money if the surrender of arms is insisted upon as a condition and Gomez may become the leader of a violent anti-American party. There is already plenty of wild talk, some of which finds its way into the newspapers, about taking to the woods and beginning another insurrection. The situation is undoubtedly critical, but there is no reason yet to despair of a peaceful settlement.

The state of public opinion in France has once more been gravitating toward a view of the Dreyfus case more favorable to the accused. The Court of Cassation is approaching the end of its work, which is not the trial of the original case, but the decision as to whether there shall be a new trial. By the end of the present month, according to one account by the 21st inst., the court will give its decision, and it is confidently believed that it will be in favor of revision. It is reported, though without confirmation, that soldiers have already been sent to bring Dreyfus from his prison on Devil's Island to appear before the second court-martial which the Court of Cassation will order. The probability of the final acquittal of the prisoner is about equal to the probability that he will get a new trial. In neither case does the consideration of the merits of the case enter very materially into the decision. To one who has observed the progress of this remarkable case it appears that the trial has been from the first a purely political matter and is so still. Dreyfus was apparently condemned, in the first place, to conceal some great political crime. Since that time the course of the government and the courts in regard to the case has been the resultant of several political forces—the anti-Semite, anti-German, pro-military and anti-military motives have interacted and counteracted each other with varying results. The exigencies of the political situation required the condemnation of the victim; a purely military consideration for the "honor of the army" demanded the repeated refusal of a new trial; the fear of political militarism now demands revision and acquittal.

The United Confederate Veterans held their annual reunion at Charleston, S. C., last week. The sentiments expressed at that meeting were in the same spirit which characterized the National Encampment of the G. A. R. last September. The Committee on History in the Confederate gathering no longer makes its annual appeal for a version of the history of the Civil War throwing all the blame upon the North, and the G. A. R. has ceased to insist that the school children shall be taught that the South was solely responsible for the war. The change does not spring from the fact that either side has converted the other. No new light of great importance has been thrown upon the facts of the history, but a new spirit animates both sides. Still, the "rebel yell" is given with vigor by the assembled Confederate Veterans, and still enthusiasm is evoked by the reference to Charleston as the original secession town, but it is an enthusiasm over old times and involves no particular judgment of approval or disapproval of that case which now furnishes only the subject-matter for reminiscence. President McKinley's suggestion, made at the time of his tour through the South, that the time had come when the Federal government should assume the care of the graves of the Confederate soldiers, was welcomed and approved by a resolution.

Princeton, N. J., the seat of the great university, was the scene of a dastardly outrage last Monday. For fifty years there has been an unwritten law that no circus should perform and parade in that city. Hitherto the law has been respected, and circuses have passed Princeton by. But the bold manager of "Pawnee Bill's Wild West" defied law and tradition, and came to Princeton to exhibit. This defiance, of course, was not allowed to go unchallenged. When the parade passed the university the students, armed with stones and cannon-crackers, charged the procession. Several hundred persons were engaged in the riot, which waxed warm. Numbers were hurt, some seriously, before order was restored. The American college student is a mild and peaceable creature, but he becomes dangerous when his sacred rights are trampled in the dust. Hereafter the proprietors of tented spectacles will neglect to tarry at Princeton.

THE PARTISAN SPIRIT.

In our plea for union among Christians it is well to remember that there is an evil with which we have to reckon that lies behind all denominational organizations. It is the spirit of partisanism that is responsible for these denominational divisions which we are seeking to heal. If our present denominational divisions were all out of the way and this spirit survived, it would produce other parties or divisions which would probably be no improvement over those we have. If we are going to strike at the root of the evil, therefore, we must strike at the partisan spirit.

What is the nature of this partisan spirit? It is easier to describe it than to define it. It sees truth through glasses colored by the partisan hue. It makes truth secondary to party. It uses truth as far as it can do so with a view to bolstering up and fortifying the party, but no further. It regards as superfluous, if not dangerous, any view of truth that cannot be worked into partisan uses. Its unfailing characteristic is to magnify differences and seek to make the chasm as broad and impassable as possible between itself and other parties. In order to do this it exaggerates what it regards as the weak points of the other party and deftly conceals its own weak points. In this way it makes up the issue which is always more of less a false issue.

Notice this spirit at work now in the political world in seeking to form the issues of the next Presidential campaign. Mark the tendency of each party to state the position of the other in terms which the other party indignantly repudiates. According to the opponents of the present administration, the government by its war in the Philippines is seeking to subjugate the islands, deny the people the right of self-government, surrender the Declaration of Independence, repudiate the Monroe Doctrine, exchange our republican form of government for "imperialism," hold the Filipinos as conquered vassals, and exploit them for our own advantage. True, this policy has been distinctly repudiated by the President and a number of his Cabinet, and no one has ever affirmed himself in favor of such a policy; but it helps to make up the issue.

On the other hand, the partisans of the administration claim that on their part they are seeking to extend the blessings of civil and religious liberty, rescue the oppressed people of the Philippines from the ravages of Spain, advance the area of Christian civilization and fulfill the obligations which they are under to the civilized world for maintaining order and establishing law and justice in these islands. Their critics they denounce as "seditionists and copperheads," who are seeking to humiliate the government in the eyes of the world and prevent the nation from going forward in a career of beneficent progress. True, the opposition party professes equal loyalty to the constitution and to the flag and explains that its purpose is to hold the government within its original lines, prevent it from becoming entangled with foreign nations and thus enable it to fulfill its mission in in the world. But an issue must be made, or how could we have a Presidential campaign?

No doubt there is a real difference of opinion among the people of the United States concerning the policy of the government toward the Philippines, for instance, but what we mean is that this is grossly exaggerated by both sides in order to make an issue on which to fight the political battles of the future. This is partisanism. The fair-minded man is the one who judges of the policy of the present administration by the authentic utterances of the President and those who represent him, and by the course being pursued by the government. He also judges the position of the opposition by the declarations of its representative men, and not by the extreme statements of fanatics. Looking at the matter in this unbiased way, he is able to understand the motives which influence the scholarly and patriotic men who take issue with that policy, and he sees that, after all, there is no purpose on the one hand to subjugate these islands and deny them the right of self-government, nor on the other, to thwart the government in its purpose to discharge its legitimate obligations to the people of these islands and to civilization.

We mean this simply as an illustration of the party spirit. We see the same thing continually in the religious world. What religious partisan can be trusted to state fairly the position of another religious body? But this is not simply true as between different denominations of Christians; it is equally true as between different schools of thought in the same religious body. The extremely conservative represent the Higher Critics as seeking to overthrow the Bible and disprove its authority, while these same Higher Critics regard themselves as better friends of the Bible than their conservative critics, because they are seeking really to find out all the facts which throw any light upon its writings in order to a better understanding of them. Some of these critics, on the other hand, seem unable to understand the motives which actuate many of their honest critics, and represent them as defiantly closing their eyes against the light and refusing the demonstrated truths of biblical criticism.

If there were more fairness in judging each other, there would be far less friction between these different schools of thought. If conservative critics could only be made to see that there are many things yet to be learned concerning the Bible, and that a vast majority, at least, of Higher Critics are seeking honestly to find out these things in the interest of truth, it would go far toward allaying partisan feeling and would tend to hold critics themselves to a juster estimate of those who differ from them. On the other hand, if those who are in sympathy with many of the conclusions of the Higher Critics would not overestimate, either the value or the certainty of these conclusions, but present them modestly and tentatively, and with due regard to the judgment of others who are unprepared to accept them, the new views would be more palatable to those whom their advocates would have to receive them.

We believe there is no greater foe to progress, both in social and religious reform, than the partisan spirit. It prevents the working together of honest men in municipal reform, regardless of party lines. Honest men are in the majority in every city in the union, but they are divided by their partisan prejudices, and the thieves and plunderers carry the day. It prevents a closer co-operation among the different religious bodies in carrying forward the work of the kingdom of God. There is no reason why the churches should not be federated for co-operative work along such lines as they already agree on, except this partisan feeling. It prevents that free and untrammeled investigation of the Bible and of religious truth which is an essential condition of religious progress. Here, then, is a foe with which we are all more or less familiar, whose subjugation would be a signal triumph for the cause of truth and righteousness.

SILENCE, REVERENCE AND WORSHIP.

The last address delivered at the St. Louis Congress was by Mrs. Harrison, of Lexington, Ky., on the enrichment of public worship among the Disciples. It was a timely plea for a more refined, reverent, spiritual service in our churches. The conviction was expressed by the speaker and re-echoed by the convention that the time had come for serious thought on the need of a richer, deeper, fuller, more satisfying form of divine service among us. We have preached the gospel, made disciples, organized churches, and are engaged in pushing our educational, benevolent and missionary enterprises; and is it not true that the religious growth of our people is at present calling for a form of public service that will adequately express and satisfy the deepest yearnings of the intelligent and pious soul? Our form of worship has not been lacking in simplicity or naked, unadorned severity, but it has been often deficient in reverence, spirituality and deep religious feeling. A ritualistic service was not advocated in the Congress paper; on the contrary, it was deprecated, although the ritualistic churches have attained the highest outward reverence in divine service. If you go into a Greek, Roman Catholic or High Anglican Church on a week-day, when there is no service, you will be asked to take off your hat and to speak in a whisper while inside the church building. If a church is only a room to preach in, a hall, a courthouse or a barn would do as well. If it is a place sacred to the worship of Almighty God, it is like the burning bush that Moses saw; God is there and the ground is holy. The doctrine of the consecration of bricks and mortar, and reverence for external things, is doubtless foolish enough. Is the inculcation of non-reverence for the place where prayer is wont to be made any better in the fruit it bears?

The experience of our best churches is demonstrating the need—already adopted in many cases—of a simple form of service, including such elements as the use of the Lord's Prayer, concert reading of Scripture lessons, silent prayer and Bible reading before the service commences, the grand old hymns set to richer music, and not jingling rhymes set to revivalistic jigs and ditties, and a more impressive and solemn administration of the Lord's Supper. The text of the ancient prophet goes to the heart of the whole question of worship: "THE LORD IS IN HIS HOLY TEMPLE; LET ALL THE EARTH KEEP SILENCE BEFORE HIM." Silence, stillness, the solemn hush of the sanctuary, is the condition of meditation, of reverent and venerating worship.

The preparation for a worshipful approach to God must begin outside the church. Mr. Gladstone always went to church once and sometimes twice a day, and it was a lifelong habit with him, when possible, to walk to church alone. He held that company and conversation distracted the mind and drew it away from the quiet meditation essential to holy worship. He wrote out some rules and suggestions on the subject, which were printed, framed and hung up on the door of the parish church at Hawarden (pronounced Harden) where he worshiped daily, when at home, for more than fifty years. The writer was there at a vesper service one afternoon when Mr. Gladstone was present. He noticed that the Grand Old Man did not posture and attitudinize quite as much as the others, but he joined in all the responses, and he could easily distinguish his deep, sonorous voice in the responsive repetition of the Lord's Prayer and the Apostles' Creed. There were two or three features in that service, conducted by Stephen Gladstone, that were profoundly impressive. There was a small cushion on each chair on which the worshiper knelt in silent prayer when he came in. There were no social greetings or conversation inside the church, either before or after the service. Perfect silence and an awe-inspiring stillness was maintained throughout. After the service the people flowed together and held a little social communion outside the church.

There has been an enormous growth of social life in the church of late years at the expense of its spirituality. The organic principle that holds the churches together is mental and social rather than spiritual. One of the strongest points in sacerdotal religion is the attempt to make the worship exclusively spiritual, leaving all social manifestations, whether of activity or inequality, outside of the church. It is well known that any serious impression made on the minds and hearts of men and women by the service is often dissipated before they get outside, by a jest, a laugh, a foolish remark, or by the noise and confusion incident to the breaking up of a public meeting.

The essay referred to pointed out the sore need of silent prayer in our churches before the service begins. The essayist said in her excellent paper that she and about twenty other women, observing the confusion and lack of silence and reverence at the beginning of the service, determined to offer silent prayer on entering the house of God. They did so for a time, but became so conspicuous by the oddness of their behavior that they were compelled to give it up in the midst of a thousand members who kept on the old way without so much as seeming to understand the new. A great opportunity was lost. A strong sermon should have been preached on the subject, and others asked to join the twenty, the church familiarized with the idea by an organization, if necessary, and the whole congregation thus gradually brought into line.

We were reminded that there was one thing everybody could do in church—keep still. There are some who cannot sing, and some who cannot pray, and some who cannot preach, and some who can give but little, but everybody can keep quiet. The small boy and the fidgety little girl can do that. It is hard for rude, vulgar people, whose rearing has been defective, and for those who have little sense and less natural reverence, but they can, if they will, keep quiet during the hour of service. We cannot compel people to worship or to listen to what is said, but silence ought to be an easy thing to maintain in the house of God. The Lord is in his holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before him. Silence in meditation on the way to church or before you leave your homes, silent prayer and reading your Bibles before the services begin, a reverent stillness, a holy, tranquil quietude during the hour of worship, and thus with cultivation of the worshipful spirit and the meditative mood will God, sure enough, to your soul, be found in his holy temple.

Hour of Prayer.

NAPKIN CHRISTIANS.

(Luke 19:16-26; Matt. 7:26-29.)

(Uniform Midweek Prayer-meeting Topic, May 24th, 1899.)

CENTRAL TRUTH: The wise and diligent use of what we have received from God is the condition of salvation and of advancement in the kingdom of God.

Perhaps there is no more prevalent sin in the church or among men than the neglect to use rightly whatever talents or ability God has committed to us or the opportunities which we enjoy. It is not sufficiently understood even among Christians that what Jesus Christ is calling men to is the supreme effort to make the most and the best of themselves—to develop the ideal life of Christ. The church is smitten almost to barrenness with the curse of low ideals. Few, comparatively, are struggling to attain the serene heights of moral perfection and of unselfish service which Christ occupied. And yet, this is the goal set before us.

The parable of the pounds cited above was intended to arouse and quicken the sense of responisbility to God growing out of what He has committed to us. The parable clearly teaches that to every one has been committed something from the Lord to be used for Him, and that each one will be called upon to give an account for the manner in which he has used his abilities and opportunities. The principle is also laid down that the rewards for service here will be in proportion to the use we have made of what has been committed to us. The man who multiplied his one pound into ten pounds received authority over ten cities. The man who increased his one pound into five was place over five cities, while the man who failed to increase his one pound and had nothing to offer to his Lord more than what was given him was cast out as an unfaithful servant.

When we apply these principles to the church to-day we may well feel alarmed at the probable consequences. Among the heresies or marks of unsoundness which attract the attention of the church, the failure to grow in grace and in the knowledge of Jesus Christ receives, perhaps, the least attention, and excites the least criticism; whereas, in the New Testament, this neglect ranks high among the perils which threaten the soul. Many seem to think it is enough to "keep" their religion. They make no calculation on growing from childhood into Christian manhood or womanhood. They do not take the food nor the exercise which develops moral and spiritual fiber. These are the "napkin Christians."

The familiar passage with which Jesus closes His Sermon on the Mount emphasizes the same lesson under another form. Here the distinction is between the wise and the foolish; between hearing alone and hearing and doing the words of the Master. Jesus tells us here that the man who is always hearing and professing, but who never actually carries out the teaching of Christ in his daily life is like a man who built his house on the sand, which was unable to stand the storms that beat upon it.

But the man who not only hears the sayings of Jesus but makes them the actual rule of his life is likened unto the wise man who built his house upon a rock, and the storms and floods were unable to harm it.

These wise ones who hear and put into practice the sayings of Jesus are also the faithful servants who make the best use of whatever ability God has given them, and whose capacity for usefulness increases with the passing years. Many preachers and other workers often sigh for larger fields. The way to secure larger fields is to give the best possible cultivation to the small fields we occupy. This is the law of promotion in the kingdom of God. Many Christians desire an increase of faith and a deeper religious experience. Let them make a faithful use of what faith they have and it will grow, and their religious experiences will both deepen and widen as they walk in the light of Christ's life.

PRAYER.

O Lord, our gracious Master, we thank Thee that Thou hast committed to us certain powers and capacities to use for Thy glory and the good of our fellowmen. We thank Thee, too, for the opportunities of life which have come to us. We must confess with shame, however, that we have not been faithful in the use of what Thou hast committed to our care. Too many of us, have hid our talent in a napkin and have not used it as Thou hast directed us to do. Forgive our unfaithfulness, we beseech Thee, and help us from this time forth to seek conscientiously to make the most of what Thou hast given us by faithful obedience to Thy Word, that at Thy coming we may not be cast out from Thy presence as unfaithful servants, but receive Thy divine approval. This we ask for Thy name's sake. Amen!

Editor's Easy Chair.

This is the week the International Peace Conference convenes at the Hague in Holland. It is an event of vast significance even if it should fail to accomplish what its friends hope from it. The very fact that the representatives of the great civilized nations of the world feel it to be worth while to come together and consider the problem of how they may lessen the burdens of the people, avoid war or lessen its horrors when it must come, is itself a triumph of the Prince of Peace. The question of arbitration as a means of settling international difficulties will no doubt receive careful attention. Indeed, there is reason to hope for more from arbitration of future misunderstandings than from immediate disarmament. Nothing would tend more to minimize the preparation for war in the different nations than some feasible plan by which differences can be settled by peaceful methods. Let Christians everywhere pray that this conference may be influenced by the highest and worthiest motives, and may result in hastening the time when the nations shall cease to learn war and will devote themselves to the arts of peace.

The recent destruction of a part of the town of Kirksville, Mo., by a tornado was one of those sudden calamities which strike terror in a community, and which calls for wide and practical sympathy. Considering the difference in the populations of the two places, the Kirksville tornado was quite as destructive to life and property as that which visited St. Louis three years ago. St. Louis, together with other cities, has not been backward in extending relief to the homeless and destitute people of Kirksville, made such by the recent disaster, and no doubt there is need yet for further assistance to mitigate the sufferings of the unfortunate victims. All that the generous-hearted people of this country need to call forth assistance in a case like this is to know the extent of the need and what is required. The daily press has rendered great service in furnishing this information, and we have no doubt the response of the people will be generous.

We are now at the beginning of the season of college commencements and the closing of schools and academies of various grades. We are glad to know that there is a growing interest in the welfare of our educational institutions, and it is well that these commencement occasions be utilized for still further developing this interest. We have never fully appreciated nor discharged our debt of obligation to our colleges. Their service to the cause of religious reformation has been incalculable. Let the friends of our colleges make it a point to attend our college commencements, mark the kind of work that is done, inquire into the needs of the schools and ascertain what they can do to help them. If you can do nothing more than contribute a good book to the library, do that. If you can add a few hundred dollars to the endowment fund, do that. We owe this sort of hearty co-operation to the institutions to which we look for the young men and women who are to be our leaders in the work of the church in the years to come.

The arrival of the gunboat, Nashville, at the port of St. Louis on Wednesday of last week was made the occasion of a great patriotic demonstration, such as the city and surrounding country have seldom had occasion to make. Vast multitudes of people gathered on the bank of the river, the Eads Bridge was crowded with an expectant throng, steamboats, barges, everything was covered with a motley mass of humanity to welcome the vessel of our navy which fired the first shot of the late war. The people seemed to be of one mind and one heart in giving a hearty welcome to the representative of our navy which had come 1,000 miles through fresh water, up the winding current of the mighty Mississippi, to visit our great city. The incident will serve to remind the people of the world that St. Louis is located on one of the great rivers of the world—our national artery—which connects it with the Gulf and with the commerce of the world. It has afforded thousands of people an opportunity to look upon a gunboat who had never before seen one and who may, perhaps, never have another chance to inspect one of the vessels of our navy which, during the late war, has won the respect and admiration of all nations.

Questions and Answers.

1. Do the Scriptures teach that the breath is the spirit that will return to God when one dies, according to the view of the Advents? Where do they get their Scripture to prove that the soul is the body and will sleep in the grave?

2. Do you believe the spirit goes to heaven at death? A Sister.

1. No, the Scriptures give us a very much higher and worthier conception of man than that. It is only by a confusion of terms and the wresting of the Scriptures that such a view is made out. The one fact that man is created in the image of God forever overthrows this idea. There is no Scripture to prove that the soul is the body and will sleep in the grave.

2. Yes, I believe with Paul, that for the Christian to be "absent from the body" is to be "present with the Lord." He was in a "strait betwixt two" whether to "depart and be with the Lord" or to remain for the good of his brethren. To be with the Lord ought to satisfy the aspirations of every Christian.

What is your opinion of the mission of the Apocalypse of St. John, and what part is it to play in the world? J. S. Hughes.

The immediate purpose of the Apocalypse was, no doubt, the comfort and edification of the church which, at the time, was in the midst of persecution and suffering. It points out, by the use of symbols which his readers would understand if his persecutors did not, that the end of all of this struggle was to be the defeat of the world-powers and the triumph of the gospel. It has been a source of comfort to the church in all ages in spite of the fanciful interpretations which have been given to it. As it comes to be better understood we believe it will furnish a powerful stimulus to Christian faith and hope, and mightily strengthen the church in fulfilling its great mission in the world. A recent revival of interest in this book, brought about by our querist and others, is timely, for its aid is needed in the work that is now upon the church.

In speaking of preachers it is often said, "Such an one has missed his calling," notwithstanding he may be a sincere and devout man, although few make the good confession under his preaching. Now what is the proof that one has been called of God to preach the Word? And do not many take it up as a business for a livelihood, feeling that they will be financially successful and the occupation a gratifying and pleasant one, but could not honestly say it was a call from God? Has the latter a right to preach? T. H Edwards. Quincy, Ill.

The proof that one has been called of God to preach the Word may be considered threefold: (1) His deep conscientious conviction that it is his duty to devote his life to that work, and that he can accomplish more good in that way; (2) the approval of his brethren as a minister of the Word and their belief that he is adapted to that work; (3) the result of his labors as a minister of the Word. This latter need not mean that he is a successful evangelist, for there must be ministers of various gifts. If there is any part of the work of the ministry in which he is successful, he is justified in regarding that as the divine approval resting upon his work. Where these three lines of proof coincide there is not apt to be a mistake about the call to the ministry. The man who enters into the ministry as a "business," for the pecuniary reward that he can secure thereby, or for the consideration that it is a pleasant and agreeable calling, is not prompted by sufficiently high and worthy motives and will not succeed, even though he possess ample ability and scholarship. No man attains any large success in the work of the gospel who does not feel that God has called him to that work, and that he is thereby entitled to look to God for the power to succeed.

Current Religious Thought

The following is an utterance from Prof. Briggs, delivered the same day as the above, and as contrasted with the statement of President Patton will show the lines of thought pursued by these two men—one a conservative and the other a liberal leader. One who possesses a synthetic mind will have no difficulty in putting the truth of each position together, and this, indeed, must be done if one does not wish a one-sided view of truth:

Christian truth is not something to be kept in our Bibles and our churches and faithfully transmitted in holy institutions. It is doctrine animate with the divine power, pulsating with divine life, imparting grace, confidence, certitude, holy joy and courage to all who possess it. Christian truth is to be translated into Christian life and Christian conduct. The truth is not on the surface, to be appropriated by any idle person or careless passer-by. It is not for the sluggard or the dullard.

He who would grow in knowledge must use all the talents God has given him. He should not be content to use rusty tools or antiquated methods, but should use the most approved methods and all the sharp-edged tools of modern criticism and science. With the growth in Christian knowledge the form of the knowledge and the expression of it necessarily change. We cannot know the whole truth of any doctrine until we know the whole truth of all doctrines.

The new methods of study, the critical and scientific processes of investigation which in our time dominate all the realms of knowledge inevitably require changes in the realm of religion and theology also. There are men in every age who oppose the advance of the truth. They deprecate any advance. They desire everything to go just the same as before. Such a thing is impossible in a living, growing, thinking church, or in any man who is conscious of the Holy Spirit dwelling within him and leading on into truth.

President Patton, of Princeton University, in his closing address to the graduating class of the Union Theological Seminary on the 7th inst., speaking on the subject of "A New Christianity from the Text in Acts," "And the disciples were first called Christians in Antioch," said:

There is a new Christianity, a sort of ethical Christianity, which has become popular of late. A new method of preaching is coming into vogue, containing sentimentality and sociology in almost equal proportions. You hear ministers talk about expansion and the open-door policy, and not so much about justification by faith. Churches are called institutional. I don't know why, unless, perhaps, it is because they have as little to do with Christianity as some other institutions.

The root of Christianity lies in the meaning of Christianity. Our Christianity must be more than ethical, or we have no ethics to preach.

What, then, does Christianity mean? What is it? The answer must be, It is a revelation. It is a distinct and definite piece of information. On that hypothesis two questions confront us.

First, what is authority? Under this, what is the seat and degree of its authority? Second, what is its context? And then under this, what is the area of belief and what the specific thingt we have to believe? Religious discussions used to be based on belief in the Bible. The divinity of Christ was affirmed or denied purely and solely upon the interpretation of the Bible.

Evolution began with biology, and after turning the scientific world upside down its advocates are now trying to force it upon religion also. Preaching has become ethical simply because under the new view there is nothing left but ethics and morality to preach.

You men about to become ministers of the faith will have to reckon no more with men who interpret the Bible differently from you than with men who disbelieve it.

If you apply the philosophy of evolution to the origin of the literature of the Bible you must apply it as well to its credibility. If you say that evolution accounts for everything, and that there are and have been no miracles, then you cannot possibly believe the incarnation, the virgin birth or the resurrection. If you say that man came by a gradual evolution, then you cannot believe in the fall of man.

You cannot get along by minimizing this evolution doctrine and compromizing it with your theology. If you do you will become the laughingstock of thinking men. You will get the credit of more faithfulness and more intellectuality and be standing on firmer ground if you cling to the authority and infallibility of the Scriptures, for this new Christianity spells degeneracy.

That man who stands in a Christian pulpit and denies the authority of the Scriptures and the divinity of Christ—the very essence of Christianity—is either dishonest or a fool. Theology and morality must stand or fall together.

The Missionary Review of the World for January contains an important as well as interesting article from Rev. D. L. Leonard, D. D., Oberlin, O., on "Five Epochal Events of 1898," from which we give the summary paragraph in his own words as follows:

These are the five occurrences whose meaning is world-wide: The war for the liberation of Cuba, the reapprochement of England and America, the Czar's protest against standing armies, the passing of the old regime in China and the placing of the capstone to the edifice of British dominion in Africa. Any one of the five were sufficient to give the year a unique position in the passing decades, but when they all are found within the compass of a single twelvemonth, they stand for more than the happenings of some entire centuries. They show in what a marvelous way our God is marching on among the nations. No hundred years in history has ever recorded such advances for the kingdom of heaven upon earth, or changes on so vast a scale which make mightily for the weal of the entire family of man. The forces which co-operate are increasing both in number and in cogency. And the rate of progress is constantly quickening. Changes which once required generations are wrought within the limits of a decade. The last half of the century far surpasses the first half in supplying tokens that the day of the final triumph of the gospel is drawing nigh.

Moreover, all the signs of the times unite to prove that far greater wonders are to be beheld in the new century about to be ushered in. The whole world has been explored, made accessible, brought near. In God's providence the doors of opportunity have been flung wide open. Far and wide foundations have been laid, experiments have been tried, instrumentalities of all sorts have been fashioned, the divine Spirit is brooding over the lands of darkness, strangely quickened hearts and consciences and sublimest possibilities are abundant on every side. It only remains for the disciples of Jesus to awaken and arise, to look about them, to master the situation and face the facts. To listen to the heavenly call and obey. To lay themselves a living sacrifice upon the altar of consecration. To bestow lavishly of their riches, or their poverty. To supplicate night and day for a pentecostal blessing upon the churches at home, the churches abroad and the woeful millions perishing in their sins. And that the Lord of the harvest will listen and bestow the limitless riches of his grace is proved beyond a peradventure by his evident presence and his marvelous workings upon the nations, notably America, Great Britain, Russia and China, during the year of grace, 1898. Not only should the church missionary society make ready to occupy the Khartum region at the soonest, but a score of organizations should be watching for opportunities to carry the Word of Life to the millions of the Sudan. Not six societies only, but at least three times six, should be studying the situation in the Antilles and Philippines preparatory to beginning evangelizing work. Only so can the demand, Go forward, of the Heavenly Leader be obeyed. Let the soldiers of the cross make haste to follow in the paths which his footseps have already trod.

Reformation of the Nineteenth Century

NINE DECADES OF HISTORY

I.—THE TURBULENT PERIOD.

Civil War and the Christian Churches.

W. T. MOORE.

April the 12th, 1861, was a sad day for the American people. The storm of civil strife had been gathering some time, but there were not many that believed this storm would ultimately burst in all the fury of internecine war. When, however, the first gun was fired upon Ft. Sumter, the die was cast. That gun reverberated the doleful message throughout the world, that a great conflict had begun between the North and the South. The echoes of the cannonade which followed produced the most intense excitement throughout the whole country. The Northern people had hoped, almost against hope, that there would be no overt act of war, while those in the South had deluded themselves with the notion that if the war was once begun, that is, as soon as it became apparent that the South was in earnest, the right of secession would be conceded without a struggle. Both parties wholly miscalculated.

PROCLAMATIONS OF THE PRESIDENTS.

On the Sunday after the bombardment of Ft. Sumter began, the fort was surrendered and the next day after this, viz., April 15th, President Lincoln issued a proclamation, declaring that the laws of the republic had been for some time and were then opposed in the states of South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Florida, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas, "by combinations too powerful to be suppressed by the ordinary course of judicial proceedings or by the powers vested in the marshals by law." The President accordingly called forth the militia of the other states of the Union to the aggregate number of seventy-five thousand men. He appealed to all loyal citizens to assist in the perpetuity of the national Union, at the same time commanding the persons composing the combinations referred to, to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes within twenty days of the date of the proclamation.

The response from the South to this proclamation was that of defiance. Two days after Mr. Lincoln's proclamation, Jefferson Davis replied with a proclamation which authorized the fitting out of privateers to attack the merchant shipping of the United States. Again, two days after this, President Lincoln rejoined by declaring a blockade of the whole Southern Coast from South Carolina to Texas inclusive, and declaring that Confederate privateers would be treated as pirates.

Thus war in earnest was begun. The whole country was stirred from center to circumference. The capture of Ft. Sumter had aroused the North in a most remarkable manner, while the South, though somewhat divided in council (some of the states hesitating to take the decisive step of secession) was, nevertheless, fully committed to the Southern side of the issue which had been formed; consequently, it was no longer doubtful that the long irritating questions between the two sections of country could be settled only by the arbitrament of the sword.

It was at this time that Christians almost held their breath. War is always bad, even at its best; but civil war has some repulsive features which are all its own. Usually it precipitates a conflict in which brothers are ranged upon different sides, and consequently these often meet upon the battlefield in deadly strife with one another. This is precisely what took place during the great conflict between the North and the South.

THREE GREAT QUESTIONS.

There were three great questions which began to assume prominence in thoughtful minds just as soon as hostilities began. These questions were as follows:

(1) What would be the destiny of the republic? The European Governments had always regarded the American Republic as an experiment. With them it was by no means certain that it would stand any heavy strain. Its staying qualities were now to be tested. The outlook at the beginning was not very hopeful, and even some of the stoutest lost heart. But the final issue proved that the people of Europe knew really little of the intelligence, courage and resources generally of the American people.

(2) A second question was: What would become of slavery? At first there was probably no thought by President Lincoln or any of his Cabinet that slavery would be abolished. Indeed, special pains were taken to convince the South that the war was waged only for the preservation of the Union and not for the extinction of slavery. But in this, as in many other things, was illustrated the saying, "Man proposes, but God disposes."

The abolition of slavery was a logical consequence of the success of the Union arms.

(3) A third and perhaps the most important question was: What would become of the bond of union among Christians? Religious progress in the United States had been almost phenomenal. This progress had been made under somewhat new conditions. The constitution of the United States provided for a great experiment in religious development. It guaranteed the utmost freedom to the religious conscience, allowing every man to "worship God under his own vine or figtree, with none to molest or make him afraid." This was the new soil in which the religious seed of the future was to germinate and grow. It had already yielded abundant fruit, but the internecine strife was likely to put this new experiment to a very severe test.

OUR PLEA FOR UNION TESTED.

While all the religious denominations were more or less influenced by the Civil War (most of them ultimately dividing on the question), the Disciples of Christ or Christians were exposed to a very special danger. One of the most fundamental features of their religious movement was their plea for Christian union. This, more than anything else, engaged the attention of their earlier preachers. Indeed, it may be said with emphasis that much of their success, in the earlier days of their movement, was owing to their strong advocacy of Christian union. The old pioneers believed that the world could never be converted to Christ until Christians are one, as Christ and the Father are one; and believing, furthermore, that a return to primitive Christianity in its faith, doctrine and life was all that was necessary in order to secure the union of God's people, the Disciples, both by tongue and pen, made a vigorous onslaught upon the divisions of Christendom, while at the same time, with equal earnestness, they urged the union of all the followers of Christ.

It is easy to see how their plea would be subjected to a very severe test by the civil strife which had been inaugurated. The bulk of their membership was located on both sides, close along Mason and Dixon's line. Most of their members were in the states of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Kansas and Iowa, on the side of the North; and in Kentucky, Missouri, Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia, on the side of the South. Perhaps, at the time referred to, the whole membership was about equally divided between the two sections. Of course, I am not aiming to be exact in this estimate, but it is doubtless not far from the truth.

Another fact needs to be stated just here. The Disciples were without any form of government, such as characterized many of the ecclesiastical organizations of the day. Our teachers had always maintained that love was the only bond of a real fellowship, and consequently they had rejected everything like a government which would bring them into a consolidated organization. They depended wholly upon the unity of the faith and the unity of the Spirit for whatever unity of action there might be among them. As a religious body they were strongly and unalterably opposed to ecclesiasticisms of every kind, no matter by what name they might be called.

This position was not regarded with much favor by their religious neighbors. Indeed, many prophecies had been made that, as soon as an important crisis should arise among the Disciples, they would split up into a number of factions, and thereby illustrate another failure in efforts to restore the lost unity of Christendom.

A test had now come which would try the strength of this position to its utmost. If their own unity should be broken, this would at once block the way against their plea for Christian union. They could with little grace ask others to accept the position which they themselves could not maintain under the stress of divisive influences.

There can be no doubt about the fact that Disciples differed very radically with regard to the issues at stake. It is probably true that most of them deplored the appeal to the arbitrament of the sword. They had learned to love one another fervently, and their very plea for individual freedom, which had always characterized their advocacy, made it more difficult for them to regard those who differed from them on political questions as necessarily enemies. However, it is probably true that most of the Disciples north of Mason and Dixon's line heartily and fully sustained President Lincoln in his efforts to put down the rebellion; while it is no doubt equally true that most of those south of this line conscientiously sympathized with the Confederacy. Nevertheless, it is well known by those who are acquainted with the sentiment which prevailed at the time on both sides that there was a very general feeling of antipathy to that spirit which, in some quarters, sought to make political issues override and destroy the fellowship of those who acknowledged the same Lord, contended for the same faith and had submitted to the same baptism. In short, the differences between these brethren did not amount to a schism, though it cannot be denied that the pressure in this direction was very great, and had it not been for the cooler heads on both sides it is probable that the Disciples would have been practically divided before the war came to a close.

A PERSONAL REMINISCENCE.

As an illustration of the conscientious way in which many at least discharged their duty during the awful crisis in those days, it may be interesting as well as instructive to relate an incident in my own history, an incident which, some of my friends think, strongly suggests the probability that, under God, I was instrumental in saving Kentucky to the Union.

The facts are as follows: I was then pastor of the Christian Church at Frankfort, Ky., the capital of the state. The Hon. Bariah Magoffin was at that time the governor of the state, and the legislature was very evenly divided between those who favored what was termed "armed neutrality" and either simple neutrality or a loyal support of the Federal government. The governor was strongly in favor of "armed neutrality," and this, should it be officially proclaimed, practically meant secession. Personally I felt sure that nothing would keep the state from ultimately joining the Confederacy if the "armed neutrality" resolution should pass the legislature and be proclaimed by the governor. I was a Kentuckian, and I loved my state very ardently. Nearly all my personal associations were with the Southern people, and consequently I could not help sympathizing with them in much for which they contended. Still, I believed the doctrine of secession was wrong, but I am bound to confess that this conviction was forced upon me mainly from religious considerations, for I had never studied the question very carefully from a political point of view. Anyway, I felt that I must be a Christian first, no matter what became of my politics. I was loyal to the Federal Government, but it cannot be doubted, as I think over the matter at this distant day, that my loyalty was chiefly owing to my religious convictions rather than to any political bias which at that time influenced me. I could not be a party to anything that would tend to embroil brethren against one another. Hence, when the matter had to be decided by the Kentucky Legislature, as to what position the state would take, I very strongly opposed "armed neutrality," and mainly because I felt sure that this meant nothing less than secession in the end.

At this juncture it came to my knowledge that a careful canvass had been made with the result that the legislature was about equally divided for and against "armed neutrality," with five or six members classed among the doubtful. Now it happened that all but one, I believe, of these doubtful legislators were members of the Christian Church. I immediately announced that I would preach the next Sunday morning on the "Duty of Christians in the Present Crisis." Some forty or fifty members of the legislature heard the sermon, and among them those who had been reckoned as doubtful with respect to the vote which would be taken the early part of the week. The vote was taken, and "armed neutrality" was defeated; and this defeat was secured, in the opinion of some of those who are acquainted with the facts, by the influence of the sermon which I preached. It was an appeal to the Christian conscience against embarking in an enterprise which meant only evil for that fellowship which had been so strong between the Christians residing in the respective hostile sections. It was known before the sermon that the doubtful voters leaned toward the "armed neutrality" measure, but when the time of final decision came they voted against that measure, and thereby secured its defeat, and at the same time saved Kentucky to the Federal Union. This case furnishes another illustration of how a great issue is sometimes decided by a very small matter.

MARY AND HER TRIBE.

A. M. HAGGARD.

The human body is a wonderful organism. You can lose hands and feet—yes, and all but the trunk of the body—without losing life or seriously impairing a robust vitality. You may then lose in addition the senses of sight and hearing, and still live for years. Even the removal of the stomach by skillful surgery could be added to your other losses without the loss of life or strength. Just how much loss the body can sustain and yet retain life we do not know. The experiment has never been tried, and I do not know of any one who has ever cared to test the matter by experiment.

The Word of God, like the body, is an organism, a vital thing. You can cut away truth after truth from it without rendering it lifeless. You can cut off its hands and its feet, you can pluck out its eyes and take out important parts of its viscera, and yet it will live. In the eighteenth century a body of men insisted upon taking out the heart. The church branded them as unbelievers, and said, "No; stand back!" Now some in the church propose to cut away all but the heart, and see if that will not continue to beat even in a crucible. This is not historic criticism. It is surgery of the most reckless and criminal character. It has not even the redeeming features of vivisection. Why should the sane surgeon cut off so much as one joint of the little finger on the left hand without cause?

This question has been suggested to me by a few lines in the Outlook of April 29th, 1899, page 985, "Notes and Queries:"

"Have we any grounds for supposing that Mary, the mother of Jesus, was a descendant of King David?"

The answer in full is as follows: "No; the only note of her relationship is found in Luke 1:5, 36, where Elizabeth, a descendant of Aaron, is referred to as her kinswoman or cousin."

No one abreast of present-day religious thought and up on the new theology can be at all surprised at this statement. Personally I would not grieve over this lost finger, if an arm were not next in the mind of the surgeon. And what is worse, the surgeon is teaching his method to young men who who may put the knife into the heart of the Word of God.

This editorial writer in the Outlook has a perfect and undisputed right to say or print, "There is, in my judgment, no ground whatever for supposing that Mary was a descendant of King David." He has this right. It was purchased by the blood of martyrs. But when an inquirer comes to him with the above question he has no right to make the answer recorded in the Outlook. How many young people, ignorant of the Scriptures, have read his words, God alone knows. His answer is perfectly formed to hide from them facts and lead them to an unsound if not false conclusion. Has any man a right on the score of piety and profound learning to do such a thing? The querist did not ask for grounds of mathematical certainty, or for grounds of dogmatic certainty, or for grounds of firm faith, but for grounds of supposition. And the answer is, "There are no grounds for such a supposition."

While he may not have intended it, no doubt some of his readers have received the impression that Mary and Elizabeth are of the tribe of Levi and family of Aaron. His answer carries that thought. It seems built to carry just that thought. In Hebrews 7:13, 14 are these words: "For he [Jesus] of whom these things are said belongeth to another tribe, from which no man hath given attendance at the altar. For it is evident that our Lord hath sprung out of Judah." This, with Luke 1:34, 35, makes it almost axiomatic that Mary was a daughter of David, of the tribe of Judah. Her kinswoman (cousin is not in the Revised Version) had probably married into the Aaronic family and tribe of Levi. Such marriages were by no means unknown.

Alfred Edersheim, a modern critical scholar of the highest rank, says: "There can be no question that both Joseph and Mary were of the royal lineage of David" ("Life and Times of Jesus," page 149). If there is no ground for supposing such a thing, how comes it that this great scholar, with scores of others equally eminent, speak so? With such a question before him, and with hosts of men like Edersheim, no editorial writer has a right to answer as this one has. Or, has this editor set himself up as the high priest of dogmatism? Is he an infallible critical pontiff? And must we all take Jesuitical vows of unquestioning acceptance?

Every editor may give his opinion, no matter how destructive, but God forbid that he should hide the facts in the case. As long as the right of private judgment remains let the querists know the facts. If you believe that the New Testamtnt is apocryphal, you may say so. If you think that Paul's letter to the Romans is a fable, you may say what you think. But be honest enough to let your querist know that in Romans 1:3 is a statement that by birth

Jesus was a descendant of David, of the tribe of Judah, and that in Luke this descent is through Mary (Luke 1:34, 35). In Luke 1:5, 36 is a note of Mary's relationship, but with Romans 1:3; Luke 1: 34, 35; Heb. 7:13, 14; 2 Tim. 2:8, and a long list of others, how can a candid scholar say it is "the only note?"

For the benefit of younger readers let me add that usually the modern critics are at least divided into two classes, destructive and evangelical. The first, we are taught, are sometimes enemies of the Bible, and the second are always its friends. The Outlook is supposed to belong to this second class. It will not be amiss in these days to watch closely "the friends" of the Bible. Study the book so thoroughly that you need not depend on friend or foe to tell you what it says or does not say.

THE CHRISTIAN STANDARD AND THE "LIFE AND TEACHING OF JESUS."

SAM DASH.

I write to heartily endorse the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST'S editorial of April 13, entitled, "Dr. Luke Criticized."

I love the Standard and fully appreciate its matchless worth, yet must confess to a twinge of disappointment now and then at its apparent retrogression in the direction of "Biblical Criticism."

I love Bro. McGarvey and acknowledge him to be a tower of strength in general, yet his seemingly severe orthodox hypercriticism on "Biblical Criticism" in particular, often makes me feel sad. This is strong, it is true, but its very strength makes it week. It is as feeble as it is forcible, its usual trend appearing to look toward mere traditionalism at any cost, at the expense of culture and those higher and deeper and broader meanings of things which are not always manifest on the surface, and at the price of the reputation of brethren in Christ, whose Christian faith and character are beyond reproach.

Much that is poetry he would turn into prose, and much that is probably fiction he would construe into indisputable fact, whilst there is really no need for any such change, especially when the price comes so high. My main regret is that this gives consolation to dullards and stagnationists among us and outsiders, under the authority of a good and great name, and is annoying to those who cannot see fully with him, knowing, as they do, that in most other matters Bro. McGarvey has little sympathy with those who hide under his shadow. These questions, only in a very superficial sense, do not affect the faith, the truth as it in Jesus; they belong to the realm of opinion and speculation and there should abide, and should not be made the tests of a man's soundness or bonds of fellowship. But in spite of this one great fault, as I deem it, I admire and love Bro. McGarvey still. "And so say all of us!" will echo and reecho over our broadening brotherhood. As to the Standard's "apparent retrogression" —at one time it gave promise of better better things, and seems to present a marked case of "arrested development." This refers exclusively to its attitude on "Biblical Criticism;" in most other concerns I am not aware of any noticeable retracing of steps, or reversion to the sectarian type. In this, except that its style is superior, it might be taken for a Hard-shell Baptist print. This was not always so, and why the change? Not so long ago the following appeared in its columns as editorials, and I can see mighty little difference between the positions here endorsed and assumed and those which Bro. Willett is charged and reproached with holding. Does Bro. McGarvey support these conclusions? And does the Standard stand by him in the maintenance of his contentions, which look altogether the other way?

ABOUT PROF. BRIGGS.

The sober conclusion concerning Prof. Briggs' inaugural address, we think, will be that while it gives the reason and the church a place as sources of authority that do not properly belong to them, and fails to give the Bible its proper place by putting it in the same category with the reason and the church as sources of authority, it is unjust to arraign its author as an enemy of the Bible. [Italics mine.] The errors of the address should be pointed out by men competent for the task. There are such men, and some of them have spoken wisely and to the point, but their just criticisms are likely to fail, in part, of their proper effect by reason of the many unjust criticisms that have appeared in the papers rom the pens of men who should confine themselves to subjects they understand. [Italics mine.] Prof. Briggs is a believer in the divinity of Christ, and in the Holy Scriptures as containing an authoritative revelation from God to man as to the way of salvation, and only harm to the cause of God can come by seeking to make him appear as an enemy of the Bible. [Italics mine.] Let capable men point out whatever is wrong in his address, in a truly Christian and critical spirit, but let it not be a war as between the friends and the foes of the Bible. Much has already been written in opposition to the address which ought to be regretted.

I cannot give the date when this appeared, but I cut it out at the time, and put it in my scrapbook and have copied it in full, word for word. The same applies to the following:

Prof. Geo. P. Fisher, writing on the evidences of Christianity, takes the broad ground that "the inspiration of the Scriptures, though a fact, is not necessary to our faith in Christ; that the Bible may be regarded as a purely human book, and yet the proof of Christianity remain unimpaired; that all the evidence we need from the Scriptures we may get if we regard them as the production of reliable men." We believe this position can be maintained successfully. Starting with the assumption that the Bible writers were honest, faith in Christ may be reached, and along with it the conclusion that the prophets and the apostles and other writers of the Bible were inspired to give to the world truth that was not to be obtained by human discovery. Indeed, in reaching the doctrine of Christ on the assumption of the honesty of the Bible writers, we of necessity also reach as a consequence the doctrine of inspiration. As to a particular theory of inspiration, that is another matter. The fact that the different Bible writers have each a style of their own has led most theological writers to reject the theory of inspiration that makes the inspired writer a mere amanuensis of the Holy Scriptures, expressing neither his own words nor his own thoughts. It is pretty generally believed now that even in inspired utterances human thoughts and feelings went as far as they could go, and were utilized and embodied in the inspired Word, that the power of the Holy Spirit carried the thoughts of the inspired men to heights and depths never reached by human thought alone. The forgotten things were brought to mind, and things unknown to men were revealed by the Holy Spirit that searcheth the deep things of God. The human element in revelation clearly does not receive proper recognition in the theory that makes the inspired man a mere passive instrument played upon by the divine hand, as a stringed instrument is manipulated by the hand of man. Whilst at times, in special instances, the influence of the spirit of revelation may have been such that it may not inaptly be thus set forth, the great body of the Scriptures was certainly not produced in this way. [Italics mine.] Clearly, in giving us a revelation God did not set aside the powers of the human mind.

For the present I rest my case here and ask to be shown wherein Bro. Willett's positions are at variance with these extracts from the editorial columns of the Christian Standard, and if they are not thus at variance would like to know what has produced the change, the retrogressive change, which has come over the spirit of the Standard's dream?

ORGANIZATION.*

Organization is a gathering together. It is the greatest thing under heaven in the growth of the Church of Jesus Christ. It is as broad as the sea, as high as heaven, as deep as the grave.

Without organization the church is like a ship without a rudder or compass, out upon the wide waters of the great deep. Without it the Christian is a man lost upon the desert sands of Sahara, the treacherous haze of the sun-scorched earth ever and anon bringing before his eyes the alluring scenery of other men and traveling caravans, cities of familiar type, lakes of refreshing, cooling waters, but when turning towards this hopeful relief, the poor wanderer is only led farther and farther from the proper course, farther and farther from the needed help for his soul, and awakening only from his delusion when he realizes he is utterly lost and in a helpless, hopeless condition, waiting only for the moment when his feeble, useless life shall be given up, and his carcass an easy prey to the jackals and the vultures of the desert.

Organization began before man took it into his head to disarrange the plans of the All-wise Architect of the universe. SIN has created all of the disorder that the world has ever known.

Organization is as old as the works of man. Because, within the last two or three hundred years, greater and more efficient organization for wealth has sprung up, we must not suppose that the first man to use a candle failed to be an object of dread to his neighbors, because he lengthened the hours of labor so as to make more money.

Every successful enterprise among men for wealth, for political aggrandizement, for engineering great governments, for accomplishing great benevolences, are the result of perfect organization. Most organizations are effected through natural conditions. It is the man who is sagacious enough to practice adaptation who is the organizer. He is not a self-made man with the inherent power to impose himself and compel obedience to his wishes; he is the creature of opportunity, and using it, he succeeds because he applies the law of adaptation to a central idea.

Yet organization has been opposed by the masses. The general opinion seems to be that organization means monopoly, and that it is the bloodsucker of the people, when it is really the creator of opportunity for the people.

While it is true that there have been unprincipled men, whose organizing methods have only been for selfish ends, yet they have had to die and their methods of organization have blessed the people after all. Look, for example, at the history of the sewing machine. It was bitterly opposed because it would deprive the seamstress of work. The result has been that hundreds have been employed in the place of one. Railroads were opposed because they would deprive the teamsters of work. The result is that thousands have been employed in the place of the few. The Protestant churches deplored Catholicism for its craftiness (which is only a keener word for organization), while each little opposer set up his own independent little shop, and what is the result? Catholicism is a powerful organization, while Protestants are practicing the policy of letting each other alone. Our Lord said, "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." And how true!

O, Lord! we are yet learning lessons from the world. If Protestantism with its intelligence would organize, Catholicism with its ignorance would pale before the light of truth.

But can we analyze organization? I can best introduce a definition by quoting from Goethe's law: "The more perfect an organism the greater the differentiation of the parts, each part from the whole, and each part from each other part."

So, to attain perfection in any organism it is required that each widely different part shall maintain itself in perfect relation to the whole mass, and its complete function shall be properly adjusted to the design of the whole mass.

Thus, organization is defeated when one or more of its elements insists upon independent action.

I think, now, we have a basis for our statement. It should be put in this order:

1. Differentiation.
2. Specialization.
3. Centralization.

Following out these lines I can do it best by illustration. I go into a machine shop where a great warship is under construction. The parts are made separately. The workmen are specially trained for the different departments of labor. There are the valve works, the boiler works, the paint works, the ordinance works, etc. Each department has hundreds of men working under counter departments and separate overseers, with varying wages for men according to their efficiency and kind of work. These departments are separate and distinct from each other, different in so much that each is special in its line. Many a man doing the most efficient work and receiving large pay for his labor, a regular specialist in his line, could not work in any other sphere than that in which he is engaged.

Yet there is a central idea in all of these departments. This controling idea is in the mind of the great architect who designed the ship, made the plans, weighed the fobric in his mind in the correlation of the different parts and their adaptation to each other. This CENTRAL IDEA must be the aim and purpose in all departments. So, centralizing is the most essential function of organization.

I will give you another illustation. I go into a Sunday-school. I draw up to a lady teacher, in a little room with about eighteen or twenty little children about her. I ask her, "What are you doing?" She replies, "I am building a church." I put this and that together and I draw a conclusion. This young lady is fitting these little valves for the great enginery of God—the church. The gospel will be infused into each little orifice, properly fitted for its reception and concentrated in a proper direction, with one central purpose, will save human souls. This is organization.

Perhaps the best illustration of organization is found in the human body. The Apostle Paul gives us the key in his inimical figure of the Church of Christ:

"For, as the body is one, and hath many members, and all the member of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For the body is not one member, but many.

"If the foot shall say, Becaues I am not the hand, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

"And if the ear shall say, Because I am not of the eye, I am not of the body; is it therefore not of the body?

"If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling?

"But now hath God set the members every one of them in the body, as it hath pleased him. And if they were all one member, where were the body? But now are they many members, yet but one body. And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee, nor again the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary."

There is a place for the right hand as a right hand, a place for the right foot that the left foot cannot take. When there is a deficiency in any of these parts of the body, we call the man a cripple. How sadly crippled is the church in lacking some essential part of the REAL body!

Again, as a recent writer has said, "The first result of organization is to obtain the largest measure of force, of strength, of perfection in any mechanism whatever, let it be that of a locomotive or a great corporation, with the least possible consumption of power, the least possible waste, reaching ultimately as nearly as possible the purely automatic. That business is the best organized which, in detail, demands the least attention from its head and leaves the head the largest leisure for the exercise of its CREATIVE FACULTY, or that which the average man of the world says comes nearest "runing itself."

This is just as true of the church, whether it be the local congregation, the county organization, the district board or the central office. There should be a local head to each department, towards which every line of industrial progress shall lead, for the ONE GREAT END OF ALL.

But you will say, "That is just what we need—A HEAD! A HEAD! But where shall we find a head?" Allow me to suggest that to organize FIRST all departments upon a uniform basis, then a "figurehead" is better than no head. This explains why some churches succeed as they do with a very ordinary preacher. He is wise enough to keep his own counsel, just lazy enough to let well enough alone. It is the part of organization to create a head out of the material for organization. Everything must be subordinate to its object.

I wish to illustrate this a little farther. I will refer to two classes of preachers. One man taking into counsel his best men and women organizes every department of the church, the Bible-school, the Auxiliary of the C. W. B. M., the Christian Endeavor, the Junior, the prayer-meeting, the finance, the officiary and any other department needed. Each department is a special line of work, interdependent, but not independent of the other parts, and all work towards one CENTRAL purpose, the salvation of the world.

The preacher himself is absorbed. He does not make himself conspicuous. He can afford to sit with the people and watch his men and women and children under training and on the lookout for more efficient organization and to get more people into it.

On the other hand, here is a man who is in possession of a superabundant self. He leads everything. He can trust nobody but himself. He is the most conspicuous object in the church, in every place, on the streets, in the homes of the people. He comes nearest to the human idea of omnipresence. When there comes a ripple on the waves of activity he gets excited and flops about from place to place. He sets everybody and everything into a state of commotion. He is wonderfully exercised. Everything depends upon HIM. Oh, what a care is the church! He cannot hold things together. The different parts have become parties, indepent of each other, and the only concentration of energy culminates in HIM. To one he is a demon, to another, a God. Division ensues, the church falls and oh, what a fall, my brethren! Gladstone said that "the man who wishes to lead other men must BE VERY MUCH ALONE." He did not mean that he should be unsocial or repellant or not to move among the people, but he must have time for reflection, for making plans, for laying up stores of energy, for being READY for every good work. Then, when he does move among the people he is a factor of strength. He inspires confidence to direct, to advise, to lead. He carries the majority of manhood with him, a very rare quality. He has been alone with his God.

But beware of the man who has absorbed his vitality from the street or from a clan of select admirers who have erected an alter to his memory. He may be very popular, but is it of the right quality? And is it helpful to the people? Because a man is popular it is no evidence that he is doing the most good. Jesus said, "Woe unto you when all men speak well of you." The social gift is often a dangerous gift.

(CONCLUDED NEXT WEEK.)

The American Bible Society has received the twentieth annual report of its work in Mexico, and regards the report as one of the most luminous and interesting that the Society has ever received. The work of its colporteurs is shown to have been extensive and efficient, and to have been done largely by those who have passed from darkness to light.

Our Budget.

—The May offering is in order until it is completed.

—Cheering news concerning the Home offering continues to reach us.

—A quiet preparation for "Children's Day" has been going right on among the Sunday-schools for months past.

—The Sunday-schools all know that the first Sunday in June is "Children's Day," at which time they make their annual offerings for Home Missions.

—The convention of the fifth district of Illinois will be held at Waverly, June 6-8. On the program we note the names of L. W. Morgan, J. H. Gilliland, E. O. Sharpe, J. H. Hardin and other prominent and able brethren.

—Word comes from Benj. L. Smith that the receipts from the May offering, so far, are most encouraging and that the indications are that the desired $100,000 will be raised. This is most glorious news. If you have not already sent in your contribution, attend to it at once.

—A letter from this office addressed to St. Joe, Ind., was returned marked, "No such post office in the state." Turning to the list of post offices we found it was St. Joseph. Isn't Uncle Sam (beg pardon, Uncle Samuel,) getting a little punctillious? The letter to which we replied was dated St. Joe by the writer, and we naturally supposed he knew the name of his town.

—The United States gunboat "Nashville" arrived at St. Louis last Wednesday, and now lies moored in midstream just below the Eads Bridge. The beautiful white ship is being daily visited by thousands of the curious. The "Nashville" looks rather small to those who have seen the "Oregon" and "Iowa," but is still a formidable-looking craft. A representative of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, with other newspaper men, met the "Nashville" at Jefferson Barracks, and accompanied her to her anchorage.

—Joel Brown, field agent of the Christian Orphans' Home, St. Louis, writes that owing to the pressure this year for the Jubilee Offering for Home and Foreign Missions, the Easter offering for the orphans' did not amount to near so much as usual, and that this deficit raises aserious question as to how the indebtedness on the Home and the increased expenditures required to make necessary repairs are to be provided for. We cannot say definitely, but this we do know, that God is on the side of the orphans and on the side of those who care for them. This leads us to believe that in some way the money will be forth coming.

—"I know I have a message—a living message—that ought to be heard by the church of to-day." Bro. J. S. Hughes, of Chicago, will excuse us, we hope, for quoting that sentence from a strictly personal letter. We quute it because we believe it to be the truth. We believe he has a message that our churches ought to hear and that they will be greatly blessed in hearing. We like to hear a man who believes he has a message from God for his generation. He has moral earnestness and enthusiasm. Bro. Hughes has been keeping company very closely for several years with the banished apostle on the Isle of Patmos, and has caught, as he believes, a vision of some of the things which John saw. He ought to be allowed to tell it to the churches. It would give a new conception to many of the significance of the last book in our New Testament, and a new conception of the whole program of Christianity. We hope, for the truth's sake, he may be kept busy delivering his message until the whole church is aroused to the importance of the great conflict now in progress between the kingdom of God and the world-powers.

—The Christian Church at Galena, Kan., C. J. Saunders, pastor, will be formally opened Lord's day, June 4th, 1899. Brother O. L. Cook, of Topeka, will be there. A cordial invitation will be extended to adjacent congregations, and all friends of the cause in Galena, to be present and enjoy the services.

—A few weeks ago word came to us that our venerable brother, O. P. Davis, of Prairie Home, Mo., was very low and might not recover. But now comes a letter from him in his own hand, inclosing the money to renew his subscription to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, saying: "I have read your paper from the commencement, and cannot do without it. Among our many good papers it is decidedly the best." We are delighted to learn of our brother's recovery. May his last days be full of peace.

—The Foreign Society needs a trained and experienced teacher for India. At one point there are in the orphanage 180 boys. Miss Josepha Franklin is now in charge. Two years hence she expects to come home on furlough. Some one should be ready to take her place and work when she leaves. Whoever undertakes that work should have a classical education, if possible, and should be familiar with normal methods, and should have some years' experience as a teacher. In addition to normal methods, whoever goes out should have a good knowledge of the Scriptures and should delight in teaching it to boys.

—The Keystone View Co., of this city, has photographed the ruins of Kirksville, Mo., caused by the recent tornado, and with characteristic generosity proposes to allow half of the proceeds of the sale of these photographs for one month to go to the benefit of the sufferers among our brethren in Kirksville who were the unfortunate victims. They are notifying the preachers of the state by circulars of this offer, and it is to be hoped that quite a sum may be realized in this way to relieve the sore need of these our brethren, who have been robbed of their homes and some of them of their families. A complete description of the tornado will accompany these views. For further particulars address Keystone View Co., Imperial Building, St. Louis.

—The opening of the wheeling season gives especial interest to some figures just prepared by the Treasury Bureau of Statistics. These tables, which present the statistics of bicycle exports during the past few years, show that American wheels are now being ridden in all parts of the world. In the wilds of Mexico and Central America; under the blazing skies of Cuba, Porto Rico and other West Indian Islands; across the pampas of Argentine, Brazil and other South American States; amid the densely populated areas of China, British East Indies and Japan, and in the jungles of Africa the American wheel is making its way. Even in the great manufacturing countries of Europe, where workshops and skilled workmen abound, millions of dollars' worth of American bicycles are sold each year. During the four fiscal years 1896, 1897, 1898 and 1899 the exportations of American bicycles amount in round numbers to twenty million dollars.

—The gunboat "Nashville," which arrived at the port of St. Louis on Wednesday of last week, has attracted the attention of the whole country with its long and successful journey up the Mississippi River to this place. We have deemed it appropriate, therefore, to give our readers a picture of this vessel on our first page, as it will serve to mark a historic event in the history of that vessel and of our city. The Nashville took a conspicuous part in the war with Spain, having fired the first shot. Though not among the larger vessels, it stands as a fit representative of our navy, and as such has furnished an opportunity for many thousands of our citizens in these inland states to give visible and audible manifestations of their appreciation of the distinguished service which it has rendered to the country during the late war. The officers and men of the vessel have been royally welcomed and received by the people of St. Louis, and will doubtless carry away pleasant memories of their visit here. Ardent advocate as we are of peace, we do not doubt that the gunboat has a mission in the world for awhile yet, and no nation on the earth has greater reason to be proud of its navy than has the United States.

—The School of Religious Teaching will be a new departure in the Chautauqua Summer Schools for 1899. It is the result of an attempt to organize all the biblical and religious work at Chautauqua into a systematic series of courses. The first section of "Sacred Literature" will under the charge of Chancellor O. C. S. Wallace, of McMasters University, Toronto, Canada, and Prof. George L. Robinson, of McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago. The section of "Religious Pedagogy" will include courses on religious psychology, general methods, normal school work and a course in lesson preparation. The attempt will put religious teaching upon a more throughly scientific basis.

—Some of the daily papers of the country have sought to create a sensation out of the alleged "heresy scandal" in connection with Prof. O. T. Morgan, of Drake University. All there is in it, we learn from authentic sources, is that a few of the students in Prof. Morgan's classes objected to some of his teaching, and filed their complaint with the board of trustees. The matter was considered at a late meeting of that board, and "Prof. Morgan was elected to his old chair of Hebrew, with work in Greek added, and his salary raised with other professors of the university." This was an entirely satisfactory solution of the matter. Referring to the matter in the Iowa State Register, Chancellor Craig says: "There is the utmost freedom of speech in Drake University; there is the utmost good fellowship between professors and students." Denying the sensational statements of the papers, he says: "There is no trouble in the faculty. There is no trouble in the board. There is no split in the faculty. There is no split in the board. There were no formal charges against Prof. Morgan. Prof. Morgan was not called before the board. He was not asked to make any statement. He was not asked to recant anything. * * * The university was never so prosperous. The prospect was never brighter." All this is very assuring and encouraging to the friends of Drake. In a personal letter from Prof. Morgan he expresses his entire satisfaction with the arrangement that has been made, and says: "As to the statement in the papers that I do not believe in the inspiration of the Bible, it is, of course, false. No reasonable man, it seems to me, can study the Bible and its influence in the world, and then say that it is not inspired, or even that it is inspired only as any other book. My faith in the Bible as the Word of God, and in Christ as the perfect revelation of him and his divine Son, has never wavered, and this conviction has never been stronger than at the present time. If ever I should cease to believe in the central truths of Christianity I would not wait for any action of the board of trustees to remove me from my position. Whatever weakness I may have, no one who knows me has ever accused me of hypocrisy." It will be a sad day for the Disciples of Christ when a man who can write candidly such statements as the above, concerning his position, is crowded out of any of our institutions by heresy hunters. Our glory then will have departed from us. But we do not believe that time will ever come. The whole matter seems to have been wisely managed at Drake, and we sincerely hope that the spirit of Christian liberty and of brotherly love will always triumph over the dogmatic and intolerant spirit.

Spring, spring, beautiful spring,
Full of pneumonia and that sort of thing,
Dotted with freshets and spasmodic rain,
Splattered with mud—yet the foolish refrain
Still gurgles on, as the wild poets sing
Of "spring, spring, beautiful spring."

Spring, spring, beautiful spring,
With your changeable weather you don't do a thing
But give us consumption, bronchitis and chills,
Neuralgia, catarrh, and a few other ills.
But in spite of all this, the fool poets cling
To their rythmical nonsense of "beautiful spring."

Spring, spring, beautiful spring,
What little sunshine and joy you do bring
Give us fair promise that summer is near—
June with her roses and skies bright and clear—
So we try to be calm, while the long-haired chumps sing
Of spring, spring, beautiful spring.

—When an acquaintance begins by saying: "Now what I am going to say is only for your own good," you can be certain that he is going to be particularly disagreeable.

—The average mischief-making, gossiping tattler, when about to do a particularly mean piece of tale-bearing, never fails to cocaine his conscience by the reflection that it is his duty to expose the sinner.

—The May issue of Our Dumb Animals, edited by Geo. T. Angell, is fully down to the standard of idiocy which the journal has long maintained. We note an improvement in one respect, however: the name of the editor appears only thirty-eight times in this issue.

—The brethren at Plattsburg will give a hearty welcome and free entertainment to the delegates attending the Missouri Christian Bible-school Convention. To avoid confusion it is earnestly requested that delegates send, as soon as possible, their names to Dr. C. W. Chastain, Plattsburg, Clinton Co., Mo.

—God save us all from smallness and petty meanness! The sneer of a physician at a more successful practitioner, the backbiting of a lawyer at a more gifted pleader, the jealousy of a writer at an abler scribe, the growling of a preacher at a more prominent brother—how babyish and foolish these things be. No man can more clearly demonstrate his own insignificance than by showing an unwillingness to recognize the merits and talents of others.

—In an article in the North American Review General Wood, military governor of Santiago de Cuba, writing on "The Existing Conditions and Needs in Cuba," says that what is needed in Cuba at present is "a firm but liberal and just government of the people, for the people and by the people, under American military supervision for the time being, this supervision to extend only to such time as the civil government shall have become fully established and running smoothly." Among the things to be avoided is "militarism, military pedantry, unelastic methods and any continuance of the old Spanish system of multitudinous office holders, filling unnecessary offices and rendering practically no return for the salaries paid them." Even during military occupation Gen. Wood believes the military forces should be made as much as possible subordinate to the civil law. He thinks a small mililitary force of one or two regiments will be necessary for some little time in the different provinces simply for their moral effect. The people are very poor and need to be employed in public works, such as the reopening of roads, building of bridges and telegraph lines, rebuilding of little towns and villages that have been destroyed, and this work paid for out of the revenues which belong to the different provinces. With a little coaching, a good deal of patience and some firmness, he thinks the Cubans will soon be able to undertake the work of self-government.

—Sorosis, the famous women's club of New York, has been wrestling with the problem, "What is Art?" and the allied question, "What Constitutes a Lover of Art?" As nearly as we can grasp the decision of Sorosis, it is now determined that anything that looks like anything in the heavens above, the earth beneath or the waters under the earth, is not Art. If you want real Art you want to get a representation of a blue cow with crimson spots on her, eating maroon-colored grass by a yellow brook that runs up stream, or a conglomeration of dabs and blotches that looks just as well up-side-down as it does right-side-up—if you ever discover which is which. The real lover of Art is the gifted soul who can find enjoyment in gazing at a deformed maiden disporting herself over a terra cotta landscape in company with an emerald-hued lambkin. It's just as well to have these things settled, and we rejoice that Sorosis has attended to the settling.

—George Washington's death occurred during the last hour of the last day of the last week of the last month of the last year of the last century.—Keystone.

The foregoing is correct with the exception that it was not "the last hour of the last day, of the last week, of the last month, of the last year, of the last century," but was Dec. 14, 1799, between the hours of 10 and 11 o'clock P. M. It was, therefore, the eleventh hour, of the fourteenth day, of the second week, of the last month, of the last year preceding the last year of the preceding century. The 18th century was not the "last" one, as it turned out. Otherwise, the statement is accurate; that is, George Washington did die in December!

—Nicolas Estevanez, formerly minister of war to Spain, writes in the North American Review on "What Spain can Teach America." He admits that Spain can teach America, mainly, by her blunders and errers which we should avoid, and these are frankly pointed out. There are suggestions in the article by which Americans might well profit. We quote a paragraph:

It is evident that Americans, the conquerors of to-day, will not fall into the errors of religious intolerance and commercial monopoly, which are unsuitable to these times. Nevertheless, they may make equally grave mistakes by treating the Porto Ricans and the Filipinos in an overbearing or unsympathetic manner. In general, the Anglo-Saxon of both hemispheres hold the theory which divides races into superior or inferior, a theory which is as false as it is unjust and dangerous. Even if it had a solid foundation and a scientific demonstration, it would only be humane and wise to elevate those who are not favored by nature or circumstances, instead of abasing and humiliating them. I foresee that the Americans will have difficulties in the Antilles, especially with the negro race, as they already have in the Philippine Islands, because they believe the natives unworthy of freedom. A great people, like the Americans, a people who have cultivated federal principles ever since the foundation of their government, are obliged by self-respect to respect all autonomies. A people who have not self-government are not in the plenitude of their dignity and rights. The republicans of North America should treat all the inhabitants of their new possessions in a democratic spirit, and without humiliating and mortifying any by overbearing conduct. Man does not live by bread alone.

As an example of one of Spain's blunders the ex-minister of war refers to the Island of Mindanao in the Philippine Archipelago: "That rich and beautiful country, discovered by Spanish navigators in the sixteenth century, has never been conquered." The reason for this is that its inhabitants profess the religion of Mohammed, which was carried there by the Arabs. When the Spainards arrived, the people of the island were quite willing to accept the sovereignty of Spain, if they were allowed the right to retain their religious beliefs. This was denied them. "Spain would not accept the submission of the Mindanao Indians unless they were baptized. . . . Since the Spaniards wanted no subjects who would not begin by having water poured on their heads, for the sake of a few drops of water we had a war of three centuries with the people of Mindanao Island. Spain had possession of the coast, but the Indians retained the greater part of their territory, and caused us great losses." Now that this island belongs to the United States he says, "By means of tolerance and commerce the Americans can accomplish in Mindanao in a few months what the Spainards failed to do in a little more than three centuries."

—"A Sister" from North Ontario, Cal., sends us $2.00 for the Ministerial Relief Fund, which we have forwarded to Bro. Howard Cale, Indianapolis, to whom such donations should be sent. As no name accompanies this, we can only acknowledge receipt in this way.

—A sister who is using the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses and finding them profitable, writes a friendly protest against the articles appearing in the papers criticising the character of the books in the Reading Course, which she thinks are unjust. We thoroughly agree with this sister. The article appearing in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and signed "A Critic" was rather a take-off on this criticism, and was not intended to be understood seriously. The point made in the article, however, was well taken. As a matter of fact, the most serious flaw we have observed in any of this excellent series of books is the one pointed out in this semi-humorous criticism, but even that had an antidote for it which prevents it from doing any harm. We heartily commend the books of the Bethany C. E. Reading Courses.

—To live content with small means; to seek elegance rather than luxury, and refinement rather than fashion; to be worthy, not respectable, and wealthy, not rich; to listen to stars and birds, babes and sages with open heart; to study hard; to think quietly, act frankly, talk gently, await occasions, hurry never; in a word, to let the spiritual, unbidden and unconscious grow up through the common—this is my symphony."—*W. —At the National Congress of Disciples, ... held in St. Louis, last week, Rev. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, said it would be a good thing to have "a supervisor over the church to protect the churches against bad preachers, and the preachers against bad churches." Our sister churches often feel the need of bishops.—Arkansas Methodist.

That is true; but then some of "our sister churches," including our Methodist brethren, "often feel the need" of being without a bishop! So there isn't so much difference on that point. There may be a wise and scriptural supervision of the churches, however, without investing any man with a permanent authority which he may abuse.

—Accept my appreciation of the report of first Congress of Disciples which was held in your city recently, through the medium of your paper.

—In the published report of the meetings here and at Pleasant Ridge, quite a mistake occurred. The report should have read "26 additions in 16 days," and not "65 additions in 26 days." The mistake, if mine, was purely unintentional and is deeply regretted.

—A recent number of the Outlook (May 6th) contains the following editorial reference to the recent Georgia lynching:

The Southener who defends or paliates the burning at the stake in Georgia, with all the savagery which accompanied it, to which we briefly alluded last week, ought to understand the sentiment with which it is universally regarded in all civilized communities. Something can be said in justification of lynch law administered by an improvised committee and with some approximation of form of law, in communities in which either the machinery of law has never been organized or for some reason has broken down. Something can be said in excuse for a mob which, under a sudden impulse of rage or fear, acts without forms of law in instantaneously putting to death a criminal whose crime has excited the uncontrollable passion of the people. But the Georgia mob falls into neither category. Plenty of time had elapsed after the crime and before the barbaric revenge for passion to cool and reason to reassert itself. The indescribable horrors of the lynching when it took place were more revolting, not in their cruelty alone, but in their vulgarity, than any which history attributes to the American Indians or the mediæval peoples.

—In the Lutheran Observer, Pres. J. A. Clutz, D. D., recites and enlarges upon the following reasons "why old men are not wanted in the pulpit:"

1. Some churches have had a very unhappy and embarrassing experience with aged pastors, who seem not to have had either the good judgment or the Christian grace to resign even when they have manifestly become too feeble to perform efficiently the duties of a large pastorate.
2. The desire for "change" on the part of both pastors and people. Many pastors are restless and easily dissatisfied or discouraged. They are hardly comfortably settled in one charge before they are beginning to look for another, and writing around to their brethren to recommend them here and there.
3. Too many churches are coming to be run on a kind of high-pressure financial system, sometimes miscalled "conducting the church on business principles."
4. A good many ministers fail to grow, and to keep on growing, after they enter the ministry. They cease to study soon after they leave the seminary, sometimes before they leave. They do little or no solid reading, such as gives strength and freshness to an active mind.
5. The greater conservatism of older men has probably something to do with the preference for younger men.

To correct an erroneous announcement in a recent issue, we will say that the address of C. J. F. Musgrove is now Ashland instead of New Douglas, Ill.

Prof. Wilmer H. Brandenburg, of Cincinnati, spent last week in St. Louis visiting friends. He was formerly pastor at Astoria, Ill., and later at Winston, N. C.

After five months' illness, F. M. Cummings, Marlboro, O., is again at his work. He writes: "I was able to read the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST during most of that time and found it to be an unfailing source of comfort and help."

A. J. Marshall, who has recently been called by our city mission board to be our city evangelist, has arrived and has entered upon his work. He is now assisting the Carondelet Church in getting on its feet. His address in the city is 6915 Michigan Ave.

H. H. Halley, of Kalkaska, Mich., a young preacher who gives earnest, careful and prayerful preparation to all his work, has a lecture on the resurrection which he would deliver to churches needing it. We commend him for this work.

A note from Prof. S. M. Jefferson, of the Berkeley Bible Seminary, Berkeley, Cal., brings us the sad intelligence that his wife is very low with consumption and is not expected to live very long. Bro. Jefferson will have the sympathy of a very wide circle of friends in this trying ordeal.

A. W. Kokendoffer, pastor of the Forest Avenue Church, Kansas City, recently received a unanimous call to the Warrensburg (Mo.) church, and signified his purpose to accept it. His congregrtion in Kansas City, with whom he has labored eight years, protested so vigorously and unanimously, however, that he felt he must stay, and he will therefore remain at Kansas City.

Isaac Selby, of Australia, who has been spending several months in this country, with headquarters at Cincinnati, and who during that time held three debates with so-called "Free Thinkers" besides giving many lectures on kindred topics, occupied the pulpit of the Central Christian Church in this city, last Lord's day morning and evening, delighting the people with his thoughtful discourses. He was formerly a distinguished "Free Thinker" lecturer in Australia, but was there brought into a much greater freedom of thought, and, like Paul, now preaches the faith he once sought to destroy.

Dr. Whitsitt's resignation as president of the Baptist Theological Seminary at Louisville, Ky., was accepted last week at an all-night meeting of the Board of Trustees by a vote of 22 to 20. This is the final outcome of some of the Doctor's historical conclusions touching the English Baptists. We do not believe in the soundness of some of his conclusions on historical questions, but we do regret that there is not room enough in the theological seminary for differences of opinion on such questions. Prof. Briggs is not having an easy time in securing admission into the Episcopalian fold. Several churchmen have stoutly protested against his ordination to the priesthood of that body, but Bishop Potter has decided, nevertheless, that the ordination shall occur as previously arranged for. The objection to the Professor is based on his writings in higher criticism. If the Professor can swallow the doctrine of "Apostolic Succession" without a grimace, our Episcopal friends ought not to choke on his critical views.

New York Letter.

We regret to lose Bro. F. P. Arthur, of Rochester, from our state. He goes to Grand Rapids, Mich. F. P. Arthur is one of the most godly men and able preachers in the state of New York, and his removal will be a loss hard to make good. About the time of his going from Rochester, Bro. A. M. Hootman, of Indiana, takes up the work at Tonawanda, N. Y. While we dislike to give up the one, we rejoice to welcome the other, in our state work. Bro. J. M. Morris, our state evangelist, is for the present supplying the pulpit of the Sterling Place Church, Brooklyn. It is not his purpose to hold a series of meetings there, but to lead the forces in the regular work.

Gov. Frank W. Rollins, of New Hampshire, in a recent address, at union Fast Day service at Concord, said: "A point which I take has been largely overlooked—that Christianity is fundamental—that is to say, without it, representative government at least, and in my judgment government of all kinds, would fall to the ground. I believe it is the foundation upon which all government rests, and I do not doubt that the thinking men of this state and of this country, whatever their religious belief may be, will coincide with this view. This basic fact being granted, is there any subject which can more pertinently occupy our attention than the subject of the religious condition of the state? And if I am right in my statement, that religious belief and observance and church attendance are upon the decline, is it not my duty to call public attention to it?" But the governor thinks this decline is especially preceptible in the rural districts. The fact that the chief executive of a state sees fit to call special attention to the importance of religious matters in such a way is in itself a hopeful sign.

The Methodist brethren of New York and vicinity have been somewhat disturbed of late over many questions. Dr. S. P. Cadman, of the Metropolitan Temple, threw a bombshell into the camp several weeks ago when he read a paper endorsing many of the radical and revolutionary conclusions of the higher criticism. In the following weekly meeting of the Methodist ministers Dr. L. W. Munhall delivered an address in which he said he knew of two Methodist schools where certain professors teach in such a manner as to lead young men into infidelity; and he also said Dr. Cadmans' teaching would lead to the same result. This stirred up a number of the brethren pro and con. Things were lively at that ministers' meeting for the space of half an hour. Some of the brethren sailed into the bishops, some into the colleges, some into higher criticism per se, and some into all things in general. It was noised abroad, so that the next weekly meeting was largely attended; among them sat a Presbyterian, "brother-minister," from New Jersey, whom the fearful ones espied and hissed from the room, because it was said "he scandalized Dr. Cadman's address in his pulpit, in Jersey." What has gone on since behind closed doors we do not know; but likely the echoes of the storm have been heard.

But Dr. James M. King, secretary of the A. P. A., was appointed presiding elder of the New York district, by Bishop I. W. Joyce at the recent annual conference. A furious storm immediately rose over Methodism in the metropolis, many of the rich men who were opposed to Dr. King saying they intended to cut down their contributions to all missionary enterprises. The "leading brethren" were in a flurry. But Providence called home a good brother, secretary of Church Extention, from Philadelphia, and so created a vacancy in a high office, to which the semi-annual conference of the bishops transferred Dr. King. So he will move to Philadelphia, and C. W. Millard, who had just been sent to preside over the Poukeepsie district, has been appointed to Dr. King's place in New York City. This protest by the rich men of New York has resulted in the shifting of perhaps a dozen men within a month after their appointments by the conference, all of which illustrates the influence of wealth, and its ability to dictate the policy of bishops even in the management of the church.

The Briggs controversy continues to attract the attention of the Episcopalians and others in this part of the world. Many and strong protests have been made to Bishop Potter against the proposed ordination of Dr. Briggs to the priesthood; and some have gone so far even as to demand that he be tried as a heretic, and if found guilty, that he be suspended from the deaconate to which he was ordained by Bishop Potter a yesr ago. Up to this point the bishop has kept absolute silence in the matter, at least nothing has been said to the public. It is thought by many that Bishop Potter will advice Dr. Briggs to be not ordained, which advise or any other will be taken, as nothing, practically, will be gained by an ordination to the priesthood. Prof. Briggs intends to continue his connection with Union Seminary, and as a deacon in the Episcopal Church he is allowed to do as much "occasional preaching" as he chooses.

From Armenia.

I know that every Christian will feel greatly interested to know that on Lord's day, the 26th of March, the new-born Church of Christ was organized in the city of Antioch, and met to "break bread," in remembrance of the death of the Master. They were small in number, being only "three" besides myself, but not too small to rejoice in the gracious promise of the presence of the Head of the church. The place of meeting was in the house of Bro. Hannal Kara Eusuf Oghloo. The exercises were conducted partly in Turkish and partly in Arabic. They were very anxious for me to stay with them for a few weeks, but my time could not permit me to do so. Therefore, the following morning, committing them to God, I left and after two days' hard riding I arrived at Aleppo, where Bro. E. Guleserian labors under great disadvantages. The city of Aleppo has a population of two hundred thousand, of whom one hundred and seventy thousand are Mohammedans, twenty thousand Roman Catholics and ten thousand of all nationalities. Like all great cities, the people are accustomed to go to large churches; and it is very difficult to induce them to go into a house to hear the preaching of the gospel. During three days of my stay in the city I found that many people were ready and willing to hear the preaching of the gospel, and if we could have a suitable place for preaching I am sure Bro. G.'s labors would meet a great success. Another two days' journey and I entered safely the city of Arintab, one of the strongholds of American missionary zeal and labors, with magnificent colleges for boys and girls, a hospital where the sick of all nations find within their limited means all that they need or desire. There are three self-supporting Congregationalist Churches with a membership of probably two thousand. The preaching of primitive Christianity nearly three years ago created a great interest among the people, and over twenty persons, men and women, were baptized, and many others were almost persuaded when the good work was abandoned. The work in Marash and Albuston also was successful, but having no laborers in the field they have been appealing to me repeatedly all these years, but not having faithful laborers we could not respond, neither was I able to visit them for obvious reasons. When I came here this time I found about ten of our baptized brethren, gathered together as many as I could and met with them to break bread, which filled their hearts with joy. I regret that I must leave them without a leader, specially as I have seen enough to believe that the Lord has many people in this city. I have been compelled to abandon my intended visit to Marash and Albuston where the lambs of the good Shepherd are left without a shepherd, for the dangers of the road which is almost impossible at this time for any one to pass safely. They had heard of my movements and had written to me at Antioch to show that they eagerly desire, my visit to them, but unfortunately they must wait until the Lord opens my way to them. Next Monday, the 10th inst., I expect to go to Birejik, thence to Urfa and on to Dimhekis, if the Lord permits. I ask the prayers of my brethren and sisters while I am in the field, which I need more than ever before.

Yours in hope,

G. N. Shishmanian.

The Lord's Prayer: An Analysis.

After the death of Miss Inez Fields, in Colorado Springs, a few weeks ago, the following in her handwriting was found in one of her books:

Our Father—By right of creation; by bountiful provision; by gracious adoption.

Who art in heaven—The home of thy glory; the portion of thy children; the temple of thy angels.

Hallowed be thy name—By the thoughts of our hearts; by the words of our lips; by the works of our hands.

Thy kingdon come—Of providence to defend us; of grace to refine us; of glory to crown us.

Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven—Toward us without resistance; universally without exception; eternally without declension.

Give us this day our daily bread—Of necessity for our bodies; of eternal life for our souls.

And forgive us our trespasses—Against the commandments of thy law; against the grace of thy gospel.

As we forgive those who trespass against us—By defaming our characters; by embezzling our property; by abusing our persons.

Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil—Of overwhelming affiiction; of worldly enticements; of Satan's devices; of error's seductions; of sinful affections.

For thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever—Thy kingdom governs all; thy power subdues all; thy glory is above all.

Amen—As it is in thy kingdom, so it is in thy promises; so be it in our prayers; so it shall be to thy praise.

Chicago Letter.

The Christian preachers of Chicago have excellent ministers' meetings every Monday morning in Parlor O at the Palmer House. Most of our Chicago pastors are young men. Their earnestness and energy in the Lord's work remind us, as Pitt did, that it is no disgrace to be a young man. Old men for counsel, young men for action, may be a good rule, but some of our younger preachers are excellent in counsel as well as in action. Including men who have been preaching more than one decade and who are widely known throughout the brotherhood—E. W. Darst, J. H. O. Smith, J. L. Brandt, et al.—we frequently have from twenty to thirty brethren at the Monday morning ministers' meeting. Recently Bro. B. B. Tyler enlivened our meeting with his presence. He was pleased to find the preachers frank and vigorous in their criticism. At the same meeting Mrs. Errett Gates gave a reading which manifested decided talent. Churches and societies desiring an innocent yet attractive entertainment would do well to write Mrs. Gates.

Last Monday morning "City Missions" was thoroughly discussed at the ministers' meeting. Excellent speeches were made by E. W. Darst and George A. Campbell, editor of the Christian Oracle. Bro. Campbell suggested the organization of a National Board for City Evangelization. The city is evidently the crux of our modern civilization. We believe that in the providence of God the American city will ultimately prove a blessing rather than a bane to American civilization. It takes some optimism to make this statement in the face of the fact that Chicagoans drink one hundred million gallons of beer annually and brew nearly one billion gallons.

Two notable mass meetings have recently been held in Chicago. The first was an anti-expansion meeting. The extreme statements of those opposed to the policy of the administration were so violent as to react, and on last Lord's day the Auditorium, Central Music Hall and several large churches were filled to overflowing with the best citizens of Chicago to counteract the influence of the former meeting. Professors who are specialists, and even preachers, are inclined to be much more impatient and use stronger language than the average business man. One unguarded statement by a doctrinaire and one by a Unitarian preacher, both of whom were anti-expansionists, made more friends for expansion than all the speeches of the expansionists combined. To characterize the policy of the administration as one of "robbery and butchery" is hardly sane, to say the least.

General Alger, Secretary of War, visited Chicago last week and inspected the new drainage canal on which Chicago has already spent thirty-two million dollars. The canal is nearly forty miles long. General Alger said the work performed on the drainage canal was "stupendous — almost inconceivable." The channel is a marvel of engineering work, costing nearly one million dollars per mile. The permit the Secretary of War will sign restricts the flow of water to three hundred thousand cubic feet of water per minute.

Nicola Tesla, who in some respects is even a greater genius than Edison, will visit Chicago this week. Tesla is the real discoverer of the principles underlying wireless telegraphy, whereby telegraphing from one moving train to another without the use of wires has been accomplished. Battleships in midocean, many miles apart, can now communicate with each other, and the Marconi system of wireless telegraphy is securing widespread attention. Edison works to perfect new inventions, but Tesla works and constantly risks his life to discover new principles. Tesla prefers investigation to being a millionaire. While Edison perfects the phonograph and telephone, Tesla discovers that the earth is a dynamo and points the way to the application of its infinite stores of statical electricity. Nicola Tesla is now forty-three years of age. He was born in Austro-Hungary, and his father was a Greek clergyman. Some years ago a book cataloguing his inventions contained five hundred pages. He came to America in 1884. His dream is to make the use of electricity available by the toiling millions, as he is a great humanitarian.

The meeting at Austin began last Lord's day. Charles Reign Scoville, one of our best evangelists, will do the preaching in the tabernacle, which has a seating capacity for one thousand persons. Austin is a fine suburb of Chicago, and under Bro. Campbell's leadership we hope to see a fine church established in that place.

***

Dr. H. L. Willett and family, who have been in Germany during the past winter, are homeward bound. Dr. Willett's many friends will be glad to greet him in Chicago.

The First Christian Church made an offering to Home Missions last Lord's day. F. G. Tyrrell begins his regular pastorate in Chicago next Lord's day.

C. A. YOUNG.

Texas Letter.

"Revolution in Atlantis, with an Essay on Christian Union," has been received. The first part is written by I. W. Cameron, of Sioux City, Ia., and the second part by G. L. Brokaw, editor of the Christian Index, and it is published by the Christian Index Publishing Co., Des Moines, Ia. It is in cloth and has 175 pages. Bro. Cameron, in an ingenious and forcible way, presents the story of the gospel as given to a rebellious world. His plan is so unique that the reader will not forget it. Bro. Brokaw deals with the question of union in his characteristic manner. It is well that this old question be kept before us. It used to be discussed by us more than it is now, and the change bodes no good, in my judgment. Let no strong position where our fathers fought victoriously be abandoned by their children.

"The World's Need of Our Plea," by J. H. Garrison, is Vol. I, No. 2, of the Oracle Tract Series, 358 Dearborn Street, Chicago. No man among us is better fitted to write such a tract than Bro. Garrison. His long experience as editor and preacher (more than thirty years), his wide acquaintance, at home and abroad, with the influence of this plea on the world, and his kindly but loyal spirit, especially fit him for the task. It will do great good. This series is monthly and costs fifty cents a year.

B. F. Wilson and his people at Plano are to be congratulated on the laying of the corner stone of their new house. Our people in the state are building many good houses.

B. B. Sanders, our faithful corresponding secretary, is on the sick list. He had to close a promising meeting at Hearne and go to Houston for medical treatment. We expect him back in the field by the time this is in print.

The State Federation of Woman's Clubs has added the feature of village improvement to its platform. This includes the improvement of streets, parks, public grounds and buildings, sanitation, tree planting, bird preservation, etc. They are disgusted with expectoration on sidewalks, streetcars and public places. This is a wise move. As proof of this Dallas has a population of 65,000 and but one little park.

Bro. Lanehart has held a good meeting at Nacona and the church, which has been much discouraged, is taking on new life.

Geo. Van Pelt is at Beaumont, having fine audiences. He hopes to organize a good church before he leaves.

Miss Josephine Paullin, the first pupil to die in Carlton College since it was founded in 1867—32 years ago—passed away April 16. She was a lovely Christian. What other school has such a health record?

Percy T. Carnes, of Italy, can successfully do two things at once. He can care for his church work and win the heart of a lovely woman at the same time He married Miss Annie M. Nichols, of Albuquerque, New Mexico, May 3. Congratulations.

B. J. Forbes, one of our rising young men, it is said, has followed the example of Bro. Carnes. Good. We have not heard the name of his bride.

J. S. Kendrick, who died recently at Danville, Ky., was once the pastor of the Commerce Street Church of this city, now the Central. He is well remembered here, and his picture adorns the walls of our church parlors. The church tenderly sympathizes with tne family.

J. W. Holsapple is doing well at Sherman. He has been hopeful of creating a better feeling between the two congregations, and possibly of securing their practical co-operation, if not their union. But such a result under the circumstances which exist there will require much wisdom, piety and time.

Dallas has another feather in her cap. The next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will meet here in May, 1902. In the fight for this honor at Nashville the other day Dallas had to contend with Houston, Atlanta, Chattanooga, Charleston and St. Louis.

John Logan, state evangelist, has been assisting Geo. B. Ranshaw in a meeting at San Antonio. The meeting was a success. There were fourteen additions and the church and city well aroused. The church will give to state work not less than $75. This is good for a mission point. Bro. Ranshaw's Mexican mission, recently inaugurated, he pronounces a "growing work."

J. C. Mason, of Houston, celebrated "a decade of service" on May 7. This faithful man of God has done a wonderful work in that city. Ten years ago he went there as a missionary and found thirty members. Additions in the ten years, 662; total, 692. Loses, 208, leaving a membership of 484. They have three missions now in the city.

J. B. Haston has the ears of the laboring people of Galveston, and he is giving them some wholesome teaching.

Remember the state convention at Ft. Worth, June 5-8.

RUSSIA.

Russia, the most extensive empire ever established, stretching from a land in the South where the vine and the fig flourish, to the barren, frozen plains of the arctic region; it is peopled by more different races than any other nation.

The original tribes, the true Slavs, are, physically, the nearest to perfection of any people.

Three widely distinct classes exist: the nobles, the burghers or townsfolk, and the peasants.

Though education is free and religion unrestricted, no sympathy exists between the government and the people, so that many persons daring to oppose those in authority, finish their unhappy lives in Siberian exile.

Among such a diversity of races and social conditions the costumes are necessarily very different. The current photograph in the Singer National Costume series shows a traveling salesman clad in the loose, flowing, priestly robe largely worn by men of the middle class in Central European Russia, explaining to a customer the use of a Singer sewing machine.

The woman wears the indoor costume of the women of Novgerod, a long, loose, richly embroidered robe over which is a long, open, sleeveless jacket. Her gold beads and sequins are considered family heirlooms.

Singer sewing machines are distributed throughout the vast Russian Empire, and Singer offices are found in every town of any importance. Thus, the product of American genius is bringing the women of the whole world into one universal kinship and sisterhood.

International Sunday-school Convention.—II.

I think it better to give a few things done and said at the Atlanta Convention than to occupy space with an attempt at narration of events.

It was shown that there are 13,750,000 Protestant Sunday-school children in the United States. There was a strong sentiment in favor of more use of the Bible in Sunday-school work. It was urged by Mr. Hurbut, the successor to Dr. Vincent in the publication of Sunday-school literature, that rather than we should carry quarterlies and lesson leaves into the classes, it would be better to dispense with the whole system of Sunday-school helps. This remark was cheered to the echo by the audience. He said that the only book which should be admitted in the Sunday-school is the Bible. As it is his business to publish this literature, he did not want to injure his trade, but he would prefer to lose his business than contribute to the non-use of the Bible, as he believed the system as used at the present time was doing. Now as Bibles are sold for about the price of the paper, they are cheaper than any other lesson leaves. "Get all the helps you can and use them at home, but take only your Bibles into the class."

Many were in favor of the "graded system of Bible study." It gives two years to the study of the New Testament and one to the Old, arranging the lessons so as that the historical connections shall be kept in view. This would be far better than anything we have had yet, and if it can be introduced will greatly assist in getting a knowledge of the Word of God.

No skeptical sentiment was heard in the convention. These workers who have the burden of souls on their hearts have no time for polycrone analysis. They take it for granted that the Bible contains God's message to the race and all seemed ready to follow its direction. No one spoke of Bibliolatry or manifested any fear that there would be too much devotion to the Old Book. They were satisfied with one Isaiah, but not with conventional church-playing. Through it all there was a downright earnestness and spiritual devotion that was helpful and delightful.

It was a great gathering of earnest men and women, who are doing their best to worship God and save the world. They used many words and phrases which showed that there was need of the study of the language of the Scriptures, but the thoughts and plans were much better than the phraseology would indicate. You would suppose that conversion is the result of the action of the Holy Spirit, who worketh when and where he pleaseth, without any intervening agency. But you find that such a view is only a doctrinal consideration. When they plan for practice, you would be impressed with the idea that the salvation of the world depends entirely on the preaching of the gospel, energized by a godly life. You would think, too, that they expect new revelations all the time, for they made no difference between the gifts of the Spirit to the apostles and the help rendered to all disciples, but they would refuse any revelation which they could not read in the Word of God. Theoretically or catechetically we would differ much, but practically our faith seems much the same.

I was at the six o'clock lesson study conducted by B. F. Jacobs. The subject was John 14:1-14. To me it was almost no study of the lesson at all. He gave a blackboard outline sermon on the work of the Spirit, interspersed with a few questions to the crowd. He was very apt in the use of his method, but if there was an exegetical study of the lesson I was certainly not yet fully awake.

Most of the addresses were good. Everything had been thought out, properly weighed and properly phrased. A few speakers, however, fell down. Some men have the ability to get on a programme and even to get a fine notice of their effort in the paper, but have so exhausted themselves in these respects that they have no power before the audience. I heard an assemblage of platitudes from a Rev. Doctor one evening that was grievous to be borne. The best oratorical ability was displayed in extending invitations for the next convention, which will be in 1902. That will be the tenth International, and the World's Association will meet at the same time and place. Toronto, Can., Indianapolis, Ind., and Denver, Col., were the competing cities. I thought each man won in turn. However, the Denver man carried the day, with one of the most modest, genteel and witty addresses I ever heard. He fairly swept us off our feet, and it was made unanimous for Denver.

The Sunday-school Times gave us a trolley ride over the city of Atlanta. Twelve cars were needed and they were loaded down. The streets were resonant with song and good cheer for several hours that evening and all were taken back to their boarding-places happy and tired. Atlanta is the most beautiful city of the South, and one of the most desirable places to live, on the continent. I was pleasantly disappointed in finding the feeling in that part of the country so loyal to the present administration of our general government. Every mention of expansion met a hearty response. Whatever they have been in the past, the people are now patriotic American citizens.

On the Lord's day the pulpits in the city were filled by the strangers within the gates. The city will be eloquent during the summer months from the fine sermons preached everywhere that day. And I want to give it as my opinion that Atlanta is the best church-going city on the continent. Its people are American-born, drink water and worship God. If any place could win me away from Mt. Cabanne it would be Atlanta. I spoke on Sunday morning for Bro. Williamson, of the First Church, and had a delightful fellowship with the brethren there.

The convention thanked God and the people for all mercies. The weather was perfect all the time, barring the fact that it might have been a little cooler. The railroad men did their very best to make every one perfectly comfortable. Scarcely too much could be said in favor of L. & N. from St. Louis to Nashville. And yet we were annoyed at one or two soldiers returning from Cuba, who had been using a fluid that made them unpleasant companions. More men died in the service during the past year from beer than from bad beef, but no investigation on that account.

Well, thank the Lord we are home again and ready for work. I am much encouraged in the work of the Lord. The days are dark sometimes, but the victory will be ours at last.

Rat Portage Letter.

I closed a five weeks' meeting with the church at Sherwood, O., March 12. There were eight confessions. The project of a new building was started, and more than $1,200 was raised. The building will cost, when completed, $2,500. The church appointed a building committee and gave the committee instructions to push the building. The town and surrounding country is splendid mission soil for the Disciples of Christ.

I arrived in Rat Portage March 22 and found the thermometer 22 below zero, but the zeal of the few Disciples above normal. We expected to begin our series of meetings at once, but learned upon arriving that the building in which they are to be conducted will not be vacant until April 10th. We at once arranged to hold meetings in a suitable hall on Lord's days until the meeting can be started as planned in the old Presbyterian Church. I preached three times yesterday to small audiences. The outlook for the establishing of a strong mission and eventually a church is good.

Rat Portage is a typical mining and lumbering town, situated on the north shore of the Lake of the Woods, and contains a settled population of 6,000 and a floating population of 2,000. Many estimate this will be increased to 10,000 of a settled population before 1900. There are some of the richest gold fields in the world located on the Lake of the Woods; 1,400 miners are now at work in them. These took out more than $450,000 in gold last year, and it is confidently believed that the output for this year will be much greater.

There are six churches: Roman Catholic, English Church, Swedish Church, Presbyterian, Methodist and Baptist, but all of them have only about 900 members. That leaves the Disciples of Christ more than 5,000 people to work on in establishing a church.

As an illustration of what the Disciples should be able to do, let one note what the Baptists have done. Less than two years ago a young man came here, not knowing the number of Baptists in town. He began holding meetings in the same hall where we held our first meetings last Lord's day. The mission grew very successfully. That church now numbers 40, and meets in a new brick building which cost $9,300. We have only a few Disciples here, but one of them can chase a thousand. George Fullerton has more genuine missionary faith, zeal and hope for the ultimate success of our position in the great Northwest than any one I know. He is doing everything in his power to make a success of the mission and meeting here. The church once established here will be a splendid base of supplies for all points in this new country. The Presbyterian General Assembly's Home Mission Committee met in Toronto last week and increased their apportionment for home missions, and appointed 250 students to do mission work in Western Ontario, Manitoba. Now is the time for the Disciples of Christ to push the work in this region. Give us $100,000 for Home Missions in May.

Jubilee City Letter.

"STRIKING THINGS OF FIFTY YEARS."

Bro. E. S. Powell, of Louisville, addressed a mass meeting at the Central Church the evening of May 2nd. The address was masterly and eloquent. Below is a short outline which will furnish food for many hours' thought to the Disciples of Christ:

"The five points of Calvinism are practically no longer matters of debate. The necessity for denying an instantaneous and miraculous conversion without the use of instrumentalities is past. Seldom more is an open defense of denominationalism made while union and unity are on the lips of all.

"We have given undeniable evidence of the possibility of union on the New Testament basis by remaining united during the whole of our formative period and through the civil war which rent other societies in twain. This is because we have asked loyalty to a person and not to a set of propositions. Men must outgrow the intellectual formulations of any past age, but never can outgrow loyalty and love. For this same reason we have never had a trial for heresy and never will have.

"'Love and do as you please,' said Augustine. So we say, 'Love and be loyal to your Lord and think as you please.'

"During these fifty years we have seen scientific scepticism and historical criticism test every tenet of the faith, yet standing on loyalty have experienced no schisms. We have come to the time when the great problem is no longer that of doctrine, but life. We want, under God, to be rescued from a conventional faith.

"We have gained evangelical respect. No longer are we banned from Y. M. C. A.s, etc., and reckoned with the Jews and Catholics. To-day we can sing, 'Blest be the the tie that binds' with our brethren of the denominational churches and frankly and in a friendly way talk over our differences and hasten the day when we shall altogether sing, 'All hail the power of Jesus' name.'

"Notwithstanding our marvelous numerical progress, more potent for good has been the missionary awakening and growth. We have awakened to the 'missionary consciousness,' as A. McLean calls it. This has saved us from provincialism, self-conceit and creed-building. It has given us perspective; we have seen the unsaved world and fallen on our knees to pray God help our weakness in the face of the great task. It has prevented our building four walls of doctrine and perpetuating the old saw of 'you may be right and may be wrong, but we are right and can't be wrong.' In all we are saved from dogmatism and the 'I am holier than thou' attitude, for on our knees with the unsaved world before us we could but be."

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF GOOD CITIZENSHIP LEAGUE.

The third annual convention of the National Good Citizenship League was held in the Auditorium in this city, May 2-4. The attenance was not large at any time, but a dozen states were represented and some fine addresses delivered, notably those of Mrs. Helen Gougar, of Indiana, Dr. Longstreet, of Boston, and Dr. J. Q. A. Henry, of Chicago. Mrs. Gougar was as fiery as usual in her arraignment of wrong and filled her addresses full of wholesome advice to the church and government, in all things, of course, advocating "equal suffrage." Dr. Longstreet proved himself a master in logic, illustration and persuasive presentation of his plea for "No Monopoly of National Rights." His addresses were the surpise of the convention, for they combined to an unusual degree the power of simple presentation with an exposition of the great fundamental laws of living, all touched with unusual eloquence. The crowning inspiration was in J. Q. A. Henry's address on "Christianity and Citizenship." Mr. Henry, even the casual newspaper reader must know, practices what he preaches, as his work in the reform movement testifies. He fairly hurls his burning indictments of municipal corruption, but tempers all with a zealous plea for righteousness which he thinks can only be lasting when motived in a courageous Christian heart.

As a people we were represented on the managing committee by Bro. H. G. Hill and on the program by Bro. S. M. Cooper, who spoke on "Knowledge and Patriotism Fundamental to Good Citizenship," which was highly commended, and by the writer on "The Relation of the Pulpit to Reform."

Maj. Hilton, of California, is president of the League and S. T. Nicholson, of Washington, D. C., is secretary.

Kirksville's Cyclone.

Now that we have had time to get our breath snd form some just estimate of the loss of life and property, the effects of the cyclone seem no less appalling than at the first. Indeed, the number of the dead has been almost daily increasing, and the property loss cannot yet be fully estimated.

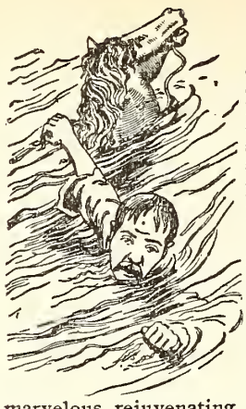
A careful compilation of all the losses turned in by property owners in the cyclone district shows the aggregate to be a little less than $125,000. This includes residences, outbuildings, household goods, clothing and livestock. The entire loss will probably increase this amount ten thousand dollars. This is a very conservative estimate, I am sure, of the money and property loss.

The list of contributions published this week is not complete, as several hundreds of dollars have come in since the list was in type. The entire amount now reaches more than twenty thousand dollars. This is about one-sixth of the amount that ought to be raised. Besides a large amount of money, the people of Kirksville have contributed a great deal of food, shelter, clothing, furniture and other needed articles.

There were 113 residences torn down or injured beyond repair by the cyclone of April 27; twenty persons were killed outright or died shortly after being taken from the ruins, and eight have since died of injuries, making a total death list to date of twenty-eight. All of the dangerously injured are improving, and it is now thought all of them will recover.

The recovery of many will be very slow, because of the painful nature of their wounds. Some may never recover. Some have never regained consciousness, and it is feared that their reason will never be restored.

Fully one-fourth of the homeless families are members of the Christian Church. Many of these have lost everything but the clothing they wore at the time of the awful disaster. They need much help, and need it very much.



The following sums have been handed to me for our suffering members: Dr. Albert Buxton, $1; Winnie Omant, $2; Sister Huffman's Sunday-school class, $1; A Friend, $5; Church at Gower, Mo., per Jno. P. Jesse, $10.50; Benj. L. Smith, Cincinnati, $5; Bro. Ford, $2; Wm. Harington, $1; A. Friend, Deepwater, Mo., 25 cents; Joel Wood, Thurman, Kansas, $10; J. Moody, Malta, O., $1; J. H. Garrison, St. Louis, $5; Cooper family, Ipava, Ill., $2.

The tearful joy with which our suffering members receive these gifts would touch the hardest heart. And yet how little are these amounts among so many homeless and heart-broken people! I can only bestow a dollar or two where there ought to be tens and twenties and fifties.

Bro. Garrison asked me to write this statement so that the brethren abroad may know something of the situation, believing that they will be ready to assist us. Notwithstanding all this loss to our Kirksville Church we raised last Sunday $41.75 for Home Missions.

Carried Down Stream.

When a man crossing some difficult place in his working career; spurring all his energies to accomplish some critical passage in his business journey, suddenly finds his health giving way and feels himself swept out of the saddle by the swift-running current of disease—then is the time when the marvelous rejuvenating properties of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will prove an unfailing means of rescue and restoration.

It is a very simple though eminently scientific medicine. It is not a mere stimulant like so many malt extracts. It restores healthy power by reviving the innermost sources of vitality in the nutritive system. It enables the digestive and blood-making organism to manufacture good blood abundantly and rapidly, so that the immense waste of tissue and nerve fiber entailed by hard labor is offset by a speedy upbuilding of fresh energy and strength.

A prominent and venerable Illinois physician, D. W. Vowles, M. D., of Fowler, Adams Co., writing to Dr. Pierce, says: "I send herewith thirty-one (31) cents in stamps for 'The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser' in cloth binding. With this pittance for so valuable a work (truly a gift to the public), I must express my high appreciation of the vast amount of good that you have rendered the public. A correct measure of your usefulness never has been, and never will be estimated by the public; no, not even by the multitude of afflicted humanity that has been relieved and cured by your medicines. Wherever I go or have been in the United States, I find persons who have used, and are using Dr. Pierce's medicines with satisfaction, for all conditions for which they are recommended. Never has one spoken disparagingly of their action, and from having seen so often their good effects, I am also enthused with confidence in their action in cases and conditions for which they are recommended. It is not common for regular physicians to endorse and recommend proprietary medicines, but in this case I have no equivocation or hesitancy in so doing."

The quick constipation-cure — Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. Never gripe.

Letter From D. H. Bays.

On account of failing health, due to climatic influences, I closed my work at Irwin, Ia., April 23. I never spent a more pleasant pastorate. Everything was harmonious between pastor and people, and it is with profound regret that I take leave of this faithful little band of Christian people. It is a source of gratification to a retiring pastor to be assured of the confidence, love and esteem of his people, and certainly nothing can be more pleasing to a congregation than to be made to realize that the retirihg pastor carries with him naught but a feeling of good will and the deepest solicitude for the welfare of those among whom he has labored.

While laboring for the Master among the good people of Irwin I wanted for nothing. If I needed encouragement and material comforts they were at hand; if I needed a little money at any time it was always ready. And when I came to close my work among them every dollar of my salary was ready, with a comfortable little balance in the treasury. On this score my successor need have no fears; Irwin will do its duty and do it well.

I am glad to report the work in good condition. During my pastorate several have been added; one confession the last day, a man of sterling worth and who will be of great service to the Master's cause.

After a few days' rest I shall be ready to take work with some "good" church, either in Michigan or Indiana—the former preferred—or I will hold a few protracted meetings during the spring and summer. Churches in need of help will please write me.

Iowa Letter.

Why can the blackest scoundrel secure from many of the best people a certificate of angelic purity? Why will good Christian men and women wreck a church of Jesus Christ to worship as a saint one who has proven himself perfectly conscienceless and utterly godless? One reason is found in our education. We have been deceived as children, not educated. Our ideas of bad men and the devil are such that we know neither the one nor the other when we meet them. The devil does not have horns or a spiked tail. In fact, a bad man or a wicked women is so very far from our ideas of them that we would crush the one who is attempting to expose the evil one and shield the one full of vice and rottenness. Let us learn while young that a thoroughly depraved villain may put up a plea of innocence filled with indignation apparently as righteous as a prophet. His tears cannot be told from the tears of injured innocence. He will swear falsely with face towards heaven and uplifted hand. He may treat you better than any two of your true and tried friends—you do not happen to be his victim. He plays his cards to win your whole confidence, for he is a villain and knows that he will need some one to fight for him when his hour comes. The more honest and sincere and unsuspicious and whole-hearted and hot-headed you are, the better helper you will be, and he knows it. Hence he presents himself to you as an angel of light.

On my desk lies a letter written over ten days ago. Here is a sentence: "Los Angeles is one vast flower garden; in fact, this entire valley is one continued garden. I never saw such a place for roses and fruits." No flowers were enclosed in the letter, but upon its arrival it was rich with the fragrance of California blossoms. And it will be days yet before the odor departs. Is not this letter a beautiful illustration of what a Christian life should be? It should profess to come from Christ and this profession should be confirmed by the sweet fragrance of a heavenly life.

The morning after the great storm which desolated Kirksville, Mo., there were hundreds if not thousands who feared to read the list of dead and injured lest they should contain the name of Simpson Ely. Have you written him since that day when so many of his flock died, or received injuries, or lost everything? And after opening your letter will it be necessary to take a bit of paper to the bank or to the money order window of the post office? "Inasmuch," etc.

Dr. Dorchester, in his "Problem of Religious Progress," p. 545, says: "From 1800 to 1880 the population of the United States increased 9.46 fold; the church communicants 27.52 fold." After the census of 1900 A. D. I predict that he will write 15 fold for the population and 47 for the church communicants. Save these figures and see how far I miss the facts.

Since Jan. 1st the church at Oskaloosa has accomplished a very difficult task. They have raised in cash and bankable notes due June 1st, $5,500 and not far from June 5th or 10th will burn the church mortgage. On dedication day in 1893 they needed $7,000 to put them out of of debt and were happy beyond measure to secure $9,000 in pledges. What went with all the money? How is it possible that in June last they came out $5,500 short? Who would believe a story of such shortage? How did they succeed in explaining to the people and getting from them so much in new pledges? I have known churches to go all to pieces in an effort to explain shortage in a building fund, hence I will attempt to answer some of these questions. Over $3,000 went to pay interest. During the hard times it was impossible to make a loan for less than 8 per cent. These same times ruined some and badly crippled other donors of 1893. Moreover, it is bad policy to take three-year pledges in good times. The Oskaloosa house would have been for sale to-day under the sheriff's hammer if the official board had made one mistake so common in Iowa. Many boards never report to the congregation upon the condition of the indebtedness until the burden becomes too ruinous to be borne any longer. In Oskaloosa a report of the building fund was made once every three months. So there was no surprise and consternation when $5,500 was called for. In this heroic work I would enjoy mentioning a long list of names, but space forbids. The Ladies' Aid Society, however, has left a record too eloquent to be passed without this word of reference. I had the honor and pleasure of leading the forces in this good campaign from start to finish. The new pastor, A. E. Cory, came to the city and assumed chief command at a critical moment. Without his help the last half of this large sum would yet be staring us in the face. This work has not only astonished but thrilled the city of Oskaloosa. No church in that city is so blessed in its prospects of usefulness as ours. No young man in Iowa has a field more prophetic of large and splendid harvests than has Bro. Cory. And best of all was the watchword for the future, so often sounded during the praise service. It was this: "No more money for banks and loan companies, but hundreds for missions." One year from now they will not put a missionary in the field as some suggested, but will divide a larger offering equitably between all the boards. This is just right. It is the only correct way.

On Tuesday night, between May 2nd and 3rd, the spirit of a great man of God took its flight from the earthly to the heavenly home. I refer to the death of F. M. Bruner, my teacher in 1876. For several years he has resided within a stone's throw of the college buildings in Des Moines. D. R. Dungan was called from St. Louis to conduct the funeral services. His was a masterly address. Bro. I. N. McCash will furnish this paper a sketch of this noble life. As soon as Bro. Bruner's last book comes from the binder, I shall review it in the Iowa Letter.

Wisconsin News.

Perhaps the most noteworthy event in Wisconsin during the past week was the banquet of the Jefferson Club, at which Mr. Byran was the guest of honor and chief speaker. Noteworthy to politicians because, though many expected this occasion to be a "frost" for him, under the spell of his presence it became an ovation, a whirlwind of enthusiasm for free silver, anti-imperialism, anti-trust, and Bryan for 1900. It was a noteworthy event also because of two things which Bryan did, for which he deserves credit. At a reception tendered him in the afternoon by the Press Club, sandwiches and beer were served. He ate the sandwiches but refused the beer. At the banquet in the evening wine and champagne were served. Mr. Bryan again declined to drink. It seems to me that it took a good deal of moral courage for a politician to do that in Milwaukee. Of the five hundred at the banquet only two others declined to drink—both ministers—Father Cleary, the Catholic temperance advocate, and myself. Three years ago Mr. Bryan attributed his great powers of endurance to the fact that he never tastes alcoholic drinks.

Word from Bro. P. S. Olson, our missionary in Oconto County, informs me of his resignation and removal from that field, a necessity arising from the death of his beloved wife. Bro. Olson has been five years in this work, aided by our state board and at times by our general board. His work has been entirely satisfactory. When he went into the field there were but 32 members. He leaves them with 83 and good property, out of debt. The church, parsonage, barn, hitching sheds, etc., have all been either built or paid for during his term of service. But his best work has been in training his people in the spiritual life. "His best sermon is seven days long," said one of his parishioners to me. He preached his farewell sermon April 2nd. On the evening of the 5th a reception was tendered him at the church. The building was never so full as that evening. Refreshments were served by the ladies of the church, and again Bro. Olson was given assurance that the whole population there are his friends. He will make his home for a while with his father's people in Neenah, Wis., where he can care for his children better, perhaps, than elsewhere. He is not going out of the ministry, though his ministry has been a sacrifice from the beginning. Friends can address him "Box 504, Neenah, Wis." The car containing his household goods was wrecked and nearly everything destroyed in this last trip.

I recently held a protracted meeting in the East Baptist Chapel at Green Bay. J. C. Thurman, general auditor of the Green Bay and Western Railway, lives there. He was formerly a deacon and Sunday-school superintendent at Hannibal, Mo. The present pastor there, Levi Marshall, writes: "We were sorry to lose him. He is a good man." But he is not lost to our cause. He will be a deacon or an elder in Green Bay some day. Dr. Holmes also, formerly of Wabash, Ind., a deacon there, resides in Green Bay. He will be good timber for our official board when we organize. Several other Disciples live there, among them John Tompkins and Prof. Cables, both young men from Missouri. This is also the home of Miss Louise Strechenbach, one of the teachers in Milwaukee public schools. The Baptist congregation had been disorganized for some years and their property deeded to the trustees of the Baptist Church on the West Side. They very kindly granted us the use of the building "for a week or so," but "not for revival services." It was understood that we would organize a church, probably, during our meetings. As the meetings progressed we found the elements very much against us. Stormy days and zero weather nearly all the time. Sickness and other matters also hindered some of our own brethren from attending. But our Baptist brethren who attended were, with probably one exception, converted to "our plea." So that when we announced our intention to organize, two of their leading men approached us, asking us not to do so and saying, "We believe every word that man has preached. It is the truth. We will organize a church here and we want you folks to go in with us." These overtures were so kindly and earnestly made that we decided to postpone our organization and await developments. If they organize on the basis of what I preached, our brethren will go in with them. They talk of tendering me the pastorate. I was asked if $1,200 per year would persuade me to locate. One Baptist brother offered to pay "more than five times as much as he ever gave before," and he is no small giver. That tells the spirit that prevails there. But I gave only one invitation in a stay of over three weeks, had no baptisms and no additions otherwise. Was the meeting a failure? I would have given invitations at every service, but for the restrictions on "revival services." I learn since then that the West Side Baptist pastor and their state missionary will oppose the organization of a church. I began this series of meetings with a sermon and an offering for Foreign Missions, sending $4.75 to Rains and McLean. I preached another such sermon and took up an offering for the Baptist brethren in their own church at the request of their pastor the last day I was there.

I have more to write, but this letter is already too long. Only let me add this: Several churches are delinquent on their apportionment. Some individual pledges made at Pardeeville convention are not paid in full. Our treasury is empty. We owe Bro. Olson and others bills. Please send payment at once to E. M. Pease, treasurer, Richland Center, Wis.

The June number of the Missionary Tidings will be very largely a Cincinnati number. It is desirable that this number should have a wide circulation. To that end, will the auxiliaries send to Indianapolis and order in advance as many copies at five cents apiece as they possibly can? See to it that a copy is placed in every family in the congregation. Sincere thanks are due the Standard Publishing Co. for their very generous loan of cuts which will appear in the paper.

Northwest District, Iowa.

The annual convention of the Churches of Christ of Northwest Iowa occurs at Storm Lake, May 22-25. We are hoping and planning for the largest, best convention in the district's history. This ought to be. The future of the work demands it. This district is a ripe mission field. Strategic points are to be built up and opened. There ought to be the largest general representation from the churches. Vital themes will be discussed by competent speakers. An aggressive campaign is to be mapped out. Will your church send a delegation? Storm Lake invites and entertains.

Let us enthuse! This is our Jubilee! "The Lord of Hosts is with us." Come prepared to lift and learn. Yours hopefully,

School of the Evangelists—Out of Debt.

I am sure that thousands of our friends will rejoice with us when they know that we have just canceled the last dollar of indebtedness on the entire outfit of the School of the Evangelists. Six years ago to-day we laid the corner stone of the main building on the promise of $100 and the promises of God. Now we have buildings and improvements which cost us many thousands of dollars, and on them we do not owe a dollar. We are well equipped to do a great work. Our buildings will accommodate about 150 preachers. We have a steam heating apparatus, electric light, our own mill and practically everything we need. We have a faculty of six experienced and devoted teachers. Our doors are open to the young man who wishes to preach whether he has money or not. When we canceled the last debt we had 30 cents left in the box, but we had also the promises which have sustained us so long. We, on this capital, propose to fill every room in our buildings. We prefer young men from destitute regions, particularly the South and Northwest; but will not turn any young man away who is determined to preach. I shall have room for about 60 new men in the fall. Particulars free on receipt of two cent-stamp. I trust friends will remember that we can only enlarge the work as they enlarge their investments in our work. We depend not on an endowment, but on the daily mail. Our work has proven its right to exist. We had two graduates in class of '96, four in class of '97, ten in class of '98, and have fourteen in class of '99. We have no endowment, and ask for none. "God will provide" "our daily bread." In our judgment the demonstration of the truthfulness of the promises of God to this generation is of vast and farreaching importance. Indeed, it overshadows every other question that demands solution of us. We are tasting the promises day by day, and doing it in a practical manner. We have many trials, but the future has, I earnestly believe, great things in store for us. I solicit your sympathy and help. I remain faithfully yours,

ASHLEY S. JOHNSON.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

Arrangements will be made, if possible, and announced in good time, so that all delegates along the line of the Burlington south and east of Plattsburg may leave home Monday and connect right through, via Cameron Junction and the Rock Island, and arrangements will be made, if possible, so that all delegates coming via Moberly and the Wabash can leave home Monday and connect right through via Lexington Junction. This will enable about all our delegations to be on hand the first evening to hear S. D. Dutcher on "Christian Enterprise." Watch the papers.

The Windsor Bible-school has an enrollment of sixty men, the largest by far in the state, while they have not a few mothers, also, but the men predominate.

I have this year been with E. J. Gantz in al his appointments and have never failed finding his work in excellent shape, especially in the line of new, neat and tidy houses, for he will not have them otherwise. Orrick was no exception, for the house had just undergone thorough revision and the brethren were planning for new pews. The windows and doors are screened, so that the children are not given hysterics by the adventerous bug, and the brethren are not hindered in their worship as was the case with us one night last suummer. Sometime past every business man in the town but one thought nothing of visiting the saloons, now only one does such a thing, and strange as it may seem the only one that never did is a pig (Pigg), and there are more real, good, clean and valuable Piggs in that neighborhood than in some counties. I stopped with one whose kindness was so open and friendly that it was a joy to be classed with such, while the offering from those present on a very unfavorable time was surprising; another good thing in Bro. Gantz's work. We sought to help them reorganize their school, so that it might be made permanent, as is meet in all our work for the church and the Christ.

Mt. Gilead, Clay, has not the strength it had in the past, but more willing workers are not in Missouri; so that, while the roads were so bad that my appointment was not made, S. H. Smith assured me that they would do their best for us. F. V. Loos is their minister this year and the brethren are praying for good results, but the weather has been against all rural work this year. Sam is our county Bible-school superintendent and promises a report, if possible, that will carry off the county banner; fair warning to all others in that respect.

Kearney and H. S. Saxby seemed to fit finely, and the night I was with them, to their surprise, too, the house was packed with people to hear Bro. Saxby, and to them I spoke of our home department and the hearing did me good, for interest continued and many inquiries were made further concerning it. School pledge paid.

Union Star is another faithful, working band for Christ, among whom I gladly noted the Stantons, McDonalds, Boones, Stapps, etc. Bro. Chapman is doing them good preaching, while Ellis Davis has the oversight of the school and my news is very encouraging from their co-operation. H. F. DAVIS.

Hiram Jubilee Endowment Movement.

OUR SPECIAL WORKERS.

1. J. L. Garvin, one of our students, took up our Jubilee Endowment work in January last. He has confined his labors very largely to Northwestern Ohio. He has visited many churches giving stereopticon lectures on our great restoration movement in its relation to higher education and has presented the special Hiram Jubilee Endowment Work. His labors have been crowned with a large measure of success. Many complimentary letters have been received from persons who have heard his lecture and he has gathered a large number of names of persons who wished to enlist in our Jubilee Endowment Army.

2. J. T. Bridwell, one of our students, has given some time to the work and has met with good success.

3. G. S. Stage gave several weeks' work in visiting churches in Southeastern Ohio. His work was also productive of good results.

4. C. R. Scoville, the great evangelist, took up the work about the first of April. He has visited about eight or nine churches and everywhere the brethren are enthusiastic over his presentation of the Hiram work. After delivering the lecture he has followed up the work with a personal canvass for definite sums and the results have been most gratifying. Bro. Scoville drops out temporarily to hold a meeting in Chicago, but we expect him to resume the work about the first of June.

5. J. S. Ross, of Wooster, Ohio, will enter upon the work in a short time. He will visit the churches of Central Ohio presenting our great endowment movement. We look for exlent results from his work.

6. A. Wilcox will devote some time from this on in canvassing churches where the lecture has already been presented, securing definate pledges for the endowment.

7. Our financial secretary, O. G. Hertzog, has been engaged in various lines of work and will continue to visit churchas and individuals in the interest of special Jubilee Endowment.

I generally manage to get before one or two churches every week, presenting the claims of higher education and taking up names of all who will join in our movement. From this time on we will aim to have at least five men in the field continuously. We expect to make a thorough canvass of our home field. We have gotten far enough along to say with assurance that the work will be a success if it can be vigorously prosecuted until the time of our Jubilee Commencement in June 1900. Names continue to come in from broader fields and many words of encouragement are being received.

Dear friend, there never was a better time to do a helpful and inspiring deed than you can do just now by sending us your name, and, if possible, a few encouraging words suitable for publication in our papers. Will you not let us hear from you at once? Give us, not only your direct assistance, but the indirect influence of a splendid example. E. V. ZOLLARS.

A Pseudo War Correspondent.

A man claiming to be "Capt. Richard Keene, war correspondent of the New York Times," lectured here on "Our War with Spain." He bears enough testimonials to deceive "the elect." The very inferior lantern, slides and light used led me to suspect his claims, and the managing editor of the New York Times writes me concerning him, under date of April 19: "No such person as the one you mention was our correspondent. The Times' correspondent at Santiago was Mr. Stanhope Sams, then and still a member of the staff of this paper." I trust no more of our people will employ him. In conversation with me he admitted his real name was A. P. Cohen. He is unknown by either name at the Times' office. J. H. WRIGHT.

Million Voters' League.

Many inquiries are received at the headquarters of the Million Voters' League concerning the progress of the movement, which many are disposed to believe is destined to be the mightiest advance against the saloon in the nineteenth century.

While the number of signed pledges returned is not large, and the recorded signatures aggregate but a few thousand, the encouraging feature of the work is the readiness with which voters of all parties, many even who indulge in the social glass, sign the pledge circulated in different parts of the land. One minister living in a mining camp, in Oregon, writes that notwithstanding the fact that saloons exist in his town and that miners are regarded by many people as a rough class of citizens, he has already almost one-half of the voters of the town enrolled upon the Million Voters' Pledge, and had not seen all of the voters. Another man living in a small town in central Illinois, with a population of about 300, took the Million Voters' Pledge and in two days had forty-two signatures, only two persons refusing to sign. Instances like the above might be multiplied, and demonstrate what a determined man or woman—for some of our most successful solicitors are women—can do when they undertake to vigorously push the work.

At present negotiations are in progress which we hopefully believe will result in the Million Voters' League being presented at the state and national conventions of different bodies of young people's societies that are to convene in various parts of the country this summer. Some organizations have already expressed a desire to have this movement presented at their convention. Before closing I desire to impress upon the friendly reader, who favors the early triumph of prohibition, the imperative necessity of every soldier doing his or her part. If no pledge is in circulation in your church or community, send for one and put it in circulation yourself, or what may be next best, send us the names of temperance workers whom we might interest in the work, and a contribution to assist us in meeting increasing expenses. Echoes from the Jubilee Offering.

Columbus, O. — "Central will give three times as much this year as last for the Home Offering."—R. W. ABBERLY.

Springfield, Mo., South Street Church.—"Raised $86.14 this morning. Apportionment $75. Think we will get $100."—D. W. MOORE.

Erie, Pa.—"Collection yesterday was $18.85 and we hope will be increased."—M. B. RYAN.

Arlington, S. D.—"Our congregation of 40 members with no house of worship will send at least $27 for Home Missions against $19.67 in two collections last year."—A. H. SEYMOUR.

Mayslick, Ky. — "So far $112 for Home Missions. Expect Mayslick to send you for this year of Jubilee $125."—GEO. P. TAUBMAN.

Springfield, Mass. — "Offering for Home Missions $45."—E. C. DAVIS.

Uniontown, Pa.—"The Central Church at Uniontown more than doubled its last year's offering yesterday."—C. H. PLATTENBURG.

Akron, O.—"First Church $150 yesterday."—C. J. TANNAR.

Randolph, O.—"Offering for Home Missions $30 from church, and from Y. P. S. C. E. $6. Whole amount contributed last year for Home Missions $10."—W. G. ORAM.

Harvard, Neb.—"Raised on May 7th, $37-22. Our apportionment this year is more than twice what this church gave last year. Count on us for our apportionment or more."—GEO. C. RITCHEY.

Golden, Col.—"Offering $17.05. May be some more through the week. Apportionment $10."—E. F. BEHR.

Bellaire, O.—"Our offering has gone beyond all expectations. It is over $90 now and will undoubtedly reach $100. This is over three times what we gave last year. Bro. W. F. Cowden's address Friday evening was much appreciated. I hope that you may get many reports like this one."—CHAS. W. WATSON.

Belvidere, Neb. — "Apportionment $15; offering $18.75. May the Jubilee Offering be attained."—EARL BOYD.

Ulysses, Neb.—"Within $4 of apportionment. Think we can make it."—W. A. BALDWIN.

Trenton, Mo.—"Our collection yesterday was $23 and I think will be $25. Trenton gave last year, $6.25."—C. F. STEVENS.

Henrietta, Texas.—"Did not quite reach our apportionment yesterday, but did the best we could. Our church did nothing last year. Many are very conservative, but the light begins to shine. We raised $8.10 for Foreign Missions and $8.40 for Home. Compare that to nothing last year. I am waiting to see if we can't raise the $1.60 before I remit."—FRANK SHAMHART.

Winchester, Ind.—"Our offering yesterday was more than double what it was last year. On account of the rain, which kept some away, we will complete it next Sunday. Praise the Lord.—J. F. FLOYD."

Windsor, Ill.—"We have every reason to believe and hope that we will raise our apportionment. I am canvassing and urging the offering."—H. J. HOSTETLER.

Georgetown, Ky.—"Yesterday was fearfully rainy; but we raised $80, and will get the $100. I think you can count safely on that. Also $13.45 at Dry Run yesterday afternoon."—VICTOR W. DORRIS.

Hagerstown, Md. — "Offering yesterday about $80. Will reach $100 by next Sunday. This is nearly double our offering of last year."—P. A. CAVE.

Mound City, Mo.—"We received $23.25 for Home Missions yesterday and hope to make it about $30. Our collection last year was $19.20."—W. E. BOULTON.

Metropolis, Ill.—"Owing to bad weather collection for Home Missions was postponed, but we will raise apportionment. Hold me responsible for it. I'll report later."—RANDOLPH COOK.

Oswego, Kas.—"Inclosed find draft for $20, an offering for Home Missions. The offering last year was $7."—J. A. LANGSTON.

Bethany, W. Va.—"We raised at West Liberty $8,44, which is the largest collection ever taken for Home Missions, so I understand. We raised $3.34 at Chapel Hill."—T. J. WHITE.

Milton Center, O.—"Inclosed find $10, offering of Milton Center Church for Home Missions. Last year we gave $5, our first offering."—L. C. THOMPSON.

Akron, O., Fourth St. Church.—"Inclosed you will find $4.25. . . . We have only been organized about three months."—F. W. FENTON.

Denver, Col., East Side Church.—"A bad day yesterday; a small audience. We raised more than $8 of our $10 apportionment, however. Will try again next Sunday. Feel sure of reaching apportionment, if not more."—FLOURNOY PAYNE.
